CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 13, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee and call upon Thy name in the performance of our highest duty, in the exercise of our highest powers, and in the enjoyment of our highest privilege. For any plan of life that does not take Thee into account is not worthy of the powers that Thou hast given to us, and any expression of life that does not have Thy blessing can bring no blessing upon those for whom we labor. Grant this day the light of Thy countenance upon our pathway that we may perform Thy righteous will. Bring our lives into conformity to Thy plan that the activity of our lives may bring blessing to those for whom we labor. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there are just about a dozen Senators present. If we are to meet at 11 o'clock, we ought to start with a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Lane	Sheppard
Borah	Cummins	McCumber	Sherman
Brady	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bristow	Goff	Myers	Simmons
Bryan	Hollis	Newlands	Smoot
Burton	James	Norris	Sutherland
Catron	Johnson	O'Gorman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Jones	Overman	Townsend
Chilton	Kenyon	Page	Warren
Clapp	Kern	Saulsbury	White
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Shafroth

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate, and that he is paired with me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. TILLMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent from the city on business.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is necessarily absent from the Chamber this morning.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am advised that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained by official business.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Emma Alexander, in her own right and as administratrix of estates of Jennie Alexander, deceased, and of Charlie Alexander, deceased; Dora Alexander Miller, and Fannie Alexander King, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 499);

The Christian Church of Suffolk, Va., v. United States (S. Doc. No. 500);

Spencer Gordon, administrator of the estate of George Wright, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 501);

The Christian Church of Stanford, Ky., v. United States (S. Doc. No. 502);

The County of Barry, State of Missouri, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 503); and

The Langley Methodist Episcopal Church, of Langley, Va., v. United States (S. Doc. No. 504).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr President, I desire to report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 597) thereon.

The action of the Senate committee substitutes for the House bill the provisions of the Senate bill recently reported regarding a Federal trade commission. We have added several provisions to the Senate bill which will enlarge the sphere of the trade commission's power and usefulness, among them the power, after hearing, to prevent unfair competition by order enforceable in the courts, also to investigate and report upon foreign trade practices which interfere with the fair marketing of American products, and also to investigate and report upon combinations between foreign and American producers for the control of prices. These powers, in addition to those previously provided for in the Senate bill, covering investigation and report from such corporations as the trade commission may designate, publicity, aid to the courts and to the Attorney General in framing and enforcing decrees dissolving corporations, if wisely exercised, will make the trade commission as useful and effective in building up a system of administrative law regarding trade as the Interstate Commerce Commission has been in matters of transportation.

Such a commission has been long needed, and if it had been provided for when the antitrust act was passed the trust question would by this time have been as near to satisfactory solution and equitable adjustment as is the transportation question.

The action of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce was thoroughly nonpartisan, prominent members of the Republican Party having participated actively in the perfection of the bill. I think it is fair to say that a majority of the Republican members of the committee will support the bill.

I see no reason why this bill should excite much discussion or why its passage should be long delayed. A measure of this kind has been discussed for years in the Senate, and the Senate is familiar with the subject. It has been discussed throughout the country. A poll of the boards of trade inaugurated by the National Chamber of Commerce resulted in almost a unanimous vote for a trade commission, and in the House the bill for a trade commission was adopted by an almost unanimous vote. The country desires such a measure. Had such a commission been organized contemporaneously with the passage of the Sherman antitrust law, the conflicting questions relating to trusts, monopoly, and unfair competition would have been as thoroughly settled by this time as have been the questions relating to transportation through the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The need has long been felt for an administrative board which would act in these matters in aid of the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, which would have precedents and traditions and a continuous policy and would be free from the effect of such changing incumbency as has in the nature of things characterized the administration of the Attorney General's office.

I observe that an effort is being made to arouse the country against the so-called inquisitorial methods of this bill. I wish to say that whilst large powers of investigation are given, they are not greatly in excess of those now possessed and for years exercised by the Bureau of Corporations. Whilst reports are required, they are required only from such corporations or classes of corporations as may be designated by the commission. There are 350,000 corporations in this country. Of course, we all realize that there are perhaps not a thousand of such corporations that will be affected by the proposed legislation. The powers, of course, must be large, but the exercise of the powers will not be against honest business, but will be against corporate and business outlaws and will be persuasive and correctional rather than punitive, so far as well intentioned business is concerned.

I do not believe, therefore, that this bill will have any disturbing effect upon the public mind. In a short time it is probable that the Committee on Interstate Commerce will report a bill regarding railroad securities, and we expect that it will give reassurance rather than create doubt. We believe that such action as will be taken by the Interstate Commerce Committee will not limit the just powers of the railroads or affect injuriously their credit, but, on the contrary, will promote their credit by provisions protecting these corporations against the financial mismanagement of their trustees, of which there have been a few instances. I believe that in the end, after such legislation, the credit of the railroads will be improved, and that railroad securities will be regarded as very desirable investments.

We are passing, Mr. President, through a depression which is partly the result of world-wide causes and partly the result of necessary readjustments, following important economic changes. It is affecting the railroads as it is affecting many other classes of business, but it is merely temporary. The legislation which the Interstate Commerce Committee has in hand. I am sure, will not tend to increase in any degree the state of mind which seems to now exist, but, on the contrary, will relieve that state of mind. I believe that this legislation will not only give assurance to business and trade but also to the railroads themselves, and that the result will be to place all of their securities upon a higher plane in the public estimation.

I wish to state that at an early moment I shall ask for the consideration of the bill for a Federal trade commission.

I ask that the Senate substitute, as reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The substitute referred to is as follows:

A commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal trade commission, composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said Federal trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this act, to wit:

"Commerce" means such commerce as Congress has the power to regulate under the Constitution.

The term "corporation" or "corporations" shall include joint-stock associations and all other associations having shares of capital or capital stock, organized to carry on business for profit.

"Antitrust acts" means the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890; also sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenues for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894; and also the act entitled "An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" approved February 12, 1913.

SEC. 2. Upon the organization of the commission, the Bureau of Corporations and the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall cease to exist, and the employees of said bureau shall become employees of the commission in such capacity as it may designate. The commission shall take over all the records, furniture, and equipment of said bureau. All work and proceedings pending before the bureau may be continued by the commission free from the direction or control of the Secretary of Commerce. All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau and its work are hereby authorized to be expended by the commission for said purposes.

Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

The commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The terms of office of the commissioners shall be seven years each. The terms of those first appointed by the President shall date from the taking effect of this act, and shall be as follows:

One shall be appointed for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, one for a term of six years, and one for a term of seven years; and after said commissioners shall have been so first appointed all appointments, except to fill vacancies, shall be for terms of seven years each. The commission shall elect one of its members chairman for such period as it may determine. The commission shall elect a secretary and may elect an assistant secretary. Said secretary and assistant secretary shall hold their offices or connection with the commission at the pleasure of the commission. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum. The secretary of the commission shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. The assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. In case of a vacancy in the office of any commissioner during his term, an appointment shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term. The office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but the commission may, at its pleasure, meet and exercise all its powers at any other place, and may authorize one or more of its members to prosecute any investigation, and for the purposes thereof to exercise the powers herein given the commission.

The commission shall have such attorneys, accountants, experts, examiners, special agents, and other employees as may, from time to time, be appropriated for by Congress, and shall have authority to audit their bills and fix their compensation. With the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners, and such attorneys and experts as may be employed, all employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service. The commission shall also have the power to adopt a seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work.

All the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in any other place than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the commission.

The Auditor for the State and Other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the commission.

Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 3. The commission shall have power among others—

(a) To investigate from time to time, and as often as the commission may deem advisable, the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

(b) To require any corporation subject to the provisions of this act which the commission may designate to furnish to the commission from time to time information, statements, and records concerning its organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, or to individuals, associations, or partnerships, and to require the production for examination of all books, documents, correspondence, contracts, memoranda, or other papers relating to or in any way affecting the commerce in which such corporation under inquiry is engaged or concerning its relations to any individual, association, or partnership, and to make copies of the same.

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act, as the commission may designate, and to fix the time for the filing of such reports, and to require such reports, or any special report, to be made under oath, or otherwise in the discretion of the commission.

(d) To make public, in the discretion of the commission, any information obtained by it in the exercise of the powers, authority, and duties conferred upon it by this act, except so far as may be necessary to protect trade processes, names of customers, and such other matters as the commission may deem not to be of public importance, and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation.

(e) In any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided in the antitrust acts if the court finds for the complainant it may, upon its own motion or the motion of any party to such suit, refer the matter of the form of the decree to be entered to the commission as a master in chancery; whereupon the commission shall proceed in that capacity upon such notice to the parties and upon such hearing as the court may prescribe, and shall as speedily as practicable make report with its findings to the court, which report and findings having been made and filed shall be subject to the judicial procedure established for the consideration and disposition of a master's report and findings in equity cases.

(f) Wherever a restraining order or an interlocutory or final decree has heretofore been entered or shall hereafter be entered against any defendant or defendants in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, the commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, upon the application of the Attorney General, to make investigation of the manner in which the order or decree has been or is being carried out, and as to whether the same has been or is being violated and what, if any, further order, decree, or relief is advisable. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings as a result of any such investigation with such recommendations for further action as it may deem advisable, and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the commission.

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress, that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

For the purpose of prosecuting any investigation or proceeding authorized by this section the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documents or writings of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against.

(h) The commission is hereby directed to investigate, as expeditiously as may be, trade conditions in foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of buyers, dealers, or traders may injuriously affect the export trade of the United States, and also to investigate whether American exporters have combined with each other or with foreign producers or dealers to control prices abroad, and to report to Congress thereon from time to time.

SEC. 4. The powers and jurisdiction herein conferred upon the commission shall extend over all trade associations, corporate combinations, and corporations as hereinbefore defined engaged in or affecting commerce, except banks and common carriers.

SEC. 5. That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order, at least 30 days in advance of the time set therein for hearing, directing it to appear before the commission and show cause why an order shall not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from using such method of competition, and if upon such hearing the commission shall find that the method of competition in question is prohibited by this act it shall thereupon issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same. The commission may at any time modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any order issued by it under this act.

Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, the commission may petition the district court of the United States, within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission; and the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction.

SEC. 6. That if any corporation subject to this act shall fail to file any annual or special report, as provided in subdivision (b) of section 3 thereof, within the time fixed by the commission for filing the same, and such failure shall continue for 30 days after notice of such default, the corporation shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the district where the corporation has its principal office or in any district in which it shall do business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 7. Any person who shall willfully destroy, alter, mutilate, or remove out of the jurisdiction of the United States or authorize, assist in, or be privy to the willful destruction, alteration, mutilation, or removal out of the jurisdiction of the United States of any book, letter, paper, or document containing an entry or memorandum relating to commerce, the production of which the commission may require under this act, or who shall willfully make any false entry relating to commerce in any book of accounts or record of any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation, subject to the provisions of this act, or who shall willfully make or furnish to said commission or to its agent any false statement, return, or record, knowing the same to be false in any material particular, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Any employee of the commission who divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of his employment by the commission, except in so far as it has been made public by the commission, or as he may be directed by the commission or by a court, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. The commission shall have and exercise the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence, and to administer oaths. All the powers, requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by the act to regulate commerce, as amended in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall apply to witnesses, testimony, and evidence before the commission.

SEC. 9. The district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure by any corporation, or by any of its officers or employees, or by any witness, to comply with any order of the commission for the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue such writs, orders, or other process as may be necessary to enforce any order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof.

SEC. 10. The several departments and bureaus of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish the commission, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation, subject to any of the provisions of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to create a Federal trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

A bill (S. 5857) granting an increase of pension to Maria E. Pitts (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SECURITIES BY COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16586) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE (S. DOC. NO. 497).

Mr. CLAPP. On the 5th instant I asked to have printed in the RECORD the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on the subject of woman suffrage, submitted by Hon. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, April 24, 1884. I now ask that the article may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

LAND AT CAPE HENRY, VA.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for procuring title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $31,000, the same to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, to complete the payment of awards in condemnation proceedings prosecuted by the War Department for the acquisition of land at Cape Henry, Va.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to the appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit the conference report on the naval appropriation bill. I ask that it may be printed and that it lie on the table, and I give notice I shall call it up on Monday morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 496).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 14, 15, 16, 42, 43, 44, 50, 54, 66, 70, 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 39, 41, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "only," insert the following: "and officers of the Construction Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment, after the word "officers," insert the following: "not exceeding five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert the following: "June 30, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Under authority of the House granted to change totals not in conference, the committee on conference amended the bill as follows: Page 20 of the bill, line 21, strike out "$170,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md.: Toward extension of powder factory (cost not to exceed $500,000), $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "for fuel-oil storage, at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Line 7 of said amendment, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "men," insert the following: "of the Navy and Marine Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to upkeep and to industrial work at navy yards and stations. The total sum so charged shall be distributed in accordance with the work done in the various yards and stations in order that the cost of work may be determined."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"A committee is hereby appointed, to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, and one naval officer to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy, at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant. Said report shall contain the estimated cost of a plant and site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons, and also a plant having an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee, payable upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 33, 34, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, and 71 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

TRANSPORTATION OF PARCEL-POST PACKAGES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution coming over from a preceding day.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 363, submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia on May 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice for one week, until Saturday, June 20. The morning business is closed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, before resuming the reading of the bill, I desire to return to page 60 and to ask the Senate to reconsider the action by which an amendment of the committee, in line 8, was disagreed to. I consented that that amendment should be disagreed to, but on investigation I find I was in error about it. It is simply a question between using the plural and the singular of the word "building."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], the President pro tempore of the Senate, to a ruling made by him yesterday while he was occupying the chair.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. To what page of the RECORD does the Senator refer?

Mr. KENYON. I refer to page 10302. The Senator will remember the situation. I called for the yeas and nays. The Chair held—the distinguished Senator from Arkansas then being in the chair—that the showing was not sufficient. I then asked for a quorum and the roll was called. After securing a quorum I asked again for the yeas and nays, but the Chair held that that was out of order. At that time the Chair asked me if I had any precedent for the position taken by me. I find that on the 21st day of May an exactly similar question arose. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] called for the yeas and nays; they were not ordered; he asked for a division, and there were—ayes 16, noes 8. He then called for a quorum, and after securing a quorum he again called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered. So I think the ruling of the Chair yesterday should not go as the precedent of the Senate. There were none of the parliamentary doctors, I think, here at the time this question was raised; I myself know very little about parliamentary law, and so the question was not discussed, but there are precedents for the position I then took.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, treating the remarks of the Senator from Iowa as a challenge of the accuracy of the ruling that I had the privilege to make while in the chair yesterday, I may say a word in explanation of it.

There was at the time nearly a quorum of the Senate present, if not an actual quorum. The roll call which immediately followed disclosed the presence of a number of Members in excess of a quorum. There were only four Senators who joined the Senator from Iowa in the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator say that there was nearly a quorum of the Senate present?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It looked so to the Chair on yesterday.

Mr. KENYON. My judgment is that there were not 15 Members of the Senate present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There would be a difference of opinion about that, if it were now material.

Mr. KENYON. My opinion as to that is not as good as that of the Chair, of course.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not seeking to obtain any precedence for my opinion when compared with that of any other Senator; but it seemed at the time that there was so little support for the demand for the yeas and nays which the Senator from Iowa made it was not worth while to submit the demand a second time, unless the Chair felt compelled to do so by the obligatory terms of some existing rule or precedent having the force of a rule. I was quite willing, as presiding officer, to do whatever the rules of the Senate required should be done, because I had no wish in the matter that was not in accordance with the desire of the Senate; and when the Senator a second time called for the yeas and nays it occurred to the Chair that it was a proper case in which to strictly adhere to whatever rule existed; and if there was no rule directing that course to be pursued, it was proper, in the exercise of such discretion as the Chair had, to deny the second request.

Besides, the Senator called for the yeas and nays again after the vote had been taken by the voice. That, of course, could not be done if the first denial was valid, for the reason that that was the very question upon which it was desired to take a recorded vote of the Senate, and it could not alter the rule because there was doubt about the result on the vote in the mind of the Senator from Iowa, or have the effect that he should have his privilege in respect to that matter enlarged. I do not regard the instance pointed out by the Senator as a precedent for the second request made by him, for the reason that the question was not raised; it passed nemine contradicente, and we all know that many things are done when not challenged that would be deemed improper when challenged.

This will be about the only explanation I have to make at this time.

Mr. KENYON. I realize that the Senator from Arkansas knows a great deal more about it than I do, but if at the time of the first call for the yeas and nays there was no quorum present, as the RECORD a moment after disclosed, how could that call be binding or operative?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas does not agree with the Senator from Iowa about the presence of a quorum. The word "presence" is rather an elastic one. It has come under construction many times in the courts. For instance, when a judge temporarily steps aside and puts somebody in charge of the court, if he is within call, near enough to be consulted in any emergency that may arise, the courts have universally held that he is present. I think it many times happens that Senators are sitting on the benches outside of their seats and sometimes in the cloak room, who, for all practical purposes, are present; and it would not do to require that the validity of all our proceedings here should depend upon a majority of Senators being actually in their seats at the time any given action takes place.

Mr. KENYON. I simply called attention to this matter in order that those of us who are not familiar with parliamentary law may understand that the wise thing to do is to call for a quorum before we call for the yeas and nays.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 12, page 73, as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

Territory of Alaska: Governor, $7,000; 4 judges, at $7,500 each; 4 attorneys, at $5,000 each; 4 marshals, at $4,000 each; 4 clerks, at $3,500 each; in all, $87,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to certain salaries in the House bill about which I should like to be informed. In lines 9 and 10, on page 73, provision is made for four judges in the Territory of Alaska at a salary of $7,500 each. On the following page, page 74, lines 7, 8, and 9, the salaries are fixed for the chief justice and associate justices of the Territory of Hawaii. The chief justice receives a salary of $6,000, two associate justices $5,500, and judges of the circuit courts only $4,000.

Save the city of New York and possibly one or two other districts of the United States, though I am not sure there is any other exception, the salaries of the United States district judges are $6,000 and circuit judges $7,000. Why should the four judges in Alaska receive this disportionate salary of $7,500? Are their expenses deducted from this amount?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio, if he will——

Mr. BURTON. There is another fact I wish to suggest in this connection, that in Hawaii the cost of living is notably high.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest to the Senator that he wait until we reach that clause in the bill relating to the Hawaiian judges, if he desires to offer an amendment increasing the salaries, and then we can consider it.

Mr. BURTON. What reason is there for so great a difference?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, is the Senator referring to Hawaii or Alaska?

Mr. BURTON. To Alaska, where the judges are paid a salary of $7,500. Why should their salaries be higher than the salaries paid judges in the Territory of Hawaii and the salaries of district and circuit court judges, including men of very marked ability in the United States?

Mr. WARREN. In Alaska the expense of living is more than double, or is reputed to be more than double, what it is in the United States, according to lists of commodities and their cost. I do not wonder that the Senator mentions the difference. A similar difference is apparent in the government of Territories and in the departments in the United States proper, where there was a general law that the salaries should be so-and-so. In the formerly numerous Territories they were low. Where in later years a Territory was brought in by a special law, as Hawaii was, for instance, the salaries are fixed at very much higher rates in the organic act, and hence the Appropriations Committees follow the law and appropriate accordingly in those cases, which oftentimes seems unjust. I do not think it is unjust, however, as to Alaska, because the expenses are so high; but we have the same phenomena in some of the departments. For instance, in the case of commissioners, we have the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who receives $5,000, and the assistant commissioner $3,500, and other old departments at similar salaries. When we brought in the bill creating the Department of Commerce and others we made the salary of some of the commissioners $6 000.

The Appropriations Committee feels it to be its duty to conform to the existing statutes. Of course we could fail to appropriate as much as the statute calls for, but it would raise a question which might require judicial attention afterwards.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question? For how long a time have the salaries of the judges in Alaska been fixed at $7,500 a year?

Mr. WARREN. I think something like six or eight years. I will say as to the governor of Alaska that the salary was raised by amendment on an appropriation bill here on the floor at the request of the President. A request came to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, here at his desk, when the bill was being considered, from the President of the United States, several pages in length, still wet from the letter book, asking that the salary should be made $10,000. The chairman of the committee consulted with Members on both sides, and before the bill passed it was placed at $7,000. It is probable that the salaries of the judges were established in a special bill. I am confident that those in Hawaii and, I think, those in Alaska outside of governor were fixed by legislation outside of appropriation bills.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, still another question. Why should the salaries of the judges be $500 more than the salary of the governor in Alaska?

Mr. WARREN. I suppose it is considered that the judges are required to have, perhaps, more extended legal education, and have much more arduous and numerous duties to perform. The governor of the Territory is restricted, as governors of Territories always are, while the judges in Alaska have very important functions to perform.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BURTON. In just a moment.

I do not wish to introduce any amendment; but it seems to me this shows the general fact that the salaries of our public officials need readjustment. I really can not justify it by the cost of living. I have been in Alaska, and the qualifications required of a judge there certainly do not compare with those that are required of a judge in the United States, either of a district or of a circuit court.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to say, in reference to the judges of Alaska, that the situation is peculiar and different from that in the case of judges at any other place in the country.

The judges in Alaska, in addition to their judicial functions, have the civil administration in their hands. The whole civil government in Alaska is administered through the judges, who divide their respective divisions into commissioner districts and appoint commissioners, who, in addition to the ordinary duties of a court commissioner, are ex officio judges of probate, ex officio registers of deeds, ex officio collectors, ex officio notaries public, and ex officio coroners. In fact, they manage the whole thing, and liquor licenses as well. Applications for liquor licenses are made to the district courts, and the judges have to pass on the question of issuing liquor licenses.

In other words, in addition to their judicial functions the judges of the district courts in Alaska have all these administrative functions to perform. The distances are immense; they have to travel long distances, and the cost of living is immense. So, knowing the conditions as I do in Alaska, I think $7,500 is no more there than $5,000 would be here in our country, in the old Central States.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a couple of questions?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. In performing duties as notaries public, do they receive fees?

Mr. NELSON. The judges do not perform those functions.

Mr. BURTON. I thought the Senator said they did.

Mr. NELSON. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I said that there are four divisions in Alaska; each judge divides his division into commissioner districts and appoints commissioners, and those commissioners perform all these duties. A commissioner in a given district in Alaska is not only court commissioner in the ordinary sense as we understand it, but performs the functions of a justice of the peace, a notary public, a register of deeds, and a coroner. All those duties are performed through these commissioners. The judges have the appointment of the commissioners, and they have the designation of the districts; but in addition to that the judges have this other duty to perform in connection with licenses. Liquor licenses and also what we call trade licenses are granted by the judges of the district courts. Applications for liquor licenses and for trade licenses are made to the district judges, and they have to pass upon those matters. So the Senator will readily see that the judges in Alaska have a great many duties and functions to perform, outside of purely judicial functions, that are not ordinarily entailed on judges of Territories.

Mr. BURTON. Still a further question: Is there any allowance to these judges for traveling expenses?

Mr. NELSON. I think they have a limited allowance for traveling expenses, but not for their living expenses, and the cost of living there is immense. It is practically twice what it would be in the State of Ohio or the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriatons was, under the subhead "Government in the Territories," on page 73, line 14, after "$2,250," to strike out "janitor service, not to exceed $900," and insert "janitor service for the executive mansion and office building, not to exceed $2,100"; in line 19, after the word "lights," to insert "water," and in line 20, after the word "governor," to strike out "$7,850" and insert "$9,050," so as to make the clause read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, clerk hire, not to exceed $2,250; janitor service for the executive mansion and office building, not to exceed $2,100; traveling expenses of the governor while absent from Juneau on official business; repair and preservation of executive mansion, including $700 for painting; stationery, lights, water, and fuel, to be expended under the direction of the governor, $9,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 6, after the word "governor," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to read:

Territory of Hawaii: Governor, $6,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question about that amendment. Is not that salary fixed by law?

Mr. WARREN. It is. The committee took the ground that compared with the others, and the cost of living there, it should be reduced; but the Senator is right. The statute provides for the salary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no interest at all in the matter, but it seems to me that where the salary has been fixed by general law we ought to appropriate the amount and alter the general law. We ought not to appropriate an amount less than the general law itself provides for.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say, so far as that is concerned, that if we did that and appropriated no more than the general law there would be a great many salaries reduced in this bill and in every other appropriation bill that comes here. In fact, all of those that are fixed by general law are subject to a point of order, and many of them were stricken out in the House of Representatives for that reason.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That might not be an unmixed evil.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 74, line 7, after the word "secretary," strike out "$4,000" and insert "$3,500," and in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$28,000" and insert "$26,500," so as to read:

Secretary, $3,500; chief justice, $6,000; two associate justices, at $5,500 each; in all, $26,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 75, line 3, after the words "chief clerk," to insert "who shall perform such duties in the Department of War as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or may be required by law," so as to read:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of War, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; assistant and chief clerk, who shall perform such duties in the Department of War as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or may be required by law, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "Office, Chief, Quartermaster Corps," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Office of the Quartermaster General of the Army."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say that that simply conforms to the provision of the Army bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 78, line 4, after the word "draftsmen," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; in the same line, after the word "each," to strike out "seven" and insert "six"; in line 6, after the words "civil engineer," to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000"; in line 8, after the words "mechanical engineer," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,250"; and in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$376,370" and insert "$377,020," so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Quartermaster General of the Army: Chief clerk, $2,750; 5 principal clerks at $2,250 each; clerks—15 of class 4, 25 of class 3, 44 of class 2, 85 of class 1, 50 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; advisory architect, $4,000; inspector of supplies, $2,500; draftsmen—4 at $1,800 each, 6 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each; supervising engineer, $2,750; hydraulic and sanitary engineer, $2,000; civil engineer, $2,000; electrical engineer at $2,000; electrical and mechanical engineer, $2,250; marine engineer, $3,500; assistant marine engineer, $1,800; sanitary and heating engineer, $1,800; blue-print operator, $900; 6 messengers; 14 assistant messengers; 12 laborers; laborers—1, $600; 1, $480; in all, $377 020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 12, after the word "clerks," to insert "4 at $2,000 each"; in line 13, before the words "of class 4," to strike out "10" and insert "6"; in line 14, before the words "at $1,000 each," to strike out "12" and insert "11"; and, in line 16, after the words "in all," to strike out "$87,230" and insert "$87,030," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Bureau of Insular Affairs: Law officer, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,250; clerks—4, at $2,000 each; 6 of class 4, 7 of class 3, 11 of class 2, 14 of class 1, 11 at $1,000 each; 3 messengers; 2 assistant messengers; 4 laborers; 2 charwomen; in all, $87,030.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 4, after the words "Lemon Building," to strike out "expenses of horses and vehicles, including their exchange, to be used only for official purposes," and insert "for the purchase, exchange, care, and subsistence of horses, and the purchase, maintenance, repair, and exchange of wagons and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and harness, to be used only for official purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public Buildings and Grounds," on page 84, line 16, before the word "periodicals," to insert "scientific," so as to make the clause read:

For contingent and incidental expenses, including purchase of professional and scientific books and scientific periodicals, books of reference, blank books, photographs, and maps, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "State, War, and Navy Department Building," on page 85, line 21, after the words "toilet rooms," to strike out "at a total cost not exceeding $85,000, the sum of $40,000," and insert "$85,000," so as to make the clause read:

Toward the renovation of the plumbing system in the State, War, and Navy Building, including the removal of all present unserviceable fixtures, piping, etc., the purchase and installation of modern and sanitary equipment, and the refinishing of the toilet rooms, $85,000; and the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building is hereby authorized to employ day labor on the whole or any part of this work where advantageous to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 86, to insert:

For the purchase of one gasoline automobile mail truck of 1½ tons capacity, to be used in transporting mail between the city post office and the mail rooms of the State, War, and Navy Departments, to be operated under the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building, $2,500; skilled laborer, $840; laborer; for fuel, repairs, supplies, etc., of automobile mail truck, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 8, to insert:

For rewiring rooms in State, War, and Navy Building, including the removal of old gas and other fixtures and the purchase and installation of new metallic conduit, wire, and other material necessary to light all rooms by electricity, and for general repair work to walls and ceilings of rooms incidental to such installation, $32,000; and the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building is hereby authorized to employ day labor on this work in like manner as prescribed in the case of reconstruction of toilet rooms.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 87, line 7, before the words "of class two," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in line 13, after the words "in all," to strike out "$75,060" and insert "$76,460," so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $2,250; stenographer, $1,800; clerks—4 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 5 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 1, $1,100, 4 at $1,000 each; stenographer, $1,200; telegraph operator, $1,100; 2 copyists; carpenter, $900; 4 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; messenger boys—3 at $600 each, 1, $420, 1, $400; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; in all, $76,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk an amendment, on page 87, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "three" where it first occurs and to insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed, in the same line, to strike out the word "(indexer)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, line 1, it is proposed to amend the total, so as to read "$17,840."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the Hydrographic Office, on page 90, line 12, after the words "chart plate maker," to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,400," and in line 15, after the words "in all," to strike out "$123,460" and insert "$123,660," so as to read:

Electrotyper and chart plate maker, $1,400; assistant messenger; 4 laborers; helpers—2, at $720 each; 2, at $660 each; 1, $600; 1, $500; 1, $480; in all, $123,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 3, after the word "publications," to insert "books of reference and," and in line 5, after the words "terrestrial magnetism," to insert "and to other professional and technical subjects connected with the work of the Hydrographic Office," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of copperplates, steel plates, chart paper, packing boxes, chart portfolios, electrotyping copperplates, cleaning copperplates; tools, instruments, power, and materials for drawing, engraving, and printing; materials for and mounting charts; reduction of charts by photography; photolithographing charts for immediate use; transfer of photolithographic and other charts to copper; care and repairs to printing presses, furniture, instruments, and tools; extra drawing and engraving; translating from foreign languages; telegrams on public business; the preparation of Pilot Charts and their supplements, and the printing and mailing of the same; purchase of data for charts and sailing directions and other nautical publications; books of reference and works and periodicals relating to hydrography, marine meteorology, navigation, surveying, oceanography, and terrestrial magnetism, and to other professional and technical subjects connected with the work of the Hydrographic Office, $26,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 2, after the word "books," to insert "books of reference," so as to make the clause read:

For professional and scientific books, books of reference, periodicals (subscriptions to periodicals may be paid in advance), engravings, photographs, and fixtures for the library, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 94, to strike out:

For pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon and stars, $7,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to know the reason for striking out those lines. I am informed that for many years it has been the custom to engage these outside computers to do this work, that men of exceptional competency are obtained; also that this method is that which is approved by the head of the Naval Observatory. What is the reason why this provision is stricken out?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that the committee believed they could get along without this appropriation, and for that reason they struck it out. I will say, furthermore, that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is more familiar with the matter than I am, and I should be glad if he would explain it. It was on his motion that the provision was stricken out, and I think properly stricken out.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee is correct in saying that it was on my motion that this item was stricken out. I brought up this matter a couple of years ago. Some facts had been brought to my attention that convinced me that this provision for piecework was absolutely unnecessary for the transaction of the business of the office, and, furthermore, that it was, to say the least, very improperly used, and the investigations I have made since have made me more strongly of that opinion.

While I do not intend to go into the matter very minutely at this time, I will state a few facts that led me to move to strike out this provision.

A few years ago a board was appointed to investigate and report upon the conduct of the Nautical Almanac Office, and as to what was necessary. The board was made up of five of the officials of the department. It made a report, one paragraph of which is as follows:

In view of the fact that hereafter a considerable portion of the material for the American Ephemeris is to be furnished annually by the various foreign officers; and further, that the bulk of the recommendations of the board tend to lessen the time and labor hereafter necessary for the work in the American Ephemeris Office, it is recommended that in the future all computations and work required in the preparation and publication of the American Ephemeris shall be performed in the Nautical Almanac Office by the regular assistants of the office; and it is further suggested that such portion of the time of the assistants as may not be required in the routine work above noted should be devoted to the investigation of such questions as, by their proper development and solution, shall tend to increase the usefulness and accuracy of the Ephemeris.

That recommendation was concurred in by three of this board and not concurred in by two. I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senator to the character and experience of the men who concurred in that recommendation. One of them was Prof. W. S. Harshman, who had served 19 years in the Nautical Almanac Office, the last 7 years as director. The other two were Prof. H. L. Rice, who had served 14 years as assistant in the office, and the senior assistant, Mr. Robertson, who had served 19 years.

These were the three men who made that recommendation, men who were thoroughly familiar with the business of the office and what is necessary for its efficiency. Of the two men who signed the minority report, one was Prof. Eichelberger, who had served 2 years as director and some 20 or 30 years ago had been an assistant, and the second was Assistant Astronomer Morgan, who had never been connected with the office. That was enough, as far as I was concerned, to assure me that at least we ought to try to get along without this item when men of experience like these had reported that after an investigation the force in the office is sufficient to do this work and that the work ought to be done there.

Furthermore, the Paris conference, which I understand is a conference of the several nations, especially those interested in this Nautical Almanac work, agreed upon a plan of exchange of work by which one Government would get the benefit of the experience and the work of the officers of other Governments, and this board report here that in view of the fact that we will get the benefit of this Paris conference it will relieve the office of a great deal of work.

I have here a statement from what I consider a very reliable source as to the cost of the work of preparing the Nautical Almanac, the cost without the work of the Paris conference, and the cost since, and with that work. The cost of this work after the Paris conference would be about $6,285, and the cost without the Paris conference work would be about $11,744. The value of the work that would be furnished to us from these other offices is estimated at $5,459. We have appropriated in this bill $15,640, and I consider that that is all that is necessary, and that with that the work should be fully performed. I am satisfied it can be done and we will get better work even than we have now.

From this statement I want to present a few facts with reference especially to this piecework and what has to be done after we get it, what expenses we paid out for it, in my judgment practically duplicating that work. This statement shows original cost of computations made under piecework and the cost of checking the same in the office.

In the preparation of the Nautical Almanac for 1913 the first computation of the sun was made by outside parties at a cost of $750. Now that had to be checked in the office. That checking cost $121.57. Then for 1914 the first cost of computation was $750, the checking cost $130.29. Then in 1915 the first computation cost $750 and the checking—that is, the work in the office—cost $186.28. Then for the Nautical Almanac for 1916 the first computation cost $767.80 and the checking cost was $283.97. It seems to me where we have paid two or three hundred dollars for checking computations made outside the office we had better do that work directly in the office, because this checking expense resulted from the use of the force in the office itself.

But that is not the most striking example of this work. In the original computation of Mercury for 1913 the office cost was $611, the cost of checking $39.31, while for the 1915 the original cost was $611 and the checking $208.74. For the 1916 almanac the original cost was $193.04 and the checking $168.87, or almost equal to it. That work might just as well have been done in the office in the first instance, and it would have saved practically all the cost of $193.04.

Then, for the computation of Mars the first computation cost $361.35 for the 1913 office, and the checking of that cost $182.04. Then, for the 1914 office the original computation cost $360 and the checking $193.10. Then, for the 1915 office the first cost was $355 and the checking $174.11, while for 1916 the first computation was $150.83 and the checking $105.22, or almost as much. Practically one or the other of those items can be saved by doing the work in the office in the first instance.

Then, here is the computation of Jupiter: For the 1913 office the original computation was $140, made outside. Then, the checking of that in the office cost $102.28. In 1914 the first computation cost $166.88, the checking $80.34. Then, for 1915 the original cost was $140, and the checking cost was $169.59, or nearly $30 more for checking up the work to see whether it is correct or not. For 1916 the first cost was $56.47, and the checking of that cost $64.28, or more than the first cost.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator if a different class of people do the work that is done for the purpose of certifying it? Is the work done by a different set of computers?

Mr. JONES. Yes; the original computation was made by the pieceworkers outside the office, and the checking was done by the people in the office.

Mr. BURTON. Is not this work of such extreme particularity that in any event a second person and perhaps the third would go over the figures to test their accuracy?

Mr. JONES. That is probably true, but that had better be done in the office.

Mr. BURTON. That would not be left to one person?

Mr. JONES. Certainly not entirely.

Mr. BURTON. It would be taken up by one and then by a second and perhaps a third.

Mr. JONES. Possibly so, if it was deemed necessary. It could be done in the office, however, by efficient men who have the time and ability to make these original computations as well as to check them. I have quite a number of items here of the same character. I shall not take the time to put in all now. The superintendent of the Naval Observatory had the Assistant Secretary of the Navy send a letter to the chairman of the committee, and he kindly furnished me a copy. In this letter the Assistant Secretary argues that this item be retained just as it is or that it be changed with an amendment. The amendment would be very unwise, but I want to call attention to one statement in the letter. He says that—

This appropriation has been in the bill for many years—

Of course that is true. We have many appropriations in these bills carried for many years, and it seems that because they have been carried for a good many years that is made the basis for an argument for continuing them, when, as a matter of fact, the reason for the continuance may have long since lapsed. If we are never to take such items out because they have been in for a good many years, a great many of them will never be taken out.

And the elimination of it will seriously cripple the high standard previously maintained in the production of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

There is no reason given why that statement is true. As a matter of fact, the report of the board that was appointed shows that that would not follow at all. The records will show also that this office was kept up a few years ago much better than it has been with the use of this money on the outside.

Not only would the work be crippled for the fiscal year provided by the bill, but the services of several experts who are maintained under it would be lost, perhaps never to be regained, as they would, perforce, seek other employment.

That discloses the real purpose of the provision. It is to furnish employment for some experts on the outside.

Now, who are those experts? It came to me rather reliably that the superintendent or the director of this service stated that one of the members of the committee had said that a certain gentleman in the office force was knocking the office, assuming that he had furnished this information to me.

Mr. President, it is not necessary to go to any of the office force to acquire certain information with reference to the conduct of this office and with reference to the conduct of certain other bureaus and to show that this item should be included. I have gotten information that is absolutely reliable, and it does not necessarily come from anybody in the office. It is not necessary to go to the office to find out that some of the experts now being maintained were in the office just a few years ago as what we might call third-rate assistants, and who resigned and since that time have been employed at a higher salary under this piece-work proposition. For instance, one of the experts the superintendent is afraid he is going to lose was two years ago an assistant in the office at $1,200 a year. He retired from the office, and he is now getting $1,600 out of this $7,000 piece fund. I have not any doubt he may be a competent man, but the $1,200 assistant in the office is just as competent as he is now, and I do not think there will be any trouble in finding a great many men at almost any time when their services might be necessary to perform this work. It is also true that another man who was an assistant in the office a few years ago at $1,200 is getting $1,900 out of this $7,000 piece fund. It is not necessary to go to that office to get that information from some man there, but nevertheless it is true. Those two instances just illustrate what is done with this $7,000. It is an absolute and unjustifiable appropriation. It is absolutely unnecessary, and it could very properly be characterized in much stronger language as to the use of it.

I had some of the information in reference to this matter a couple of years ago, when I tried to have the item stricken out, and I have gotten some more information since that time. Some of that I have given to-day I have gotten since, and if the item is continued, or if it should go to conference and be finally reinstated, there will be some more information secured.

If we must have an investigation of this office, it will be had and it will show up a great many other things that will be condemned and which ought to be condemned. I do not have to go to the office force to find that one man who has been paid out of this fund has been letting the work out that is given to him at about half the amount he is paid for it, and I do not have to go to the office force to find that some of those who get some benefit of this piecework think it is unnecessary.

Mr. President, these are some of the facts that I have secured in reference to this appropriation. I think it is wholly unjustifiable. While it is a small item, yet it is one of many items that get engrafted into the law and are continued from year to year and year to year, and used as a sort of special favoritism item. Whenever we get the information about such an item, showing it unnecessary, we ought to have it stricken out. I hope this item will be stricken out and that the committee will insist in conference that it shall stay out. If it comes back in, I shall furnish additional information and shall insist upon a full and thorough investigation of this office and the expenditure of this piece money. The adoption of the amendment suggested would be very unwise. No power should be given to use or divert any of this money for any purpose not specifically directed by Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Has the Senator from Washington an itemized list of the payments from this $7,000 fund?

Mr. JONES. Not of all. I have those I have given to the Senator and I have some more, but I have not a full itemized statement. I have used these simply as illustrations to show how the fund is used. If this item shall be restored, I will insist on an accounting being made of its expenditure and to the expenditures heretofore made.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, there is no one on this floor who would not favor striking out this item if it causes unnecessary expense and the work can be done by the office force. My information on the subject is not at all complete. It is derived very largely from the recommendation of the superintendent of the Naval Observatory. This observatory is one of the best-equipped institutions in the world. It has made many computations which have been accepted by astronomers everywhere, and it is necessary that the very highest standard be maintained in the quality of the computations.

As the Senator from Washington has stated, the superintendent recommends that this item remain. The computations have been made by certain men of exceptionally scientific qualifications for many years past. Some of them have now become advanced in years. So far as I can learn, this item is necessary. However, I feel willing to have the item stricken from the bill and then the whole subject can be taken up in conference.

I had understood that the two Senators from Massachusetts, both of whom are absent to-day, had given attention to this item and oppose the omission of the appropriation. I certainly should not stand here for it if it is unnecessary or unless its omission would hamper the work of the observatory and diminish the very high standard of their work.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator if he ever found a bureau chief who would admit that an item that we had been appropriating for was not necessary in the conduct of his office?

Mr. BURTON. I think possibly I have, but I am perfectly free to concede the general tendency of all the executive departments is to obtain the greatest possible amount of appropriations and the largest possible number of subordinates.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] investigated this matter, and on his presentation of it we agreed that this item ought to go out. If the Senators from Massachusetts, who are absent, desire to express their views they can do so to the conference committee, and the conference committee will give it careful consideration. I know of no reason why the item should be continued.

Mr. BURTON. I possibly may not be correct in saying both Senators from Massachusetts favor the retention of the appropriation. I may be in error in that regard.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If they can give a good reason for its retention, it will be considered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 96, line 19, after the words "messenger boys," to strike out "1, $600" and insert "3, at $600," and in line 20, after the word "laborer," to strike out "2 laborers at $600 each," so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: Civilian assistant, $2,500; 2 chief bookkeepers, at $2,000 each; clerks—4 of class 4, 8 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 15 of class 1, 10 at $1,100 each, 28 at $1,000 each, 12 at $900 each; 2 copyists, at $840 each; 5 assistant messengers; messenger boys—3 at $600 each, 3 at $400 each; laborer; in all, $113,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15, on page 97.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk an amendment which I submit from the committee. Let the Secretary read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. Strike out lines 16 to 24, inclusive, on page 97, and lines 1 and 2, on page 98, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Division of Naval Militia Affairs: For the following, now authorized by section 17 of the Naval Militia act approved February 16, 1914, namely: Chief clerk, $1,600; clerks—1 of class 2, 2 of class 1, 1 at $1,100, 1 at $1,000; messenger boy, $600; in all, $8,100.

For miscellaneous expenses of the Division of Naval Militia Affairs, including stationery, furniture, office equipment, postage, typewriters and exchange of same, and necessary printing and binding, $2,600, which sum, together with the foregoing amount for salaries, shall be paid from the appropriation for "Arming and equipping Naval Militia" for the fiscal year 1915, and no other or further sums shall be expended from said appropriation for or on account of said Division of Naval Militia Affairs during the fiscal year 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the office of the Secretary, on page 100, line 4, after the word "each," to insert "assistant superintendent, Patent Office Building, $1,200," and in line 15, after the words "in all," to strike out "$275,820" and insert "$277,020," so as to read:

Skilled mechanics—1 $900, 1 $720; 2 carpenters, at $900 each; assistant superintendent, Patent Office Building, $1,200; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; laborers—1 $600, 6 at $480 each; packer, $660; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 8 charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,200; 40 watchmen; additional to 2 watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; 7 firemen; clerk to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him, his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $277,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 18, after "$1,600," to insert "machinist, $1,400"; in line 19, before the word "firemen," to strike out "four" and insert "three"; and in line 23, after the words "in all," to strike out "$39,380" and insert "$40,060," so as to make the clause read:

Old Post Office Department Building: Engineer and electrician, $1,600; machinist, $1,400; assistant engineer, $1,000; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen acting as lieutenants, at $840 each; 20 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 14 laborers; 9 laborers, at $480 each; 3 skilled mechanics (painter, carpenter, and plumber), at $900 each; in all $40,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 24, after the words "Assistant Attorney General," to insert "Three members of a board of appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $4,500 each," and on page 101, line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$65,850" and insert "$79,350," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Assistant Attorney General: Three members of a board of appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $4,500 each; assistant attorneys—1, $3,000; 2 at $2,750 each; 4 at $2,500 each; 7 at $2,250 each; 11 at $2,000 each; medical expert, $2,000; clerks—4 of class 3 (1 of whom shall act as stenographer and 1 of whom shall be a stenographer and typewriter); 1 of class 1; in all $79,350.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have, from some member of the committee, a brief explanation of that item. Is the board of appeals provided for by law, or are these new offices?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. These are new offices. The accumulation of business there amounts to a denial of justice. Nothing has been appealed for more strongly by the department than this board of appeals.

Mr. KENYON. Is that in the Patent Office?

Mr. SMOOT. It is in the Interior Department.

Mr. KENYON. What is this proposed board of appeals to do?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are to decide controversies about land grants, land titles, and other land matters.

Mr. KENYON. Is this recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is very earnestly recommended by him.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that there is nothing provided for in the bill which is more needed than is this board of appeals.

Mr. KENYON. I am inclined to think that that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. There are thousands of cases now held up; they are nearly two years behind; and in hundreds of cases the poor homesteader is almost discouraged and some are compelled to leave their homesteads because of the long delay of decisions.

Mr. KENYON. I am not raising any objection to the item; I simply wanted to understand it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is designed to give relief to the congested condition in that office in connection with the cases which come up from homesteaders?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I sincerely hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 102, line 9, before the words "of class 3," to strike out "51" and insert "52"; in line 10, before the words "of class 2," to strike out "74" and insert "37"; in the same line, before the words "of class 1," to strike out "77" and insert "84"; in line 11, before the words "at $1,000 each," to strike out "65" and insert "68"; in line 12, before the word "copyist," to strike out "65" and insert "67"; and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$631,250" and insert "$650,250," so as to make the clause read:

General Land Office: Commissioner, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $3,000; chief law clerk, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,200 each; 3 law examiners of surveyors general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; chiefs of divisions—1 of surveys, $2,750; 1, $2,400; 10, at $2,000 each; assistant chief of division $2,000; law examiners—13, at $2,000 each; 10, at $1,800 each; 18, at $1,600 each; clerks—27 of class 4; 52 of class 3; 77 of class 2; 84 of class 1; 68, at $1,000 each; 67 copyists; 26 copyists, at $720 each; 2 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; messenger boys—10, at $600 each; 6, at $480 each; 6 skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; 16 laborers; laborer, $480; packer, $720; depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all, $650,250.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I fancy these additional clerks are required, but why was this provision inserted by the committee of the Senate? Why was it not inserted in the other House?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not able to explain why it was not inserted in the other House. It was inserted here because we believed it was necessary for the service. When it shall have passed this body, it will go back to the other House, and, if the House has any objection, the matter will be discussed, and whatever is right I hope will be done; but our committee could not decline to put provisions into the bill because the House did not do so. We do not know what actuated them, but we must meet the obligations of the Government and the necessities of the service as they are presented to us.

Mr. BURTON. It is for an additional number of clerks, and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is necessary.

Mr. BURTON. Is it put on at the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office or of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is recommended by both.

Mr. BURTON. It is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Absolutely; every item of it.

Mr. BURTON. Are the numbers provided for in the House bill the same as at present, under the existing order of things in the office?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not prepared to state by comparison, but there is no doubt of it.

Mr. SMOOT. The House of Representatives merely followed the present law, not taking into consideration the increase of the amount of business. The Commissioner of the General Land Office appeared before the committee and showed the committee the great increase of work in the office. He stated that it would be absolutely impossible to take care of the business unless he had extra assistance. It was for that purpose that such assistance was provided by the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House gave the assistance under the current law, but the Secretary of the Interior insisted on a very large addition. We granted a part of his request, but by no means all of it. We cut deeply into what he desired us to give him and what he recommended.

Mr. BURTON. Does that feature appear in other places in the bill, where the public service imperatively requires an additional force which the House refused to give?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think so; and we have put in such provisions in many places, but we have not put them all in by any means; perhaps not half of what we were urged to insert in the bill. As I said at the outset, in this bill, if we have erred at all, it has been in denying the requests of the departments. I am sure that we have cut off all that we were justified in cutting off, and perhaps more.

Mr. BURTON. Then, Mr. President, this fact appears, that a bill comes here in which the necessary enlargement of the public service is altogether ignored.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would not say that, Mr. President.

Mr. BURTON. At least in some branches of the public service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In some branches of the public service I do not think the House has provided all that should have been provided. We have endeavored to supplement the bill by providing for those things. Our amendments will go back to the other House, and they will be discussed between the two bodies in order to arrive at a just solution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk an amendment which the committee would like to have adopted on page 103.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 103, line 25, after the numerals "$3,500," it is proposed to insert:

Second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest that the amendment just adopted necessitates an increase of the total appropriation on page 104, line 11, and I move to amend in that particular.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, line 11, it is proposed to increase the total appropriation to $328,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 105, after line 19, to insert:

For an additional force of 5 special examiners for one year, at $1,300 each, $6,500, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Mr. BURTON. What does that mean—a reduction of the examiners now in the Pension Office, or what? It reads:

For an additional force of 5 special examiners for one year, at $1,300 each, $6,500, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Does that mean the selection of a new list of pension examiners?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This provides for an additional force of special examiners.

Mr. SMOOT. It provides not for an additional force, but it provides that 5 of those who are already in the service out of the 45 that were before employed can be again employed. I will say to the Senator that it is virtually a reduction of the number of special examiners already employed in the Pension Office. The Senator will remember that when we passed the age-pension bill there were required a great many examiners and a great many extra employees in the office. That extra work is now nearly completed, and this amendment provides that 5 of those who are already in the service shall be reemployed if found capable.

Mr. BURTON. But it will be noticed that the last clause from line 23 to line 25 reads:

And any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

The interpretation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is that those who were put on as a part of the extra force make up an eligible list from which these five may be selected? Does it not go further than that, however, and mean to establish a general rule in the Pension Office?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it goes any further than I have stated. I know that was the intention.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I was misled by the language of the amendment, which reads: "For an additional force." An examination of the present law shows that there were 45 special examiners, and this reduces the number to 40. I will ask that the words "an additional" be stricken out, and that it be made to read: "For a force of five."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Virginia is wrong. I think the wording is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Then, I can not read the English language. If we reduce the number from 45 to 40, and then say "an additional force," that is a little more than I can take in.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can take it in if he wants to do so. I will explain it to the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I should be glad to hear any explanation that justifies the retention of those words.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole 45 to be done away with at the close of the fiscal year under the present law constitute an additional force in the Pension Office. Even if there were only one, it would be an addition; but they have asked for five additional. These men are temporary employees, and not regular employees in the Pension Office. That was why the word "additional" has been used. If, however, the Senator desires to strike it out, I have no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not going to make any point about it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the Pension Bureau has requested this additional force?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They have most earnestly asked for it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am unable to see any reason for an additional force of examiners in the Pension Office. My information is that the number of pensioners on the roll under the general law, exclusive of those who were put there by act of Congress, is decreasing all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator, I will say that 45 additional examiners were employed at the time of the passage of the age pension act.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the Sherwood Act, popularly known?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Most of that work has been completed, but the Commissioner of Pensions states that claims under that act are still coming in, not in such numbers, of course, as they came in a year or two ago; but he insists that he must have 5 of the 45 to continue the work that is not already completed; and that is why they are provided for by this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. The explanation of the Senator from Utah is perfectly clear; but, like the chairman of the committee, I am unable to reconcile the word "additional" with that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the 45 examiners were an additional force in the Pension Bureau. Now, instead of having an additional force of 45 they want an additional force of 5.

Mr. THOMAS. That is, 5 additional to take the place of the 45 additional?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee. Is there any objection to changing the word "those," in line 23, to the words "the additional force," as that is what I understand it means? If the amendment were modified in that way, it would read "and any of the additional force" instead of "those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners," and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to the change, and will ask that the amendment be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 106, after line 7, to insert:

For the use of the Bureau of Pensions for the purchase, repair, and exchange of adding machines, addressing machines, typewriters, check-signing machines, and other labor-saving devices, furniture, filing cabinets, and postage on foreign mail, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 15, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner, $3,000," so as to read:

Patent Office: Commissioner, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for salaries of commissioner and assistants in the Patent Office, on page 107, line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$1,316,390" and insert "$1,316,890," so as to read:

Fifty copyists, at $720 each; 4 messengers; 25 assistant messengers; 14 laborers, at $600 each; 42 laborers, at $540 each; 40 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $1,316,890.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, at this point I desire to propose an amendment, to which I think there will be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order of the Senate was to complete the committee amendments before amendments were offered by Senators.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Very well; I will leave the amendment at the desk and present it later.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 107, line 18, after the word "professional," to insert "and other reference books and publications," and in line 21, after the words "foreign governments," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$4,500," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of professional and other reference books and publications and scientific books and expense of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 109, to insert:

For the investigation of school and home gardening in cities and manufacturing towns, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $5,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 13, after the word "information," to insert "including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere," so as to make the clause read:

For collecting statistics for special reports and circulars of information, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 20, after the word "same," to insert "including personal services in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of bringing the cataloguing up to date," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase, distribution, and exchange of educational documents, collection, exchange, and cataloguing of educational apparatus and appliances, textbooks, and educational reference books, articles of school furniture and models of school buildings illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and repairing the same, including personal services in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of bringing the cataloguing up to date, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, line 17, after the word "expressage," to insert "horse-drawn vehicles for use of the Secretary"; and in line 19, after the word "maintenance," to insert "repair," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior: The following sums, which shall be so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies therein, namely: For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the department, including $16,000 for the Civil Service Commission: Furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, street car tickets not exceeding $250, expressage, horse-drawn vehicles for use of the Secretary, wagons and harness, motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles, maintenance, repair, and exchange of same, food, forage, and shoeing of horses, diagrams, awnings, filing and labor-saving devices, constructing model and other cases and furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, including traveling expenses, fuel and lights, typewriting and adding machines and exchange of same, $135,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Surveyors general and their clerks," on page 114, after line 14, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to detail temporarily clerks from the office of one surveyor general to another as the necessities of the service may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to come in after line 17, on page 114, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 114, after line 17, and the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

The use of the fund created by the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., p. 365), and the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., p. 937), for office work in the Surveyor General's offices and in the General Land Office is hereby extended for one year from June 30, 1914.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator for an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I have submitted it to the chairman.

Mr. President, the general deficiency act of March 4, 1914, contained the same language as that proposed in this amendment. It proposes to extend the appropriation for the purpose of taking care of the plats in the General Land Office. I read the following extract from the estimates of 1915, submitted through the Secretary of the Interior, for the General Land Office:

One hundred or more surveys are waiting to be taken up and accepted in the General Land Office, involving hundreds of thousands of acres, and, unless the force of examining clerks is continued—

That is what this amendment does—

as recommended, the great army of settlers will suffer, and the development of the country will be retarded.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is that from the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SMOOT. That is from the communication of the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that he include the item in his estimates to be submitted to Congress. I will state to the Senator what it means. Under the act referred to there are nine draftsmen who attend to the surveying plats in the department, and this amendment simply extends the employment of those nine experts for one year for the purpose of completing the work that is now far behind in the department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Were those offices abolished by the act of March 3, 1914?

Mr. SMOOT. They were continued by that act, but they would have been abolished if that act had not been passed. This amendment extends their employment for one year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And that act extended their employment for one year only?

Mr. SMOOT. For one year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And this is in compliance with that act?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that the department, in a letter to me, states:

Under this latter item work is now being performed, but is not finished, and will require another year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not understand why the amendment refers to a statute passed in 1864, allowing the use of a fund provided in that year.

Mr. SMOOT. That was an act allowing part of a fund that was appropriated as a lump sum for the department to be used for the purpose of preparing plats.

Mr. OVERMAN. It refers to a fund appropriated away back there?

Mr. SMOOT. It was a general fund; it was not a yearly appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was not the fund in 1864 an appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. Before the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1914 Congress appropriated directly for this work and not under the act as stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object to the amendment, but I wanted to get the information why it is that that fund, if there is such a fund, did not go back to the Treasury on the 1st day of July, as the law provides.

Mr. SMOOT. It was a general act, and——

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but we have a general act providing that all moneys not used by July 1 of each year shall go back into the Treasury. This appropriates for the use of a fund. It does not appropriate the money, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the appropriation is a special fund for this purpose; but the special act of 1864 spoken of provides that a part of the amount appropriated can be used for this particular work, and this is simply reenacting that law so that the services of the nine men who are employed in the department now can be used for the coming year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not objecting as to the merits of the case. I want to know why it is that there is any fund remaining in the Treasury to the credit of any person or any department that has not gone back into the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no fund.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the Senator used that expression—that the fund appropriated in 1864 "is hereby extended."

Mr. SMOOT. I tried to state to the Senator that that was an act of Congress stating that hereafter there should be appropriated a certain amount of money for this particular work.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the direction of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. That was the direction of Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the language of the Senator's amendment is "the use of the fund created by the act of * * * 1864."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have received a communication, which I showed to the Senator yesterday, from the General Land Office, and I got the impression from it that this is not an increase in the appropriation at all, but that this expense comes out of a fund that is collected from deposits, repayments by railroads on grants, and money that came into the surveyor general's office.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the very point I am getting at. If that is true, somebody has been holding funds in that department that ought to have gone back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have understood that there is an act here authorizing the use of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there has been a subsequent act that requires that all money that has not been used shall go back into the Treasury on the 1st day of July, and if any appropriation is necessary it shall be made for the next fiscal year.

I am not discussing the merits of this matter. I think the Senator is right about it. I want to know, however, why that fund has been kept there, when the law requires that it shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know a thing about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it ought to be investigated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think there is good reason for asking to have this force another year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so, too; but I should like to know from the Senator from Utah if there is any other department that is holding back money that was appropriated more than 50 years ago that ought to be in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the general fund.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the act itself at the time required that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am not very well satisfied with my memory, but I think there was a law which provided that the receipts from these sources should be applied for certain purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but there is a law, passed not later than five years ago, requiring that all moneys not used by the 1st of July of each year shall go back into the Treasury.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But that law could not possibly interfere with a special statute directing certain moneys to be used in a certain way.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; it could, and it is very important that that should be so, because when money is kept in one department the Government loses sight of it. It is very important that all moneys in the hands of the Government on the 1st day of July shall go back into the Treasury of the United States, and then be reappropriated, if it is necessary; and that is what ought to have been done in this case. There ought to be an appropriation for it, and that is what called my attention to the matter. I am not opposing what the Senator wants to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Then, let us get along with the amendment, as we are all agreed on it, and save time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think I am doing good service by calling attention to the fact that if there are any funds in the hands of any of these departments, they must go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In justice to the department, I think, if the Senator will reflect awhile, he will realize that a special law takes supremacy, and can not be controlled by a general law. Here is a specific provision that certain moneys shall be collected, and when collected shall be applied in a particular way. I do not think you can charge the head of the department, who is doing exactly what that specific, special law requires, with violation of law.

Mr. OVERMAN. When there is a general law which says that all these moneys shall be turned back into the Treasury?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As a lawyer, does the Senator think that a general law takes priority over a special law?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I think it repeals the other law.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is an elementary rule of interpretation that the special law shall prevail in such cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. If what I am contending for were not so, there would be hundreds of these appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment which the Secretary will report to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 116, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "one $2,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "two at $2,000 each."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is an individual amendment, and can not be considered until the committee amendments have been disposed of. The Secretary will lay aside the amendment until the committee amendments have been completed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I had no authority to offer that as a committee amendment, but I became satisfied that it ought to be adopted, so I did not object to its being offered by the Senator from Mississippi; but to observe the rule I think the Chair is entirely correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will form a precedent which will give trouble if we do not adhere to the rules on this occasion. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Post Office Department," on page 116, after line 77, to strike out:

New Washington, District of Columbia, post-office building: For 4 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 10 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 4 oilers, at $720 each; 22 watchmen; additional to two watchmen acting as lieutenant of watch, at $120 each; 15 laborers; 1 assistant plumber, at $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 15 charwomen; in all, $48,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 15, to insert:

Washington, D. C., new post-office building: For 3 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 3 assistant electricians, at $900 each; 8 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 2 oilers, at $720 each; 12 watchmen; additional to 1 watchman acting as lieutenant of the watch, $120; 12 laborers; 1 assistant plumber, $720; 2 female laborers, at $480 each; 12 charwomen; in all $33,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 122, line 21, before the word "each," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,500," and in the same line, after the word "each," to insert "Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, $5,000: Provided, That the title of Assistant Attorney General is hereby changed to that of Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, but this shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment," so as to read:

Office of the Attorney General: Attorney General, $12,000; Solicitor General, $10,000; assistant to the Attorney General, $9,000; 6 Assistant Attorneys General, at $7,500 each; Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, $5,000: Provided, That the title of Assistant Attorney General is hereby changed to that of Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, but this shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 2, after "$5,000," to strike out "Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment" and insert "Provided, That the title of Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department is hereby changed to that of Solicitor for the Post Office Department, but this shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment," so as to read:

Solicitor for the Post Office Department, $5,000: Provided, That the title of Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department is hereby changed to that of Solicitor for the Post Office Department, but this shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the change in the nomenclature of those offices here will necessitate some changes at other places. I send to the desk the amendments necessary to accomplish that purpose, and ask that we may revert to the parts of the bill to which they apply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia offers certain amendments, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "Office of Assistant Attorney General," and insert in lieu thereof "Office of the Solicitor for the Department of the Interior."

Mr. BURTON. One question about that, Mr. President. Is this language sufficiently clear? Is there not a board of appeals in the Pension Department, as well as in the Land Department?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This has no relation to the board of appeals. This is simply a change in the name of an officer. I have just asked that this amendment be adopted. It is necessary.

Mr. BURTON. This board is designated as follows:

Three members of a board of appeals.

Is that sufficiently definite as to the work that they are to perform? As I understand, that is to be in the Land Office.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This amendment has no relation to that. It simply changes the title of the section.

Mr. BURTON. I so understand it, but I was referring to the amendment already adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will let me dispose of this matter, then, if he wants to take up that one, very well. I think it is sufficiently defined. There is no trouble in the department. That is just the language that the department wanted. This board of appeals will consider appeals of a variety of classes. We can not, in this appropriation bill, go into all the classes of cases that this board of appeals will have to try and dispose of. That is an administrative matter, for which the Secretary of the Interior will provide.

Mr. BURTON. Then, as I understand, they may take up pension appeals?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They can do so. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURTON. Or appeals in the Land Office?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Anything.

Mr. BURTON. Or in any bureau of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is another change at another place on the memorandum I sent up, which the Secretary will notice.

The SECRETARY. On page 116, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "Division of Assistant Attorney General" and to insert in lieu thereof "Division of Solicitor for the Post Office Department."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 123, line 15, after the word "interest," to strike out ", and no special attorney or counsel, or services of persons other than of those provided for herein, shall be employed for such purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, in line 18, before the words "at $3,500 each," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; in line 18, after the word "each," to strike out "one, $3,250"; in line 25, after "$3,000," to insert "clerk to the Attorney General, $1,800"; on page 124, line 2, before the words "of class 4," to strike out "one" and insert "two"; and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$452,830" and insert "$463,880," so as to read:

Attorneys—1, $3,750; 6, at $3,500 each; 14, at $3,000 each; 2, at $2,500 each; assistant attorneys—1, $3,500; 2, at $3,000 each; 2, at $2,750 each; 5, at $2,500 each; 1, $2,400; 2, at $2,000 each; assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of buildings, $3,000; superintendent of buildings, $500; private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General, $3,000; clerk to the Attorney General, $1,800; stenographer to the Solicitor General, $1,600; law clerks—3, at $2,000 each; 2 of class 4; clerk in office of Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $1,800; attorney in charge of pardons, $3,000; superintendent of prisons, $4,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,000; chief of division of investigation, $3,500; examiners—2, at $2,500 each; 4, at $2,250 each; 2, at $2,000 each; 3, at $1,800 each; librarian, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4; 10 of class 3; 10 of class 2; 20 of class 1; 17, at $1,000 each; 15, at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; packer, $900; messenger, $960; 6 messengers; 13 assistant messengers; 7 laborers; 7 watchmen; engineer, $1,200; 2 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 firemen; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; head charwoman, $480; 24 charwomen. Division of Accounts: Chief, $2,500; administrative accountant, $2,500; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4; 6 of class 3; 6 of class 2; 5 of class 1; 3, at $900 each; in all, $463,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, line 13, after the words "repairs of," to strike out "wagons" and insert "vehicles," so as to make the clause read:

For official transportation, including purchase and exchange, keep and shoeing of animals, and purchase, exchange, and repairs of vehicles and harness, and purchase and repair of bicycles, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the office of the Secretary, on page 127, line 6, before the word "three," to insert "skilled laborer, $720," and in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$151,520" and insert "$152,240," so as to read:

Two skilled laborers, at $840 each (1 transferred to Department of Labor); skilled laborer, $720; 3 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 2 firemen, at $660 each; 13 laborers (4 transferred to Department of Labor); 2 laborers, at $480 each; cabinetmaker, $1,000; carpenter, $900; chief watchman, $900; 8 watchmen (3 transferred to Department of Labor); 20 charwomen (5 transferred to Department of Labor an increase of 7); in all, $152,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$173,000," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation and per diem, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce, of special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, for the purpose of carrying on the work of said bureau, as provided by the act approved February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," the per diem to be, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $4 per day to each of said special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, and also of other officers and employees in the Bureau of Corporations while absent from their homes on duty outside of the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses, including necessary sleeping-car fares; in all, $173,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, line 24, after the words "per day," to strike out "$835,000" and insert "$925,000," so as to make the clause read:

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical reports of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of domestic and foreign consumption of cotton; per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees, whether employed in Washington, District of Columbia, or elsewhere; cost of transcribing State, municipal, or other records; temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; for supervising agents, and employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting statistics required by law, including $15,000 for collecting tobacco statistics authorized by law in addition to any other fund available therefor: Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at an amount not to exceed $8 per day, $925,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, line 5, after the word "interests," to insert: "Provided, That out of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended $2,000 for the employment of an editorial assistant, and $1,600 for an editorial clerk, in Washington, D. C., to edit the reports of the field agents employed under this appropriation," so as to make the clause read:

To further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, $75,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That not exceeding $3,000 out of the sum hereby appropriated may be expended for the purchase of documents, manuscripts, plans, specifications, and other publications necessary for the promotion of our commercial interests: Provided, That out of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended $2,000 for the employment of an editorial assistant, and $1,600 for an editorial clerk, in Washington, D. C., to edit the reports of the field agents employed under this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 17, to insert:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without examination under the civil-service rules, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each; and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to let this amendment go over until we get through with the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It can be passed until we get to the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Utah will be granted unless there be objection. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 133, line 25, before the words "at $1,600 each," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten," and, on page 134, line 1, after the words "in all," to strike out "$353,600" and insert "$356,800," so as to make the clause read:

Steamboat inspectors: For 10 supervising inspectors, at $3,000 each, as authorized by section 4404, Revised Statutes, $30,000; inspectors of hulls and inspectors of boilers, as authorized by acts approved April 9, 1906, May 28, 1908, and March 4, 1913, $171,100; assistant inspectors, as authorized by act of April 9, 1906, for the following ports: New York, 27 at $2,000 each; New Orleans, 4 at $1,800 each; Baltimore, 6 at $1,800 each; Boston, 6 at $1,800 each; Philadelphia, 8 at $1,800 each; San Francisco, 8 at $1,800 each; Buffalo, 4 at $1,600 each; Milwaukee, 8 at $1,600 each; Norfolk, 4 at $1,600 each; Seattle, 10 at $1,600 each; 1 traveling inspector, $2,500; $152,500; in all, $356,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,000," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses: For rent, stationery, and other requisites for transaction of the business of shipping commissioners' offices, and for janitor in the commissioner's office at New York, $840; in all, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, line 6, after the words "excursion boats," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of navigation laws: To enable the Secretary of Commerce to provide and operate such motor boats and employ thereon such persons as may be necessary for the enforcement, under his direction by customs officers, of laws relating to navigation and inspection of vessels, boarding of vessels, and counting of passengers on excursion boats, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, line 17, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "including quarters for the Bureau of Labor Statistics of not less than 11,500 feet of floor space," so as to make the clause read:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $49,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, line 21, after the word "quarters," to insert "including water-cooling plant"; in line 22, after the words "Census Office," to strike out "$17,500" and insert "$20,059"; and, on page 143, line 4, before the word "cents," to strike out "35" and insert "37½"; so as to make the clause read:

For rent of quarters, including water-cooling plant, for the accommodation of the Census Office, $20,059, and the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to enter into a contract for the lease, for a period not to exceed five years, of a modern fireproof office building or modern fireproof addition to the present Department of Commerce Building, containing no less than 50,000 square feet of available floor space for use of the Census Office, at an annual rental at a rate per square foot of available floor space not to exceed 37½ cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Labor," on page 144, line 10, after the word "conciliation," to insert "including an executive clerk, at $2,000 per annum, which is hereby authorized," so as to make the clause read:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, including an executive clerk, at $2,000 per annum which is hereby authorized, and for their services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their traveling expenses and subsistence while so employed, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 145, line 4, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$3" and insert "$4," and, in line 5, after the words "temporary assistance," to strike out "for service in the District of Columbia and," so as to make the clause read:

For per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $4 per day, and for their transportation, for experts and temporary assistance for field service outside of the District of Columbia, to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 per day, and for traveling expenses of officers and employees, and for the purchase of reports and materials for the reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and for subvention to "International Association for Labor Legislation," and necessary expenses connected with representation of the United States Government therein, $64,090.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, line 10, before the words "of class 2," to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; in the same line, before the words "of class 1," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; in line 11, before the words "at $1,000 each." to strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; in the same line, before the words "at $900 each," to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; and in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$57,900" and insert "$62,400," so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Immigration: Commissioner General, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner General, who shall also act as chief clerk and actuary, $3,500; private secretary, $1,800; chief statistician, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each; 2 messengers; assistant messengers; in all, $62,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 147, after line 3, to insert:

For the following additional employees for the Children's Bureau, namely: Expert on sanitation, $2,800; industrial expert, $2,000; social-service expert, $2,000; librarian expert, $2,000; 2 clerks of class 3; 4 clerks of class 2; 17 clerks of class 1; 9 clerks, at $1,000 each; special agent, $1,800; 4 special agents, at $1,600 each; 9 special agents, at $1,400 each; and 11 special agents, at $1,200 each; in all, $81,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 147, after line 11, to strike out:

To carry into effect the provisions of the act approved April 9, 1912, providing for the investigation of questions of infant mortality and dangerous occupations, $139,000.

And to insert:

For the subsistence and traveling expenses of officers, special agents, and other employees of the Children's Bureau while traveling on official business, away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, with the provision that in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor a per diem in lieu of subsistence may be paid special agents and other employees when so traveling at a rate not to exceed $4 a day, the exact rate to be fixed in each case in accordance with the reasonable cost of such subsistence by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor; for the employment of experts and temporary assistants, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $8 a day, and of interpreters, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $4 a day when actually employed; and for the purchase of reports and material for the publications of the Children's Bureau, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, including the advance payment of subscriptions for the same, for newspaper clippings to enable the Children's Bureau to secure data regarding the progress of legislation affecting children and the activities of public and private organizations dealing with children, and for reprints from State, city, and private publications for distribution when said reprints can be procured more cheaply than they can be printed by the Government, $58,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 149, line 17, after the words "Department of Labor," to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$16,500," so as to make the clause read:

Rent: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Department of Labor, $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 150, line 6.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire about the item just read. It reads:

District court, Territory of Hawaii: Two judges, at $6,000 each.

That is altogether distinct from the item on page 74, where provision is made for chief justice of the Territory of Hawaii at $6,000; two associate justices, at $5,500 each. How are these related to those?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This is one of the United States district courts. It is an entirely distinct provision from the other.

Mr. BURTON. This is a United States court similar to our United States courts?

Mr. SMOOT. One is for the Territory, the other is the United States court.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 153, line 25, before the word "act," to insert "or any other," and on page 154, line 9, after the words "Indian Service," to insert "the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in future purchases for such schools," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 4. That no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used during the fiscal year 1915 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and model of machine during the period of the fiscal years 1913 and 1914; such price shall include the value of any typewriting machine or machines given in exchange, but shall not apply to special prices granted on typewriting machines used in schools of the District of Columbia or of the Indian Service, the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in future purchases for such schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 154, after line 12, to insert:

Within 30 days after the passage of this act the President shall appoint a board consisting of three persons in the employment of the Government, who shall serve without additional compensation, and two of whom shall be experienced in mechanical manufacturing; it shall be the duty of said board to make an investigation of typewriting and other machines of like character and to fix a mechanical standard to be required for typewriting machines for each class of work in the public service requiring the use of such machines; it shall also ascertain and report as nearly as may be practicable the probable maximum cost of producing each such machine, based upon such mechanical standard, and shall communicate the same to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of its next session.

Mr. BURTON. I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can see that the point is well taken, and I am not going to consume any time. It is plainly out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let us see whether it is or not. Will the Senator from Ohio state the grounds on which the point of order is supposed to rest?

Mr. BURTON. It is legislation providing for the method of the selection of typewriters, and providing also for an investigation into it. It is going altogether outside of any ordinary appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As at present advised, the Chair will sustain the point of order. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 155, after line 18, to strike out:

SEC. 5. That appropriations made in this act shall not be available for purchase, maintenance, or repair of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles in the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments of the United States unless specific authority be granted by law for such purchase, maintenance, or repair, or unless authority for such expenses is stated in specific terms in any general appropriation used to defray the same.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following new section:

SEC. 5. No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915 there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law, and in the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and subsequent fiscal years there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sums required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the official or employees by whom the same are to be used.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can state the number of carriages and automobiles which the Government furnishes to the heads of the different departments for their family and private use?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, we are not supposed to furnish any. I communicated with the head of every department in Washington, and I have a report here which I have no doubt the Senator has. If he has it not, I will send it to his desk. I can not undertake to explain it from memory. It is a very elaborate report. There are hundreds of these vehicles.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have the report before me. I understood the Senator to say that the law does not authorize the employment of these vehicles for private use.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is the general rule that they are not to be employed for private use.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think that as a matter of economy the law should be so amended now as to prohibit the use of these vehicles in that way and thus save an enormous expense to the taxpayers of the country? I am opposed to providing Cabinet officers with carriages and automobiles for their private use.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We have endeavored to deal with this matter in the most effective way that is consistent with economy and with justice. For the fiscal year commencing the 1st day of July, 1914, and ending July 1, 1915, there is no inhibition against repairing vehicles that the Government has bought and which are now in service; but after the year ending the 1st day of July, 1915, ordinarily referred to as the year 1915, they can neither repair nor purchase them. They can not purchase them at all after the passage of this bill, unless estimated for; but during the current year 1915 they can have vehicles they now own repaired, if necessary. From July 1, 1914, to July 1, 1915, they can have them repaired, but after that they can neither repair them nor purchase, unless they are estimated for and Congress specifically appropriates for the purpose. In other words, after this first year, if an automobile breaks down and has to be repaired, it can not be done unless there is an estimate of the cost and it is reported to Congress and Congress appropriates for it. They can neither repair one nor operate one nor purchase one after the year 1915. We felt that for the first year after the enactment of this law we would not forbid the repair of those now in use, but after this they can neither repair them nor purchase them nor operate them at Government expense, unless they first apply to Congress for the money to be used for that purpose, explaining exactly how they are going to use the machines and what they are going to cost.

So I think we have cut right into the roots of this habit. There has been some abuse, but there is a necessity for automobiles and carriages in the Government service, and when that necessity exists all that we provide is that parties feeling that it is necessary must make an estimate and report to Congress, and unless Congress makes the appropriation for the purpose they can not buy them. They have been buying them out of the contingent fund and getting these machines without the knowledge of Congress. I do not mean that they did it surreptitiously or wrongfully, but the habit has obtained in the Government service to buy such things out of the contingent fund. We have put a stop to that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to commend the chairman of the committee for the effort he has made to stop this abuse. It has grown to an alarming and most burdensome extent. Just why Congress ever felt that it was necessary and proper to furnish the Cabinet officials and heads of departments with carriages and vehicles to be used by themselves and their families I can not understand. It is an unwarranted prodigality of public funds and ought not to be done. If it is proper to give the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Labor, and other Cabinet officials and heads of departments automobiles and carriages and furnish men to take care of them, why should we not furnish Senators and Members of the House of Representatives with these luxuries? It can not be justified except upon the theory that we are drifting to a regal form or system of government and forgetting our obligations to the taxpayers. Every additional expense of this character takes from the toilers of this land some of the necessaries of life and increases the hardships which every struggling boy and girl in this Republic is compelled to carry in the race of life. There was never in the history of this Republic a greater demand for economy and retrenchment in public expenditures than now.

I want to serve notice now that from this time on I am going to fight for the correction of this abuse. I do not want to do anything that will cripple the service. When the vehicles are used by the Government and in the interest of the business of the various departments I have no objection. I am perfectly willing that the Government shall have them, but that they should be provided as luxuries for Cabinet officers and the heads of departments is indefensible. Here we are making a fuss about the paying of mileage to Members of the House and Senate, and yet these things are furnished the other departments here that are tenfold greater in cost than this little piece of lagniappe—which really is not lagniappe at all, but rather a part of the compensation or salary of Members of Congress. We need to go back to the good old days when Democratic simplicity characterized the conduct of the officeholders of this Republic.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 156, after line 23, to strike out:

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws, to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act, are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire the reason why this section is stricken out. Why is it not a necessary provision?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The provision the House put in provides that the last appropriation shall be treated as if it were a general law. For instance, take the clerk of the Senator's committee, the appropriation being made for him, say, at $2,000; this provision made that a permanent law and gave that clerk a right to $2,000. We struck that out, so as to leave Congress free to fix from year to year the salaries as it saw fit. We did not think it wise—as the appropriations are frequently made under peculiar circumstances—that they should be a permanent law of the land. We wanted Congress free to appropriate each year for the salaries such sums as Congress saw fit to appropriate.

Mr. BURTON. It is based on the theory that in the appropriation bill the salaries might be higher or lower than the salaries fixed in the statute, and it were better to leave it that way, without modifying the existing law on the subject.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was the judgment of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Florida that some amendments were passed over, and as soon as they are disposed of——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida may desire to address the Senate on this particular amendment. The Chair has not discovered the purpose for which he rose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going, if in order now, to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Several committee amendments have been passed over, and we want to return to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the pending amendment will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to. That completes the committee amendments, except those reserved from time to time by Senators. The Secretary will report them in the order in which they were reserved.

The SECRETARY. The committee sent to the desk an amendment to insert, on page 54, after line 21:

To pay to Thomas P. Kane the difference between the compensation allowed by law for the Comptroller of the Currency and the compensation allowed by law for the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency for services as Acting Comptroller of the Currency from April 28, 1913, when the office of the Comptroller of the Currency was vacated, and continuing as long as the duties and responsibilities of said office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall devolve upon said Thomas P. Kane as Acting Comptroller of the Currency, such an amount as may be necessary to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 377), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913; and such amount as may be necessary to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., p. 756), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gore	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	James	Overman	Stephenson
Bryan	Johnson	Page	Sterling
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Stone
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Ransdell	Sutherland
Chilton	Lane	Root	Thomas
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Sheppard	Tillman
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Vardaman
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Warren
Dillingham	Nelson	Simmons	White
Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this proposed amendment, and I should like to have them consider it very carefully before ever they vote to put a provision of this kind into an appropriation bill. Mr. Thomas P. Kane is Deputy Comptroller of the Currency. The Comptroller of the Currency, I believe, was Mr. Murray, who resigned over one year ago. Upon his resignation the office was not filled by appointment of the President. I believe it is universally conceded by everyone that the appointment was not made by the President of the United States for the reason that he desired that Mr. John Skelton Williams should be appointed to that place and fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Murray. At that time Mr. Williams was holding the position of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He held it for a year, or nearly so, and the vacancy in the office of Comptroller of the Currency was not filled.

During that time Mr. Kane acted as Comptroller of the Currency, and this amendment undertakes to pay Mr. Kane now the difference between the compensation of a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency and the compensation of comptroller.

Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Kane; I have never met him; but I do know that for the Senate of the United States to vote for this amendment and establish a precedent that wherever there is a head of a division or wherever there is the head of a bureau of the Government, or I might go further and say that wherever there is the head of a department of the Government, who resigns and there is some other person in the department acting in his stead we will be asked to pay the difference between the salary drawn by the subordinate and the salary or compensation due to the head of the department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator expresses some fear about the establishment of a precedent in this matter. I call his attention to the fact that under a former administration, when Mr. Valentine went out of the Indian Department, his successor, who was performing the duties of assistant as well as the duties of the principal, had the difference between the two salaries allowed him.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember the case to which the Senator refers, but I want to say to the Senator that that office was never held open for a year for the purpose of putting Mr. Valentine or anyone else into that office, and I suppose the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not agree that the office of Comptroller of the Currency was ever held open for the purpose which the Senator suggests. We can draw our own inference, but the same inference might be drawn from the Valentine case.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Oregon is the only person I ever heard say that that was not the case. I did not object to it. If the President of the United States wanted Mr. Williams as Comptroller of the Currency, he had a perfect right to have him; nobody objected to that; certainly I did not. But if we are now going to set a precedent here of paying the difference between the compensation of the head of a department and one of his subordinates who may be acting in his stead, I do not know where we are going to end. There is hardly a day but that some of the higher officials are absent in some of the departments and when some subordinate is acting in the place of a chief of a division or the head of a department. It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I call the attention of the Senate to the matter. So far as the small amount of money involved in this particular case is concerned, I do not care. The principle would be the same if the amount involved were but one dollar.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator once more?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is every reason in the world why in this case the additional compensation should be allowed. It fell to my lot to come in contact with Mr. Kane a good many times, and I know he really did the work of deputy comptroller and also of comptroller as well. The cases are very rare where such requests will be made because the chief rarely ever resigns; he goes away, and leaves the office, and draws his salary just the same. Not only has this been done in this administration, but in other administrations. In Mr. Murray's case I believe he did resign, and the whole work devolved upon Mr. Kane.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said, nor intimated, that Mr. Kane is not a capable man or that he did not fill the position in a perfectly satisfactory manner. That is not the question involved in this case. It is a deeper question than that; it is a recognition by Congress that wherever there is a vacancy in an office in the Government of the United States that becomes so by resignation or by death, and during the vacancy in the office any substitute shall be paid the compensation due the principal, and not the compensation due the person who may have served as a substitute in that particular place.

Mr. President, there is not a Senator who does not know that correspondence comes from the departments of this Government signed by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, by the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, by the Acting Treasurer of the United States, and so forth. I could go through every one of the departments of the Government and show that just exactly the same situation exists.

This amendment will simply give notice to every department of the Government that if a man serves as the acting head of a department, or as chief or a bureau, he is entitled for the time of that service to the compensation that the head of the department himself or the chief of the bureau would have drawn. It is unwise, it is uncalled for, and it is a dangerous precedent to set. I therefore trust, Mr. President, that the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have no more interest in this matter than has the Senator from Utah. Mr. Kane is a good Republican brother and has been in the office, I suppose, for 20 years. He is a very faithful man. The only interest I have in the matter is that I think I did this man an injustice. A similar provision to this was in a former bill recommended by another committee and reported to the Senate unanimously. When it came up on the floor of the Senate I did not think it was properly in that bill. I think there ought to be some system about the formation of our appropriation bills, and when I found this item in the last appropriation bill I made the point of order against it, because it ought to have been in the legislative appropriation bill and not in the deficiency appropriation bill, and it went out.

I think this man ought to be paid for the service rendered by him. It does not require any additional appropriation. The sum of $5,000 was appropriated last year to pay the Comptroller of the Currency and $3,500 to pay the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency. Mr. Murray was Comptroller of the Currency and received a salary of $5,000 when Mr. Williams was occupying the position of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. For some reason this place was not filled, and all the duties of the Comptroller of the Currency were devolved for about a year upon Mr. Kane, the deputy. This is not really an appropriation of more money; it is a saving of $3,000 to the Government. It gives to Mr. Kane, who filled this position not for a day, not for a month, not for two months, not for three months, but for more than a year, the difference between the salary of Comptroller of the Currency and Deputy Comptroller of the Currency. The difference is about $1,100. I believe he ought to be given the difference between his salary as Deputy Comptroller and that of Comptroller of the Currency during the time he performed the important and arduous duties of the latter office and let the other $3,000 go back into the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to say, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina, that if this amendment is not adopted by the Senate, then the whole of the $5,000 which was appropriated will go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Everybody knows that.

Mr. SMOOT. And, of course, if it is adopted, a part of the amount must be paid to Mr. Kane.

Mr. STONE. How much is involved?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment does not say, but, as I understand, it is somewhere between $1,100 and $1,200.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. So the amendment is virtually the same as if we appropriated that amount of money direct to him at this particular time, so far as the results to the Treasury of the United States are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and ask that this announcement, both of the pair and of the transfer, stand for the day. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. I desire the announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to know whether or not the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I now transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and therefore withhold my vote, unless it be necessary to make a quorum, in which case I shall vote.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent from the city and is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] seems to have voted.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed, Mr. President, that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], though my information may be wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from New York is recorded as having voted.

Mr. O'GORMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will let my vote stand.

I will state, Mr. President, that at the time I voted I had not observed the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], with whom I have a general pair.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is unavoidably absent. He stands paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. STONE. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. The understanding between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and myself is that, in case either of our votes is necessary to make a quorum, the pair does not apply. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bristow	Lane	O'Gorman	Thompson
Burton	Lee, Md.	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lewis	Page	Tillman

So the amendment of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in adopting section 4, on page 153.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we ought to finish the committee amendments, and then the Senator can offer his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know there had been such a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We are working under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 60, it is proposed to insert the following:

For investigation and experimentation and to secure better methods of administration, with a view to increased efficiency or to greater economy in the expenditure of public money, including necessary traveling expenses, in connection with special work, or obtaining of better administrative methods in any branch of the service within or under the Treasury Department, including the temporary employment of agents, stenographers, accountants, or other expert services, either within or without the District of Columbia, $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate this hot Saturday afternoon to discuss this question. I thought it had been decided not to report the amendment on this bill. It does seem to me, in just as few words as I can possibly state the matter, that it is an amendment having no other purpose than the creation of a few more offices. We have had investigation after investigation upon this very subject. I have seen very little good come from them, although they have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars in the past.

Further, I desire to say, Mr. President, that this is only one step; it is the beginning of a new examination.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator must be aware of the fact that this item has been carried in the bill for five years—three years, I think, at $75,000 and then for two years at $20,000—so that it is not the beginning of anything; it has been in existence for five years, certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it is simply extending the last move toward an investigation of this kind.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me, I am sure that this is not intended simply to undertake an investigation. It is essentially a contingent fund, and it is the only place where a contingent fund is provided for the use of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the language of the amendment he can use this fund for any of the purposes for which a contingent fund is ordinarily used. He speaks of it as a contingent fund, it is known as a contingent fund, and it is intended to be used as a contingent fund.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment says specifically:

For investigation and experimentation and to secure better methods of administration, with a view to increased efficiency or to greater economy in the expenditure of public money, including necessary traveling expenses, in connection with special work, or obtaining of better administrative methods in any branch of the service within or under the Treasury Department, including the temporary employment of agents, stenographers, accountants, or other expert services, either within or without the District of Columbia, $20,000.

There is no contingent fund there. The provision does not so state, and I do not so understand it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, Mr. President, I so understand it. It embraces almost every contingency that can possibly arise; and the amount carried is to be used and has always been used by the Secretary of the Treasury as a contingent fund.

Mr. SMOOT. For purposes other than those enumerated?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Everything is enumerated. There is hardly anything that is not embraced under the broad and comprehensive language employed. It may be used for anything that will better the service of the Treasury Department. The ingenuity of man can not make a more comprehensive authorization than is made in this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have never understood that this was a contingent fund, and if it is I think it ought to be made a direct appropriation for a contingent fund to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure the Senator is under a misapprehension. The language of the amendment is rather peculiar, but it is the stereotyped language that has been used for years. The Secretary of the Treasury speaks of it as a contingent fund. He says it is the only fund that will enable him to meet any contingent demand that may be made upon him. It has always been used, I think, as a contingent fund; that is what it is intended for; that is what it will be used for; and the language here is broad enough to include any contingency that may arise in the work of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to a contingent fund for the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is all this is.

Mr. SMOOT. But I want to say, Mr. President, that the language here employed does not express, even in the faintest way, that this appropriation is for a contingent fund, for it specifically states just what it is for. This is the first time I have heard that it is to be used as a contingent fund.

Mr. President, I am not going to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, but I want the Senate to decide if they want to put this amount in this appropriation bill in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment reserved.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 132, after line 17, to insert:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without examination under the civil-service rules, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each; and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I make the point of order as to that amendment that it is new legislation attached to an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that this is regularly estimated for by the department, and it can not possibly be subject, in my judgment, to any point of order. It is an appropriation pure and simple, for a worthy purpose, too, and estimated for by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. KENYON. If the words "without examination under the civil-service rules" were stricken from line 20 it might be a most estimable provision. With those words in, it seems to me it is very faulty, and those words in themselves make it new legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the item was estimated for by the department and has been reported by a standing committee. The point of order is, therefore, overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as an amendment to the committee amendment, I move to strike out the words "without examination under the civil-service rules," on page 132, line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment reported by the committee, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 132, line 20, it is proposed to strike out the words "without examination under the civil-service rules."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I believe those words should not be included in this amendment. I can not see why the appointments that will be made under this amendment should not come under the civil-service rules as well as other appointments that may be made in the Government service, and in fact there is more reason why they should do so, because this is a particular line of work which, unless the person appointed is qualified, will be absolutely useless to the Government, and more than useless to the country, for it could not be relied upon.

It seems to me we are steadily and persistently violating the spirit of the civil-service law in passing appropriation bills of late. I should like to know how many men have been demoted and how many men have been dismissed from the Government service while under civil service in all of the departments of the Government. I think it would be a long, long list.

I did have occasion to look into the promotions and demotions in the Government Printing Office, and I have been rather surprised at that investigation. It has been charged upon this floor a number of times of late, and particularly when we were discussing the question of demotions of the old soldiers in the departments of the Government, that it had been done in the past by past administrations, and that no Democrats in any of the departments stood any show whatever of retaining their positions under a Republican administration or of retaining the amount of salary they were drawing at the time they were serving under a Democratic administration.

Mr. President, I have a list of the employees of the Government Printing Office holding preferred positions only with salaries ranging from $1,400 to $2,500. During all the last Republican administration, and while the Republicans have been in power, these preferred positions, 29 in number, have been held by Democrats. I wish to say now that as long as I was chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses and chairman of the Printing Committee of this body, the only man in behalf of whom I ever appealed to the President of the United States for reinstatement because I thought he had been wrongfully demoted was a Democrat.

I have the names, the positions held, and the salaries paid these 29 men who have served for years in the Government Printing Office. I shall ask to have the list of names printed without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Preferred situations held by Democrats under the Republican administration.

Name.	Position.	Salary.
T. Franklin Morgan	Foreman and foreman of printing	$2,250.00 to 2,500.00
Robert W. Summers	Chief jacket writer	2,250.00
Edward J. Wilver	Cashier and paymaster	2,500.00
Wellington M. Nelson	Paying teller	2,000.00
Charles H. Welsh	Estimator and jacket writer	2,000.00
Edwin F. Geyer	do	2,000.00
Edward H. Ryan	do	2,000.00
George Lamb	Assistant storekeeper	2,000.00
John L. Alverson	Clerk	1,800.00

Robert N. Henry	do	1,600.00
Sanford M. Warren	do	1,800.00
Charles F. Kreh	do	1,800.00
James W. Vanarsdell	Computer	1,878.00
Fremont M. Claflin	do	1,878.00
William W. Blake	Clerk	1,400.00
Russell O. Beene	do	1,800.00
Louis A. Potter	do	1,600.00
William J. Hendricks	do	1,800.00
Norval W. Gallaher	do	1,600.00
Adam Brandt	Foreman	2,250.00
Stanley H. Ridings	Deskman	1,627.60
A. J. Arnold	do	1,627.60
William H. Weber	Charge of section	1,752.80
Harry R. Christie	do	1,752.80
Daniel V. Chisholm	Press reviser	1,627.60
Archibald Edmonston	Jacket writer	2,000.00
William W. Taylor	Binder in charge	1,502.40
E. F. Flanagan	do	1,502.40

Mr. SMOOT. In passing, I wish to say that I have not taken a name with a salary less than that of a clerk drawing $1,400. They are all preferred positions. I think of all the departments of our Government that great printing establishment, the best one in all the world, should employ nothing but the very best of skilled labor, and it has been done in the past.

Let me call attention to what has been done by way of demotion, and also by way of promotion. I hold here a list of the names of some 50 to 60 employees, showing their positions, their salaries, the salaries to which they were reduced, and the decreases in the salaries. In passing, I wish to say that every single one of them is a Republican, and every one of these demotions has taken place within the last year. I ask that that list may be printed without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to follows.

REDUCTIONS.

[All reduced are Republicans.]

[1] Resigned.

Mr. SMOOT. I have here another list showing the names, the positions, the salaries to which increases were made, and the amounts of increases. I wish to say to the Senate that every one of that long list of names is a Democrat.

I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the list will be printed. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do this not for the purpose of criticizing this particular amendment, but for the purpose of showing to the Senate that it is following out a policy already well under headway. The attack that has been made upon the civil service in a number of appropriation bills that have been considered by this body of late is but a part of a concerted move and is exercised in every department of the Government.

I am one of those who believe that wherever there is an appointive office not under the civil service the President ought to appoint Democrats. I think they are entitled to the positions. I never have objected, and never shall object, to such appointments, for I think, unless the laws specifically provide that it shall be a bipartisan commission, in which the President is directed, of course, to appoint men of both political parties, he does nothing more than his duty if he sees that every office is filled by a Democrat. I say this because I believe it. I say this because I believe the Republicans, when in power, should have followed the same identical rule. It does seem to me, however, that if we are going to appoint commercial attachés to serve in foreign countries for the purpose of collecting information to be disseminated to the business interests of this country for the purpose of basing their future business transactions upon, the work ought to be performed and reports made by persons selected by the Civil Service Commission.

This is not a political question. We ought to secure the very best men there are in the United States for this work. We ought to select the men who are particularly qualified, and not only qualified but qualified with a special degree of knowledge and understanding of the different modes of manufacturing and the distribution and the marketing of the different classes of goods that we export to foreign countries.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think we will get that kind of men under the civil service?

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. How? Just because they can read and write and spell, and probably speak one foreign language? That is about the kind of examination they have to stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not so understand it. I have more confidence than that in the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN. He has not anything to do with it. The Civil Service Commission sends him the first three men on the list, and if he administers the law according to its terms he selects one of the three.

Mr. SMOOT. They always have done that.

Mr. OVERMAN. You have not been administering it in that way. If he administers the law as it has been administered while your party was in power, if the man making the appointment does not like any of those three, he will send for three more. I have known them to go down through 15 in order to get their own man. That is the way they have been administering the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I never have found it that way in my experience.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows, I think, and everybody on that side knows, that the administration of the law under all administrations in the past has not been according to the strict rule of the law. The man making the appointment always got his own man. I have been told by Senators on that side that the administration of the civil service was a humbug. A leading Republican told me it was a humbug when I first came here, and I found it so later in my own experience.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that it is going to be administered any differently now.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to say, however, that if civil service is a humbug, we ought to abolish it entirely; but if it is a success, and if we do believe in it, then we ought to adhere to it strictly and not violate the spirit of it.

If it can be proven to Congress that it is as represented by the Senator from North Carolina, the quicker we do away with it the better; but as long as it is the policy to make appointments under the civil-service law, I believe it ought to be adhered to, and adhered to strictly. I believe the examinations that will be made under civil-service rules for these particular places will be such, and the requirements such, that they will have to pass an examination that will at least show that they are qualified not only as to the conditions of business in this country, but the conditions of business of the country to which they are assigned. I think the civil-service examination of men to be appointed under this provision would bring that about.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the other day, while we were discussing this question of demotion and dismissal from the public service, I put in the RECORD the names of those who had been demoted or dismissed from March 4, 1897, to December 31, 1898, during that period of the beginning of Mr. McKinley's administration. At that time I did not have the letters of the companies and the numbers of the regiments of the soldiers. Since that time I have secured that information.

This is only in one bureau, to wit, the Pension Bureau. Since then I have prefaced that list with a statement of the statute, of the Attorney General's opinions concerning its construction, the regulations of the Civil Service Commission, and the decisions of the Supreme Court in passing upon it; doing it all, however, in a bird's-eye way, by means of references for the most part, and making only six pages of letter paper.

I ask unanimous consent that the list of the soldiers, with their companies and regiments, and this preamble or statement to which I have just referred, may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

By section 1754, Revised Statutes, persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service for disability originating in line of duty are to be preferred "for appointment to civil offices," provided they possess the business capacity necessary to a proper discharge of the duties of such offices. The preference conferred by this section was expressly continued by section 7, act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. L., 406), commonly called the "civil-service act."

The Attorney General (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 194) construed section 1754, Revised Statutes, to mean that the persons therein mentioned are not exempted from liability to examination for admission to the civil service, but that they are entitled to a preference for appointment as against other persons of equal qualification for the place.

The Civil Service Commission (Minute of Commission, April 18, 1896) has decided that preference under section 1754, Revised Statutes, applies only to original entrance to the service.

The preference in appointment to positions in the civil service of the United States of a certain class of honorably discharged persons having been fixed, Congress soon made provision for their retention by the act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat. L., 169), wherein such persons are given protection in the matter of a compulsory reduction of the force employed in any executive department, the statute providing "that in making any reduction of force in any of the executive departments the head of such department shall retain those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors."

In passing upon the statutes above referred to the Attorney General has held (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 490):

"Ex-soldiers or sailors, or the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors, are not entitled to preference over other persons * * * when reductions in salary and rank are to be made, even though their qualifications are equal."

Or, as stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Keim v. United States (177 U. S., 290, 295):

"These sections do not contemplate the retention in office of a clerk who is inefficient, nor to transfer the power of determining the question of efficiency from the heads of departments to the courts. * * *

"No thoughtful person questions the obligations which the Nation is under to those who have done faithful service in its Army or Navy. Congress has generously provided for the discharge of those obligations in a system of pensions more munificent than has ever before been known in the history of the world. But it would be an insult to the intelligence of Congress to suppose that it contemplated any degradation of the civil service by the appointment to or continuance in office of incompetent or inefficient clerks simply because they had been honorably discharged from the military or naval service. The preference, and it is only a preference, is to be exercised as between those 'equally qualified,' and this petitioner was discharged because of inefficiency. That, it may be said, does not imply misconduct, but simply neglect: but a neglected duty often works as much against the interests of the Government as a duty wrongfully performed, and the Government has a right to demand and expect of its employees not merely competency but fidelity and attention to the duties of their positions.

Nowhere in these statutory provisions is there anything to indicate that the duty of passing, in the first instance, upon the qualifications of the applicants, or, later, upon the competency or efficiency of those who have been tested in the service, was taken away from the administrative officers and transferred to the courts. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether that is a duty which is strictly judicial in its nature. It would seem strange that one having passed a civil-service examination could challenge the rating made by the commission and ask the courts to review such rating, thus transferring from the commission, charged with the duty of examination, to the courts a function which is at least more administrative than judicial; and if courts should not be called upon to supervise the results of a civil-service examination equally inappropriate would be an investigation into the actual work done by the various clerks, a comparison of one with another as to competency, attention to duty, etc. These are matters peculiarly within the province of those who are in charge of and superintending the departments, and until Congress by some special and direct legislation makes provision to the contrary, we are clear that they must be settled by those administrative officers.

In the case of Taylor v. Taft (24 App. D. C., 95) it is held that—

"The right of appointment necessarily involves the right of removal. This power is absolute, except in so far as restricted by Congress. The civil-service act limits the power of removal in no respect, except for the single cause of failure to contribute money or service to a political party. An employee's fitness, capacity, and attention to his duties are questions of discretion and judgment to be determined by the heads of the departments. Such questions are beyond the power of any court."

In order to protect the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors in the classified service from dismissal, or reduction in rank or salary, when it may be necessary to reduce the force in any executive department, section 4 of the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 360, 413), enacts that no such soldier or sailor whose record in such department is rated as "good" shall be discharged, dropped, or reduced in rank or salary. This proviso plainly contemplates that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors with a record rated as "good" under the system of efficiency ratings established by said section 4 shall not be disturbed in the event that it becomes necessary to reduce the force in any executive department; that is to say, where the total number of employees in a particular branch of the service is to be reduced. Manifestly it has no application where a reorganization or reclassification of the force is undertaken by the head of a department with no necessity of law for reducing the total number of employees.

That the law recognizes the inherent power of the head of a department to arrange and classify his employees is easily demonstrated. It is only necessary to refer to section 1 of Rule XII, civil-service rules:

"A removal or reduction may be made for any cause which will promote the efficiency of the service, but like penalties shall be imposed for like offenses, and no discrimination shall be exercised for political or religious reasons."

Subject to the prescribed limitations the authority of the head of a department in the matter of changes appears to be amply sufficient to make such a classification of the personnel of his force as will best promote the efficiency of the service. Whether the changes be made because of delinquency or misconduct, or whether they become advisable for administrative reasons only, the right of the head of a department to act does not seem to be abridged, provided he complies with the procedure established by section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555), which is as follows:

"That no person in the classified civil service of the United States shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be furnished to the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same: Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike, against the United States, having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said Postal Service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service. The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with."

Wright, Moses B. C. (Company K, Thirteenth Ohio Infantry; major, Second Indian Home Guards), reduced from $2,000 to $1,800.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These cases were solely in the Pension Bureau. There are seven other departments which went through the same experience.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. STONE. How many names are there in the list in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I counted them and stated the number the other day, but I do not remember it now. There is quite a long list of them; and that was only in the Pension Bureau, which is only one division of one department. There are seven other departments with their various divisions, and the thing ran along pretty much on a parity.

Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the amendment of the committee. I do not think anything is of more importance than the cultivation of our foreign trade and the finding of new markets for American products of every description. I want it with the words "without examination under the civil-service rules"; and I should like to have any man of common sense tell me what sort of an examination could possibly be prescribed to determine the fitness of men who are to do what? "To investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States."

Are you going to examine a man as to the textile industry? Are you going to examine him as to the steel and iron industry? Are you going to examine him as to the condition of the cotton market? Are you going to examine him as to millinery? Are you going to examine him as to ready-made clothing? What are you to examine him in? What particular branch of the agricultural industry, of the manufacturing industry, of the mining industry, or of commercial pursuits? No man knows all of either of these, and no man knows much about all of them when they are taken together.

In my opinion, the very best man for the Secretary of Commerce to send abroad in a matter of this sort is a good, live, commercial traveler. To bring a man up here and begin to examine him in arithmetic, in geography, and heaven knows what else, when what you want is a man to go over and report upon trade conditions, and a man who has been in the habit of considering trade conditions, seems to me totally unnecessary.

If I were going to do that work I would rather get hold of a New York or a Chicago or a St. Louis or a New Orleans drummer who had been all over the country hunting out new markets for a great American commercial enterprise, hunting up new customers for them, and reporting back to his house, and in the meanwhile selling goods en route, than to have any amount of civil-service examinations.

Civil service is all right up to a certain limit. We have made a fetish out of it, however, and we have carried it too far. Here, not long ago, men were talking about civil service for United States deputy marshals. If I subjected a candidate for one of those positions to a civil-service examination at all, I would take him to a shooting gallery, put a pistol in his hand, and see whether he could shoot better than his competitors. Then I would organize a night attack on him and let men fire blank cartridges at him, and if he did not kill one of them I would pronounce him incompetent for the service, and if he did I would appoint him. I imagine the examining board would not want to indulge in that sort of an examination to any very great extent.

We are making a fetish of the civil service, as I say. There is reason in all things. There is a limit to the application of any general principle of expediency or of government. There is no limit to the application of any moral principle, but there is to every other sort of general rule, and it seems to me that we will get very much better service from these attachés if we do not apply the civil-service examination rules to them.

I know it can be readily answered that perhaps I would not have said that if the Republicans had offered a like bill. I think I would have said it. Whether I would have said it or not, however, I know I would have thought it. I might have thought it was better to leave them the laboring oar.

The fact that these men are going to be Democrats for the most part, or even altogether, if that argument is made, does not frighten me. There are plenty of men who are Democrats who are precisely fitted to attend to this service and to attend to it up to the handle, in the very best possible manner in which it can be attended to.

The present Secretary of Commerce is a man who has been long engaged in the business of exporting American products to a foreign market. He has exported them to Japan and to China and to Austria and to Germany and to Italy. He is not going to wreck his department and the effectiveness of its work by appointing men who are not fit for this particular service, concerning which he has had so much experience.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is quite evident that the party in power is not friendly to the civil-service system. One or two things that have been said this afternoon indicate that very clearly. The intimation that the whole plan is a humbug is one of them. It is possible that some Republican has made some such expression, although I do not know of anyone who has made it publicly. Nevertheless, I wish to state that the civil-service system has come, and come to stay. There may be a lapse under Democratic rule; there may be exceptions; but more and more we will bring these different positions under rules under which competency and fitness will be the qualification, and, furthermore, permanency of tenure will become more thoroughly established.

It is not alone the choice of men who are competent that is accomplished by this method. It is the confidence which it inspires that these branches of the public service are divorced from politics; that the selection is not governed by partisan considerations. Everyone knows that the moment any position, however unimportant it may be, becomes vacant it attracts a horde of applicants—that is, unless the position is within the civil-service rules. I remember one time, years ago, going into the Congressional Library. There was no civil service there, and a visitor might see a line of Congressmen, Senators, and others similar to those at a ticket office when a popular opera is being presented, all waiting to see Mr. Spofford, the Librarian, in order to present the claims of their friends. I became disgusted and left.

If these positions of commercial attachés or any other positions are made free from the civil-service rules, it will cause the same degree of pressure, and it will diminish the public confidence both in the men themselves and in their work.

I have no sympathy with this ridicule of civil-service examinations. Every time any particular position is sought to be exempted we hear this same talk in this Chamber, that to examine a man in reading and writing and arithmetic and geometry does not show whether he is a proper person to fill the position. Why, it is very easy to provide different examinations for different offices under the Government. That is the function of the Civil Service Commission and its examiners, to frame such questions as will show the qualifications for the appointment that is to be made.

The work of these attachés is prescribed here—to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States. It is perfectly easy to frame questions relating to foreign trade and the needs, tastes, and languages of other peoples. It is not difficult to ascertain an applicant's knowledge of the demand for our manufactures and products. If selections are made on a large scale or for the service of the public a competitive examination is the best method to test the capability of the applicant in all those directions. Of course no examination would be conducted without taking into account the experience of the applicant.

So, I say, the importance of obtaining competent men for these positions, those who will be free from the claims of partisanship and the suspicion which attaches to selections made under the promptings of political favoritism, is one of the strongest objections to this provision here. But it is perfectly evident that the party in power are seeking to undermine the whole system. In the last deficiency bill there was a provision inserted in regard to deputy United States marshals and collectors as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Examination of fourth-class postmasters: For necessary additional office employees, printing, stationery, travel, contingent, and other necessary expenses of examinations, $30,000; field examiners at the rate of $1,500 per annum each, for work in connection with members of local boards and other necessary work as directed by the commission, $9,000; in all, $39,000, to be available during the fiscal year 1914: Provided, That hereafter any deputy collector of internal revenue or deputy marshal who may be required by law or by authority or direction of the collector of internal revenue or the United States marshal to execute a bond to the collector of internal revenue or United States marshal to secure faithful performance of official duty may be appointed by the said collector or marshal, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof, and the officer requiring said bond shall have power to revoke the appointment of any subordinate officer or employee and appoint his successor at his discretion without regard to the act, amendments, rules, or regulations aforesaid.

That was the first onslaught on the civil-service system, openly made in the deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913. When it was brought in here I believe I myself raised the point of order that it had no place in an appropriation bill.

In opposition to the point of order, the reason was given that it did have place in the bill because it diminished the appropriation for executing the law a paltry thousand dollars; that the exemption diminished expenses in making examinations. Consequently it was held to be in order—erroneously, I think. What happened? The bill went into conference, and the provision for the diminished expense of a thousand dollars was immediately stricken out, as if it were put there for the express purpose of making this exemption admissible under the bill. Of course the appropriation was not diminished one dollar.

When we had under consideration the bill for the collecting of the income tax there also an exemption was made. Let us think for a minute of the importance of that. Here is a new species of revenue, in the collection of which the officials of the Government are brought into very close contact with all the people, where there is great opportunity for the exercise of favoritism or, on the other hand, of oppression. If there is any one branch of the public service that should be free from any suspicion of the possibility of oppression or of favoritism it is that which has to do with the collection of the revenue. But there a large class of officials is exempted.

Then, again, in the Federal reserve act exemption is made. So all these things point one way—to the gradual undermining and the breaking down of the civil-service system.

To my mind, Mr. President, this is the worst of the list. This provision seeks to do a very salutary thing—to enlarge our trade abroad, to select commercial attachés, and their secretaries go with them. It is a new method practically of bringing our manufacturers and exporters into closer touch with foreign markets. What will be the result of that if these appointments are made, probably all from one political party, largely on the recommendation of Democratic Senators and Representatives. It will at the very outset be considered as so tainted by politics that it will be entirely without the confidence of the people and will fail in its efforts.

I do not think there is any country in the world that does not make such commercial attachés virtually a part of a system under which politics is entirely divorced. They are regarded as in the same class with consular and diplomatic officials.

The Senator from Utah has called attention to the demotions in the office of the Public Printer. My recollection goes back to the year 1894 when there was a showing made of what was done then in that office, and as some of the reasons for discharges were so very interesting I am going to refer to a few of them.

I believe President Cleveland was at heart in favor of civil service; I think President Wilson is also; but I am reminded of a remark one time made by a Russian to a traveler in Russia. This Russian spoke very freely and said, "I believe the Czar is an excellent kind of a man, but I also think a great many things are going on that he does not know anything about." I am inclined to think that in some of these departments things were going on that President Cleveland did not know anything about, and I fear that in some bureaus and branches of the Government things are going on that President Wilson does not know anything about.

In that great establishment—the Government Printing Office—in one day 735 Republicans were discharged and as many Democrats put in their places. That day was known as Bloody Monday. On a subsequent day 420 discharges were made, and other changes were made, until 1,800 Republicans were discharged, and most of the places were given to Democrats.

The private secretary of the Public Printer under President Cleveland's second administration had a memorandum book in which he entered the reasons for these discharges, and I quote some of those reasons to show to what shifts those who have the appointing power may resort when they are unfriendly to civil service and desire to give some excuses for the discharge of those of the opposite party:

C. P. Armstrong was discharged June 13, 1894. The simple memorandum is added, "Not wanted."

W. R. Burgess, compositor, discharged June 13, 1894. Trimmer. Joined the Old Dominion Republican Club.

Richard M. Calhoun, watchman, discharged June 13, 1894. Active and offensive in politics.

C. Deering, forwarder, discharged September 22, 1894. Not grateful to Public Printer. Left in 1889.

James C. Toy, wagon messenger, discharged September 17, 1894. Not willing. Causes trouble. G. A. R.

E. A. Townsend, compositor, discharged May 18, 1895. Disorganizer. Not satisfied.

John W. Usilton, discharged April 1, 1895. Agitator; charges Public Printer is dishonest and tyrant.

That perhaps was a sufficient reason—insubordination.

William Wilkins, laborer, discharged July 20, 1895. Offensive partisanship.

P. Wood, laborer, discharged March 6, 1895. Veteran and radical.

W. T. Johnson, finisher, discharged March 12, 1895. Trimmer, and abuses Democrats under Republican administration.

M. E. McClain, discharged March 13, 1895. Daughter teacher in public schools.

Henry L. Mathers, compositor, discharged April 20, 1895. Agitator, trimmer; says he will be back in 1896 from Ohio as a Republican.

It was evident there was a system of espionage so that everything anyone said was reported.

George P. Silence, laborer, discharged March 13, 1895. Anti-Democrat.

George McCutcheon, discharged April 3, 1895. Veteran and vindictive.

M. R. Dutton, compositor, discharged March 1, 1895. Critical of Public Printer.

Frank A. Everts, compositor, discharged March 13, 1895. He said, "All will get back in two years."

Alice Daly, discharged June 9, 1894. Not needed; daughter in department; soldier's widow.

Mamie E. Fisher, discharged July 14, 1894.

Here is a reason—

"All her folks are solid Republicans."

John M. Gauntley, discharged June 19, 1894. Offensive Republican.

Here is one that should appeal particularly to our honored Vice President and to the two distinguished Senators from Indiana.

John F. Atkinson, discharged July 1, 1894. N. G. Lives in Indiana. [Laughter.]

John Green, jr., discharged June 1, 1894. Bitter Republican.

Fred Bogia, ruler, discharged July 1, 1894. Cranky Republican.

Blanche Carey, discharged June 19, 1894.

Here is a reason that will appeal to many: Husband a lawyer.

Allie Basey Pitts, discharged June 2, 1894. Married and lives with her husband. [Laughter.]

As much as to say a person who is domestically inclined, loyal, and does not separate from her husband must get out of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. STONE. I wish to ask the Senator where these reasons assigned for dismissal were obtained?

Mr. BURTON. They were obtained from a memorandum book of the private secretary of the Public Printer. His services were such that I believe he was transferred to a position under the Civil Service Commission and remained there for some time, and then resigned. The gentleman in question was recently a candidate from the city of New York for Public Printer, but President Wilson did not see fit to appoint him.

Mr. STONE. Was that book private property or public property?

Mr. BURTON. He left it in the Public Printing Office. I take it that it was public property. Whether it was public or private, I take it it gives adequately the reasons for these discharges.

Mr. STONE. Who furnished the information from that book?

Mr. BURTON. That does not appear. The book was found and these extracts were taken from it. There are a number of other items from it that I could give that are equally interesting with those I have stated.

Mr. STONE. Who took the extracts?

Mr. BURTON. They were taken by Mr. Landis, of Indiana, when a Representative in Congress. The book was in his possession for some time, perhaps only a few weeks.

Mr. STONE. Purloined by somebody?

Mr. BURTON. Not purloined. It was taken right out of its place. It was left there. He did not seem to have thought it proper for him to remove the book. At any rate, he left it there among the books.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator know that the whole book was not prepared by somebody and turned over?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly not.

Mr. STONE. How does the Senator know it?

Mr. BURTON. I know that these same lists were given out and investigated thoroughly about 16 years ago. At first the cry was made that they were not authentic, but they were found to be absolutely authentic by everyone.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean that the reasons were authentic?

Mr. BURTON. The book was authentic. I do not know whether the reasons were or not. I do not want to vouch for the reasons, which the private secretary gave.

Mr. STONE. The reasons given in the book, as stated, the Senator repeats here?

Mr. BURTON. Every one of them.

Mr. STONE. That seems like a very improbable story.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know about that. It might seem improbable.

Mr. STONE. It is a very improbable story, and I am surprised that a Senator of the high standing of the Senator from Ohio will repeat such trash as that seriously and make it the basis of an argument.

I wish to ask another question of the Senator. Did I understand the Senator to say that 700 people were fired from the Printing Office in one period of 24 hours?

Mr. BURTON. That is the statement made. It was not contradicted at the time it was made, in 1898.

Mr. STONE. And 700 were appointed?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. It was not contradicted at the time.

Mr. STONE. I am frank to say, I think that was a mighty good day's work; but I do not believe that the Printing Office was capable of doing that much work, however deserving, in that short space of time.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, well.

Mr. STONE. I think that is another one of those stories that the Senator from Ohio ought not to dignify with his importance.

Mr. BURTON. It is very well for the Senator from Missouri to speak of this as trash. It was not trash to these widows and Grand Army men who were turned out of their positions on these trivial grounds. They were holding their positions and doing their duty, and one by one they were thrown out on such pretexts as were given here by this private secretary. It is all very well to speak of it as trash and unworthy of mention, but it shows the methods that were adopted in getting men and women of one party out and getting those of another in.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him at this point, I hold in my hand a copy of the Fourteenth Report of the Civil Service Commission, of July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897. I find in that report the commission says, on page 404:

An examination of the evidence adduced during the investigation disclosed the fact that of the 77 persons reduced 76 were Democrats; of the 91 persons promoted 82 were Republicans, 2 were Democrats, and the politics of 7, 3 of whom were women, were unknown; of the 51 persons removed 35 were Democrats, 1 was a Republican, and the politics of 15, 7 of whom were women, were unknown; and of the 59 persons reinstated 43 were Republicans and the politics of 16, 6 of whom were women, were unknown.

That took place under a Republican Public Printer, and is embodied in the report of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BURTON. What year was that, did the Senator say?

Mr. FLETCHER. This is the Fourteenth Report of the United States Civil Service Commission, July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897.

Mr. BURTON. I am glad to note that after this wholesale demotion or discharge they began to observe civil-service rules. All this to which I have referred was in 1894 and 1895. I trust it means that they afterwards, perhaps under the direction of President Cleveland himself, established a fairer set of rules and pursued a fairer course.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Florida referred to the Republican administration.

Mr. BURTON. In 1896?

Mr. STONE. It shows that in the succeeding administration, when a large number were appointed or restored, or in some way put back into the service or put into the service, a very large per cent, ranging from 75 per cent and up, were Republicans and the politics of others unknown. The Senator says that he was glad to note that when the Republicans came in they began to enforce the civil-service rules. In other words, it is good civil service to put Republicans in and bad civil service to put them out and Democrats in. That is the theory upon which the law has been administered during the greater part of its existence.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I did not understand the year the quotation of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] referred to. Was it July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897?

Mr. FLETCHER. The report is from July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897. It was printed in 1898. It deals with the practice at the time Mr. Palmer was the Public Printer and had reference also to Mr. Benedict's career as a Public Printer.

Mr. BURTON. In point of time eight months of that year were under Democratic administration and four months under Republican, but it is hardly conceivable that with so many dismissals made at wholesale, and made for reasons such as I have read here, because they were veterans, cranky Republicans, and this, that, and the other thing—it is hardly conceivable, I say, that in justice to them and to secure the efficiency of the office there should not have been a considerable number reinstated. The first thing that would naturally be done under a Public Printer who was a Republican would be to cure in some degree the injustice perpetrated by his predecessor.

Oh, Mr. President, I do not deny that to some extent the civil-service rules and civil-service law have been manipulated by the administrations of both parties, but I submit that your party, gentlemen across the aisle, has been far and away the worst transgressor. The proof of it, and the most conclusive proof of it, is that in the case of these very important positions you are seeking to make breaches in the wall. You are seeking to exempt positions from the civil service at a time when, month by month and year by year, the merit system is becoming more and more thoroughly established, the work of the departments more efficient, and when, instead of making exemptions, every act of Congress, every new office which is created, should point in the direction of the strengthening of the merit system, so that we may remove from it the blight of politics, so that we may give to our young men and our young women the promise of a career. They should not be compelled to kotow to some Representative or Senator or person of political influence in order to obtain access to the service of the Government. They should be able to rely upon a system under which they may know that if they are well educated for serving the people and if they will give their time and attention to public service they will be rewarded; at least they will have equal opportunity with all the rest.

I desire to enter my most decided objection to this line that is inserted here. It is a backward step. I repeat, the proposal casts suspicion upon the whole plan. Its adoption would create distrust for these attachés. It furnishes an example under which, in other branches of the civil service, exemptions can be made and appointments made not according to merit nor with a view to efficiency in the public service, but from political favor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am largely in sympathy with the position which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] occupies with reference to the civil service and to its importance as a fundamental institution in government. Like him, I believe it is essential to the best service, and it ought to be, although it is not and never was enforced in the spirit as well as in the letter of the law. All parties in their platforms express devotion to civil service, and all parties in their practice, when in power, disregard it as effectually as possible, while professing compliance with the requirements of the statute.

Mr. President, the strictures which the Senator from Ohio has applied to the Democratic Party, and which he has reenforced by citing examples which occurred during the administration of President Cleveland, can be paralleled in the practices of the Republican Party in their administration of the system, and both will be paralleled, in all probability, by the practices of the Progressive Party in the event that that party should ever assume the reins of government. Hence I am entirely justified in asserting that the political parties of the country are none of them in love with the civil service and have observed its requirements only to the extent to which compliance is obligatory. The party of the minority, whichever it may be, is loyal to the merit system only so long as it remains in the minority. The party of the majority is hostile to that system only so long as it remains in the majority.

When Republicans accuse the Democracy of disregarding and violating civil-service regulations and Democrats accuse the Republican Party of the same practices, both of them are telling the truth. It is the old story of the pot calling the kettle black.

Wherever it is possible in the practical administration of the law to comply with its requirements and to disregard its spirit, that has been done by both of them, in so far as my experience goes. That is the reason, Mr. President, why, I presume, some exemptions from the system appear in bills which have been introduced and enacted into law by the existing Congress.

This suggests the query: How has the civil service been administered during the long period of Republican supremacy? We all know the procedure of the Civil Service Commission. It holds examinations and those who pass satisfactorily are reported to the various divisions of the Government in whose service the applicants desire to enter. The names of aspirants in a regular series represent the seniority of the application and the degree attained in the examination. Politics are not considered and ought not to be considered in this process. Probably, so far as the action of the Civil Service Commission is concerned, it does not enter into the problem at all. Yet it is a significant thing that the Republican Party, after a long lease of power, went out of office, turned the administration of governmental affairs over to its opponent, which soon discovers that from 80 to 85 per cent of the men and women who occupy the various subordinate positions in the departments of the Government are of the same political faith as the administration under which they were employed. This is not a coincidence. It is due to the deliberate action of the appointing power; and its successor, notwithstanding the provisions and the requirements of the civil service, is apt, when occasion arises, to discriminate in favor of members of their own party in precisely the same manner.

You may say that is reprehensible. I would hardly characterize the practice by so severe an expression, because it is human nature operating through political channels. Republicans do it; Democrats probably do it; and any other party that may come into power will do it until human nature changes or until the system is changed by adapting it to the conditions which call for its application.

So far as this amendment is concerned, I am in favor of it because of the declarations of my own party upon the subject. But, Mr. President, if I should live much longer than is probable, I do not expect to see the time when the spirit of the civil service shall be observed by any party so long as that party can avoid it.

Now, why not recognize these conditions and meet instead of attempting to overcome them by a process of crimination and recrimination? I think it is clear that the civil service has been carried further than it ought to have been. It has been made to apply to those who are virtually heads of departments, who represent administrative authority and are in a sense a part of it, instead of limiting its operation to the technical and clerical details of government. A postmaster, for example, is exempted from the civil service, and yet the deputy postmaster, who, so far as his duties are concerned, is the postmaster in fact, comes under the civil service. The same is true or has been until recently of United States deputy marshals. It is true in many of the departments of the Government.

There is no more reason, Mr. President, for exempting a deputy postmaster or a deputy marshal under the civil service than there is for placing an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury or an Assistant Secretary of State under the civil service, and if such an official should be placed under the civil service, then the President of the United States ought to be required to select his Cabinet from a list submitted to him for that purpose by the Civil Service Commission.

I know of nothing that can be urged against the application of the merit system as to every department of the Government the duties of which are mechanical, technical, or clerical. On the other hand, I know of no reason that would justify the application of the merit system to that class of appointees who in the discharge of their duty virtually represent and act for some part or portion of the administration in power. There should be harmony in such positions; there should be a complete unity in the general purposes and the general course of operations. Such conditions can not prevail where a part and portion of the acting power is of a permanent character with one political affiliation and political purpose and the other is changing and evanescent, which may or may not last over one administration, but which is out of political harmony with those holding the permanent positions. There is the difficulty; and this, I think, will continue, Mr. President, to operate adversely to the principle of civil service until it shall have been placed upon a more rational, systematic, and scientific basis. When that time comes, I think there will be fewer removals actually made for political reasons, but ostensibly made upon some other, than are being and have been done; but the universal extension or the proposed universal extension of the system to all classes and conditions of officials is bound to bring the system ultimately if not into disaster, at least into disrepute. What I have said bears more upon the general subject than upon the concrete instance which has provoked the discussion. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with the first part of the address of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] I most heartily agree. I think if we would sum up what the Senator has said in a sentence, it would be that he is in favor of the application of the civil-service principle wherever it can be applied, and that as to the extent to which it can be applied, he fears that it has been attempted to apply it in many instances where, from the very weakness of human nature, it can not work out satisfactorily. He says, or I understood him to say, that the head of a department, for instance, if the civil-service rules were applied to all of his subordinates, would be handicapped to a great degree, because they would not be in harmony with the political policies believed in by the head of the department.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I should be glad to have the Senator correct me, if that is not a correct statement of his view.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator has carried my proposition a little too far. Perhaps I can illustrate what my meaning was or what my expression was intended to convey.

The postmaster of the city and county of Denver is a presidential appointee. The appointee may be selected at the will of the President. The deputy postmaster of Denver is an official who is appointed from a list of names furnished the department for that purpose. The duties of the presidential appointee on the one hand and the duties of the deputy with whose appointment the President has nothing to do upon the other are identical; in other words, the deputy is the alter ego of the principal, just as a deputy sheriff performs the duties of a sheriff, just as a deputy clerk performs the duties of a clerk, just as an assistant secretary of one of the departments performs the duties of the head of the department. As to all subordinate places which are so directly identified with the principal as that the duties of the two are the same, I can conceive of no reason why the civil-service laws should apply to the one and not to the other; and I do not think that they should apply to the principal.

When you come down to the other employees of the post office in Denver, the money-order clerk, if you please, the delivery clerk, and the men who distribute the mails and collect them, those duties are, of course, in no wise connected with the administration of the office, except in so far as they constitute a part of the detail. I think as to the latter the civil service should be made applicable; as to the former, it should not be made applicable.

I may say, before I take my seat, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, that I intended to emphasize the assertion which I made concerning the manner in which the merit system has been applied by the different parties; and I do not criticize the Republican Party for it any more than I would the Democratic Party. In this office it so happens that nearly every one of the subordinates, although they were selected under the merit system, are men whose politics is in harmony with the power which existed and controlled at the time of their selection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will take up the identical illustration given by the Senator from Colorado and use that as a text. He says that in Denver the postmaster is appointed by the President, but that the deputy postmaster is appointed under civil service; that the duties of the postmaster and of the deputy postmaster are the same; that therefore the civil-service rules should apply to both, or they should apply to neither of them; and that he thinks the civil-service rules should not apply to the postmaster. Therefore, I conclude it would logically follow that these civil-service rules should not apply to the deputy postmaster. Now I have it correct. Then the Senator says that those officials under the deputy postmaster can properly be classified under the civil service, because their duties are not the same as those of the postmaster and of the deputy postmaster. I want to take up both of those propositions.

I think the Senator is right when he says that the duties of a postmaster and of a deputy postmaster are very much the same, and that there is no logical reason why one should be appointed because of his politics and the other one appointed on merit. I agree with that proposition; but I can not agree with the Senator in his next proposition that, therefore, since their duties are the same we ought to take them both out of the merit class and put them both on the political partisan pie counter. Instead of taking the deputy out from under civil service and putting him up for sale for the political parties to make bids for, I would take the postmaster off from the political pie counter and put him on a merit basis.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator is perfectly consistent, as he always has been, upon this proposition, but I should like to ask him at that point to what extent he would carry that principle upward? Where, in other words, would he draw the line between appointees under the merit system and those who are merely political?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator submits a difficult proposition to me when he asks me where I would draw the line. That is not material, however, on this question here, and it would be material at no time unless we are going to enact a new civil-service law and extend its limitations. I think they ought to be vastly extended. As to just where it ought to stop, of course, there would be honest reason for dispute, as there is now honest reason for dispute as to whether it has already gone too far. The Senator and myself do not agree on its present application. He thinks it has gone a little too far and I do not think it has gone quite far enough.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Nebraska always has an excellent reason for any position that he takes, and I was therefore curious to learn where the line would be drawn, because he would give a reason for doing so. The difficulty with me is that I can not concede the Senator's proposition with reference to the postmasters and at the same time deny it with reference to the President's Cabinet.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me a fair question, and, of course, he has only asked for my opinion, and that is what I shall give. The Senator asks me where I would draw the line. We were speaking particularly of the Post Office Department. So far as I am concerned now, I am perfectly willing to answer the question with the same frankness with which it was asked. I say, I would draw no line in the Post Office Department. There is not a single duty to be performed officially now from the office of Postmaster General in Washington down to the janitor in any post office in the land that is in any way connected with partisan politics. I would, if I could, place the entire department on a merit basis. I would take it entirely out of politics.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand the Senator by that statement to include the Postmaster General?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Then the President of the United States would be required under such a system to go to the names certified to him by the Civil Service Commission for a Postmaster General.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator must not put that construction on it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am putting it on the Senator's statement. If the Senator means it—and I must infer that he meant it—if I properly understood him, I understood him to say that he would apply it to the Postmaster General.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand perfectly well that so far as, for instance, the Constitution of the United States is concerned, it can not be done; it would be unconstitutional if we should pass a law of that kind. The Constitution provides that the President shall appoint the heads of departments. I am not saying that in a strictly technical legal sense we pass such a law, and I answer the Senator on my own judgment as to what ought to be done. I said I would draw no line. I admit that to accomplish such a purpose there would have to be a law drawn under the Constitution. I think such a law could be drawn to have the practical effect of putting the entire Post Office Department, including the Postmaster General, on a merit basis. We can not under the Constitution take away the appointing power from the President, but we can make the term of the Postmaster General 10 years, and provide that he shall not be removed except for cause. We can provide that no one in the department can be removed except for cause. We can make it an impeachable offense to remove a man for partisan reasons. We can declare the purpose of the Government to put the entire department on a business basis and put into the law the necessary safeguards to make it effective.

Mr. THOMAS. I had no intention of raising the constitutional question. Of course, we all know that I was looking at it as an abstract proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course that means that if I were selecting the Postmaster General of the United States politics would not enter into the consideration. The only letter suggesting an appointment that, I think, I have written to the present President of the United States, I wrote at the suggestion of some people who were very close to the President, who thought that he was a firm believer of having a business administration rather than a partisan one. I wrote to him suggesting the appointment of a certain individual, who is a Democrat, for Postmaster General. I remember that in that letter I said to the President that if I were President and making the appointment, this was the man I would select for this position, regardless of his politics.

But I think that is somewhat afield of the question. I want to go back to the illustration which the Senator from Colorado gave, taking up the Denver post office. The Denver postmaster has not a single official duty to perform in Denver that is in any way partisan. Why should the postmaster at Denver, who deals and does business with the people of Denver, lose his job or get his job simply because of the political belief of some man who is installed in the White House in Washington? Why would it not be just as reasonable to discharge the school-teachers in Denver when the political administration changes at Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not also true that the Postmaster General, in the discharge of the duties of his position, has no political office to perform?

Mr. NORRIS. That is absolutely so; and if under the Constitution a method could be devised by which that office could be made nonpartisan I should like to see it adopted. I think it can be done. I did not intend to discuss this branch of the subject, but I will say that I introduced a bill, which I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Colorado—and I do it in the best of faith, because I have absolute confidence in the Senator's earnestness, and I believe he will be converted to this principle—I introduced a bill in the preceding Congress, under a Republican administration, which, in my judgment, if it were enacted into law, would have placed the entire Post Office Department beyond the realm of partisan politics.

As I have said, it would not be possible under the Constitution to take away the appointment of the Postmaster General and of presidential postmasters from the President, but it would be possible, in my judgment, and an easy thing to enact a law that would have the effect of taking that department out of politics without taking away or attempting to take away the constitutional right of the President to make these various appointments.

I believe that the deputy postmaster of Denver, when he shows exceptional ability, ought to have an opportunity to be promoted to the position of postmaster, a higher, a more responsible, and a more remunerative position in the department. When he becomes postmaster, if by virtue of his ability and his familiarity with the duties connected with the office he demonstrates a capability for further promotion, he ought still to have before him an opportunity to advance in the Post Office Department without limit until he reaches the head of the department as Postmaster General in Washington.

I know it is always stated in answer to that kind of an argument, "Why, the Postmaster General is part of the President's Cabinet; he helps the President to map out his course, and gives him advice." There is no law providing for a Cabinet. I think it is fair to assume that the President, when he consults the Postmaster General, consults him in regard to the Post Office Department. He does not need to consult him about political matters. If he wants political advisers, he can seek anyone's advice, whether he is in or out of the service, whether he holds a Cabinet position or whether he does not.

If the Postmaster General were appointed for a term, let us say, of 10 years, similar to a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and provision were made for the advancement of every man in the Post Office Department according to merit, so that from its head down to its very foot there would be no politics in it, we would have in a few years the most efficient organization in that great department resting on a business basis that the world has ever seen.

There is nothing in the Post Office Department but business. The deputy postmaster at Denver, the city used by the Senator from Colorado as an illustration, learns on account of his ability and his fitness for the place and the work in his office how to take care of that great post office. His position is one that requires a great deal of ability and experience; he is really the head of it, so far as the management of the business affairs of the office is concerned, but above him, drawing a salary twice as large as his, sits a political partisan ornament, known as the postmaster. I do not say that he is always an ornament. I do not know who the postmaster at Denver is and I do not want the Senator from Colorado to get the idea that I am finding any fault either with past postmasters or the present postmaster at Denver.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the present postmaster at Denver is an esteemed friend of mine, appointed by President Taft.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no reference to personalities. I do not want the Senator to get that idea.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. I am talking of a general principle. When the postmaster, who is appointed over the deputy to draw the salary and hold the ornamental position while the deputy does the work, has been there for eight years, let us say, and has learned the duties of his office, he has finally, at the expense of the Treasury of the United States, been educated so that he can handle the Denver post office; but along comes a political change, and he goes out. He is efficient, then, and, if he had remained in office, he might run it properly and could perhaps have earned his salary; but some other man is put in, not because his predecessor was inefficient, but because in the White House there is a man who gives allegiance to a different political party than the President who had preceded him. That is the basis for it; that is the reason for it; and I submit to the business judgment of every Senator and every citizen that it is not right; it is not fair; it is not economy; and it ought not to be tolerated in the business department of our Government, as it would not be tolerated in the business department of any business corporation on earth.

Then, the deputy has a student on his hands. The man with the little salary, doing the work, teaches the new postmaster with the big salary what his duties are; and, when he gets him educated, another political party comes into power, or a different faction of the same political party comes into power, and the student whom the deputy postmaster has educated is thrown out again, and you go out into the political ranks and select some other partisan, not for his fitness particularly, but because he has done some political work for the man who succeeded to power, and who has the distribution of patronage at his disposal. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that the extension of the civil service ought to go forward instead of backward.

Now, let me read just a little from the last Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore. I do not know but that that platform is pretty well shot to pieces, and there may not be many planks left in it unrepudiated, and this particular plank has been repudiated several times heretofore, but I am going to read one part of the Democratic platform which is going to be raped to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether that particular plank in the platform was authorized by any State convention before it was voted on by the Democratic national convention? If not, I do not think it should be recognized, because that seems to be urged now as the new test of authenticity in party platforms.

Mr. NORRIS. That is according to the doctrine promulgated here the other day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it is just a little bit unkind, after the Democrats have been assisted by him in the violation of their platform, that he should now criticize them for it?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I did what my vote could do to help them violate it, not because I cared about violating their platform, but because I had repudiated the platform long before President Wilson did, and so I was only carrying out my idea in that instance.

The Democratic platform had nothing whatever to do with my vote. Of course no one claims that I was bound in any way by the Democratic platform.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that in repudiating the Democratic platform a day or two ago it strikes me that you repudiated all the platforms, for all the platforms of the Democratic and Progressive Parties favored free tolls, while the candidate of the Republican Party favored free tolls.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not bother me at all if I did; it would not hurt me any. I did what I believed to be right in the Panama Canal repeal bill, and in doing so no charge can be made against me, because it is claimed some Democrats violated their platform pledge when they voted the same as I did.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Nebraska did at one time approve the Democratic platform?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not say so. There were some parts of it I approved, and I am going to read a part of it which I approve.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I would infer from the statement the Senator made that he had repudiated it; that at some earlier stage it must have had his approval and sanction.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is getting technical now with terms.

Mr. O'GORMAN. No; the Senator from Nebraska would be the last Member of this body who would impress me as being a repudiator. I rather think his attitude has been consistent. He simply has condemned that platform from the beginning, and that is nothing unusual for him.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. Perhaps the term used by the Senator is better than "repudiated." I was about to read——

Mr. KENYON. Was that plank heard by the convention when it was read?

Mr. NORRIS. I have an idea that if you should get the history of it you would find that the present President of the United States many times before he was a candidate and during the time he was a candidate approved, not in specific terms this particular language, but he approved the idea here expressed and was one of the officials of a national organization having for its object the upholding of the civil-service laws of our country.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Before we accept the particular plank in the platform we must have something more to identify it by than the mere fact that the President publicly approved it during the campaign. That is no longer sufficient. I think the Senator had better withdraw his witness entirely.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not offering it because I am sure that the Democractic Party will follow it, but it seems to me that, having gone back on nearly everything else in the platform, they perhaps would take this opportunity to save this little one item and stand by it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Is it not a fact that that declaration in the platform is contrary to the traditional policy of the Democratic Party, and therefore not binding on them?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I think it is contrary to the policy that has been pursued during the present Congress to some extent, as I propose to show.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator another question. Was that plank adopted when the regular platform was adopted at the convention?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so; I was not there. I am reading from this little book containing the platforms of the two great political parties.

Mr. JONES. I noticed that one of the delegates to that convention made a speech sometime ago, and said that when this platform was adopted the members of the convention were demoralized mentally and physically, and I wondered under those circumstances whether or not any declaration would be binding.

Mr. NORRIS. I am afraid that some of my friends——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment—I am afraid that some of my friends, when they call attention to these particular things peculiar to the Democratic situation, will only furnish an argument for our Democratic friends to pass this law. If you do not call attention to all their past sins it may be that their consciences will be affected by what I shall read, and they will feel like making good this particular pledge. I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what I shall say is in no spirit of criticism, because I would not and could not criticize the Senator from Nebraska; but I believe we should proceed with the business of the country without any further discussion of platforms, because he must know, and all other men who think into things instead of around things must know, by this time, that a platform is made to "get in on." I am reminded of the old story of the brakeman on a passenger coach who spoke to a passenger standing upon the platform and said, "Get off of here." The passenger answered, "Can not a person stand and ride here?" "No," said the brakeman, "platforms are made to get in on, but not to ride on." [Laughter.] Having "got in on the platform," why weary the country further about riding on it?

Mr. NORRIS. Now we will proceed to the business of the Senate. I wish to say in passing, however, that I am not responsible for all these suggestions, and I hope the Democratic brethren will take this platform in good faith.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think about all the Senators on this side who voted with the Republicans on the tolls bill have aided the Senator in his attack upon the platform; and the Senator can now proceed with his fine sarcasm without further interruption and assistance from this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that whether there was any sarcasm, and if there was, whether it was fine, as far as coming from me is concerned, it would not have come had it not been for the interruptions on both sides of the Chamber. I will say to the Senator also that I have no desire to put this question into politics. I have no desire to make a partisan question of the particular motion that is before the Senate. I do not believe it ought to be such; and yet I think it is proper to read a portion of the platform upon which the Senator himself stood, and other Senators the same way. I do not think anyone would charge me with trying to be sarcastic or with any impropriety in doing that.

We have before us now a proposition to take out from under the civil-service laws the appointment of certain officials provided for by this bill. There is going to be $100,000, if this provision is agreed to, spent for that purpose. I am in favor of the motion which strikes out that part of the provision that takes it out from under the control of the civil-service law.

Let me read what I started to read a long while ago. This is from the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore:

> The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rightly enforced, to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service rendered to a political party.

I commend that to the Senate. I believe that is a statement of a principle that is right. If you did not believe it was right, or if the idea of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is right, then you ought to have added another provision to the platform which, in substance, would have said: "As soon as we get into office we are going to rape the civil-service law every opportunity we get." That would have been fair; that would have given the people notice, and there would have been some reason for passing the various laws that have been passed to take out from under the civil-service law the appointment of officials.

Since that platform was adopted you have taken by law the deputy United States marshals out from under the civil service. You have taken by law the deputy internal collectors out from under the civil service. You have taken out from under the civil service the appointments to be made under the income-tax provision of the tariff law. You have also taken out from under the civil service, by law, the appointments to be made by the Federal Reserve Board under the new currency act. Now you propose, under this law, to take out from under the control of the civil service the appointments to be made of these attachés that are to investigate opportunities for American commerce and American trade in foreign lands, and to put those positions upon a partisan political pie counter to be given to men because of political service rather than for merit.

I say that, now, without regard to the present administration. The appointments under this law are to be made by the present Secretary of Commerce. Even if we should concede that when he made those appointments he would not make them for partisan reasons, it would not be right to put in the law the right of the official to make them for partisan reasons or to give him that privilege and to take away the effect of the civil-service law. If this law is to be permanent, even though for argument sake we conceded the present Secretary would not consider politics in making the appointments, some succeeding Secretary would. It would become a fruitful source of paying political debts out of the Public Treasury. It will all come home to roost. History will repeat itself. Other parties will come into power at some time, sooner or later, and this law will be abused by them.

We are passing this law or establishing this precedent not for to-day nor only for the present administration. This law would be applicable if a Republican administration should succeed this one when the present term of our President expires and a Secretary of Commerce appointed for partisan reasons by a Republican President would go on and take all these men out, perhaps after they had just learned the business, and reward his political heelers by payment out of the United States Treasury under the ostensible purpose that they were traveling abroad to develop business for American commerce and American manufacturers and merchants.

These positions would be much sought after. A trip to Europe or a trip around the world, to pay some man for his influence in a convention or his control of a county or a State or a delegation from some place, would be a very beautiful reward. If those men must be rewarded, they ought not to be rewarded under any pretense that they are going to do something for the country and be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

This bill does not fix any particular salary. I suppose the Secretary of Commerce would arrange that matter himself; but it is a very nice opportunity either for this Secretary or, if the language is so that it would be continuous, for some succeeding Secretary. I am not claiming that some other political party would have any more virtue, my Democratic friends, than yours has. They would use it for the same purpose if they could.

It has been argued here by the Senator from Colorado, and it is an old argument, it is made in defense of every political machine that ever existed when they undertook to do something that was wrong, that some other party did the same thing.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not state that as an argument; I stated it simply as a fact.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to have the Senator make the suggestion he has made.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] gave a long list of Republicans removed for partisan reasons from the Government Printing Office. Immediately following that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] gave a list of Democrats who were removed under a Republican administration and Republicans put in their places for partisan reasons. Is that an answer? If that is an answer, and if that is a defense of the present Democratic administration, let me ask you, why did you not put that in your platform and say, "While we believe so and so," as I have read from your platform, "yet the Republicans have disregarded the civil-service law, and if we get into power we are going to disregard it, too, just as badly as they did?"

You came into power because you promised to do better than the Republicans had done, and the people believed you would do better; and you will stay in power just as long as they believe you are doing better, and no longer. It may be "Hobson's choice," perhaps, but the sentiment of the country of 50 years ago is not the sentiment of the country now; and it is no longer any defense, in defending one political party, to cite the sins of another one and say that they had done the same thing when they had a chance. The people are anxiously waiting for an administration that will make its promises good, and when you say that you are going to enforce the civil-service law according to its spirit, it is your honorable duty to do it, even though Republicans have violated it before you. As far as I am concerned, if you did do it I would be one of the first to commend you for doing it, and to say so openly.

I regret very much to hear Senators on this floor, when citations are made of putting a man out because of his politics and putting another man in contrary to the law, commend it. Many commendatory expressions have been made on the floor of the Senate on that kind of conduct. In reality, when the Public Printer or any other official turns out of office a man purely for partisan reasons and fills his place with another one for partisan reasons he has violated the spirit of the law, if not its letter. He may have succeeded in getting some technical manner by which he can do the act legally, but the spirit of the law is violated, and when such violations are commended on the floor of the United States Senate we can not expect public officials to do their duties fearlessly. If you will trace the history of almost any legislation where any similar question arose, where there was politics in it or patronage in it, if you will trace the history of the legislation of Congress for the last 25 years, you will find that argument always made. It was made by Democrats against Republicans when Republicans were in control, and Republicans came back and answered, and said: "You did the same thing when you were in control." Now, when Democrats are in control, after making the promises they have made to the people, they say, in answer to an accusation of this kind that is demonstrated, "Why, we are doing only what you did. Platforms are to get in on, and we pay no more attention to them after we are in."

We sometimes think, and I think too often, that these men who are trying to get promotions, who are demanding that the civil-service laws shall be violated for partisan reasons, control the politics of the country. They do not. Under the old régime of the control of parties, where one man carried a State in his hand and another one carried a convention in his hand, some of those things might have been true, and without a doubt were true. When a political machine had control they were in shape to make these demands. Public officers often forget now that when the machine is making a demand, in reality it is like the frogs in a pond; there are not very many of them, but they make a great deal of noise.

It is said, and it is said truly, too, by my friend from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that this law always will be violated. Of course it will. Every law will be violated. There have been violations in the past; there will be violations in the future, both of this law and of other laws which we may pass; but that is not any reason why we should not do the best we can to fulfill the law. Instead of pleading that we are unable to do anything to make conditions better, while admitting that they are wrong, we ought to devote our energies to trying to build up the civil-service law, correct its mistakes, punish those who violate it, and remove them from office, and we will have no trouble in the future.

I think the law ought to be changed in a great many respects. Instead of saying that it always will be violated and that all parties have violated it, why not, in a spirit of nonpartisanship and with the idea only of the benefit of the country, get together like men and correct the evils making it possible for a man to remove for the causes that have been used as causes in the past by both parties, and make it a criminal offense for any official to remove for partisan reasons any man under the civil service, and also make it a criminal offense for any Senator or other public official to ask that it be done? If half of the energy and half of the ability had been devoted to trying to correct the loopholes of the civil-service law that have been exercised in trying to avoid its provisions, we would have a law that would have made it impossible for these violations to have occurred without punishment for the violators.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the completion of the work upon this bill, but I do wish to put upon record my opposition to the feature of this amendment which prohibits the application of the civil-service rules to the appointment of the new commercial attachés; and I should like to call the attention of our friends on the other side of the Chamber to the fact that this amendment relates to a field of government service regarding which there is not even the slender excuse that may exist in some of the departments where appointments have been made for political reasons.

Of course, sir, the civil-service system of appointment upon examination, when it was first introduced, had to contend against inveterate custom and inveterate prejudice. It was exceedingly unpopular among a great part of our people, particularly those who had been active in politics; and it has taken a long time to eradicate the idea, first publicly proclaimed upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from my own State, that "to the victors belong the spoils." I think, however, there has been a steady and gradual progress in the acceptance of the method of appointment which is provided in the civil-service rules and the statutes under which those rules are made.

Of course, there has been a great unevenness in this progress. It has been much greater in some departments than in others. There are certain departments of the Government in which the change has been practically complete.

We have the rule of appointment upon merit, to be ascertained primarily by examination, in force in the Army of the United States; and I think it is safe to say, upon some experience and observation, that for many years political affiliations or political recommendations have had substantially no influence in determining appointments to the Army.

The same thing is true as to the Navy of the United States. For a great many years the appointments in the Navy have been made without reference to political affiliations.

It is now a considerable number of years since the same change was introduced in the foreign service of the United States. In the year 1906 the administration then in power—and it is of no consequence whether it was Republican or Democratic, for I do not admit to my mind in the consideration of this subject any question as between the parties—formulated a series of civil-service rules, under the authority of statute, in accordance with which all consuls and consuls general of the United States were to be appointed on the basis of examination, and expressly excluding from consideration all ideas of political affiliation or political influence. From that time to this, or at all events until the beginning of the present administration, and I believe since the beginning of the present administration—and I discriminate only because I was more familiar with the subject before than I have been for the last year and a quarter—the appointments to the Consular Service of the United States have been made as freely upon the nomination of a Democrat from a Democratic State as upon the nomination of a Republican from a Republican State.

That change from the old system of political appointment to consulates was made upon full conference with the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. It has resulted, sir, in a very great, signal, and salutary improvement of the Consular Service of the United States. It would be a great misfortune to go back to the old system, under which Senators owned consulates and put men into consulates for the benefit of their constituents or friends of their constituents.

Now, sir, this amendment proposes to create a series of officers who are virtually members of the foreign service of the United States. It reads:

Commercial attachés. Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without examination under the civil-service rules, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States.

Then there is a provision for clerks and traveling expenses.

Those, sir, are the duties which consuls have to perform. The difference between these officers and the consuls we already have are, the one, that these gentlemen will range freely; they will not be confined to particular localities; and the other, that they will report to the Secretary of Commerce, instead of reporting to the State Department, and that department sending their reports to the Secretary of Commerce.

I do not think we can escape the conclusion that the prohibition in this amendment against appointing under civil-service rules these commercial attachés to render a foreign service, accredited by the Department of State, is a serious blow to the present system of nonpartisan, nonpolitical appointments of consuls and consuls general. It is a disapproval by the Congress of the United States of that method of appointment. It has no justification in any error or abuse of the past, for these are new offices; they are not put into vacancies made by removing a member of one party or another. The question here is plainly whether the Congress of the United States shall put the stamp of its disapproval upon the progress that has been made in the applications of the principles of the civil-service reform in the foreign service of the United States. If the amendment passes as it is phrased, this prohibition against the examination of these applicants means that Congress gives it warrant to all the abuses which have been referred to; that Congress is against the further improvement of the civil service; that Congress looks with unconcealed satisfaction upon all the attempts to evade and set at naught that manner of appointment, and that we are going back step by step to the old spoils system in which we individually force upon the executive officers of the United States appointments made not upon their judgment, not upon their knowledge, but upon the exigencies of politics in our own States and districts.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the civil service has put into office in the South a class of people which has made the service unpopular with the white people of that section without regard to political affiliation. As a matter of fact, certain branches of the service have been so Africanized as to make it a stench in the nostrils of our best people. For that reason, so far as it applies to the State from which I come, I am not particularly enamored of the system. But the Democratic Party in its platform is committed to civil service. Our Baltimore confession of faith commits us to the enlargement of the civil-service system. We are committed to the proposition that it shall be perfected and enlarged rather than disfigured and limited in its scope.

I believe that the promise we made to the people before the election ought to be redeemed now. And while I dislike to vote against my partisan friends on this side of the Chamber, I shall nevertheless vote to carry out the platform promises. I shall vote to extend the service rather than to contract it. I believe, Mr. President, that men trained in the various departments of the Government service are necessarily better equipped to perform the functions of the office or place to which they may be appointed than untrained men. And while I want to see all of these places filled by Democrats, my interest in the public service is superior and above my desire to serve my party. I wish it were so that in the South we could limit all of these offices to capable white men rather than being annoyed by the negroes who are making the civil service so very unpopular in that section. I am going to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	O'Gorman	Stone
Bankhead	James	Overman	Swanson
Bristow	Jones	Perkins	Thompson
Bryan	Kenyon	Pittman	Thornton
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Tillman
Chamberlain	La Follette	Robinson	Vardaman
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Root	Warren
Clapp	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	West
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shively	White
Crawford	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Cummins	Nelson	Smoot
Fletcher	Norris	Sterling

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, unfortunately I was detained in an important committee hearing and I have not had the advantage of hearing all the debate on this question. I do not know whether the Senator in charge of the bill has explained what these commercial attachés to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce without examination under the civil-service rules are to do. Is it contemplated that they are permanently to reside abroad, like a consul?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, they are expected to reside abroad. The amendment itself explains what their duties are to be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I notice that the amendment, after providing "for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés, to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each," provides that this sum may be expended, among other purposes, "for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, travel to and from the United States," and so forth. I did not know whether it was contemplated that they were to be a series of residents abroad, or whether they were to be field agents of the Department of Commerce abroad, or both.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They were not expected to be traveling agents. I understand they are expected to spend their time abroad promoting the foreign commerce of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator, are our consuls abroad now under the civil service?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In part they are expected to advance the commerce, but they have many other duties.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator did not understand me. Is our Consular Service at present covered by the civil-service laws?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes. If I may be permitted a word, I do not understand that the Consular Service is controlled by what we mean by the civil-service law, but there is a civil-service system equally efficient, a system introduced by my colleague when he was Secretary of State, which has been in effect ever since his time, and which I believe is being respected in every detail by this administration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would then like to ask the Senator's colleague, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], if he is able to inform me to what extent our Consular Service is governed by the civil service.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the Consular Service is governed by a code of rules established by the President under the authority of the civil-service provision contained in the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is a different code of laws from those which are applied to the domestic service, but it is a code based upon the same principles, following the same methods, and enacted by the same authority. It is as truly a civil-service system and a code of civil-service rules as the system under which clerks are appointed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure the Senator from Connecticut understands, as well as every other Senator, that appointments in the Consular Service are controlled, as the Senator from New York says, not by the regular Civil Service Commission, but under rules of like character laid down by the Secretary of State, first inaugurated by the Senator from New York when he was Secretary of State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The object of my inquiry was to ascertain from the Senator from New York whether our consuls resident abroad had to pass some sort of an examination in the nature of a civil-service examination under the law or the rules of the department warranted by law.

Mr. ROOT. They have, Mr. President. They have long had to pass an examination, but since 1906, eight years ago, they have had to pass an examination by a board the head of which is the chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission, and it is an exceedingly stringent system of examinations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then it is fair to say, I assume, that the appointment of our consuls at the present time is controlled by the principle of the civil-service law. It is a merit system, and they have to show their qualifications in order to get an appointment.

Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia why these attachés abroad of the Department of Commerce should not be subject to a similar system of determining their fitness for the positions to which they may be appointed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was the opinion of a majority of the committee that better men for this particular service could be gotten by the appointment by the Secretary of Commerce instead of by these examinations. I merely state that position, because I do not think any good would come from a discussion between the Senator from Connecticut and myself. Every Senator on this floor knows all about this question, and knows what his views are. It seems to me all we need now is a vote. I do not think it would do any good for me to engage in a discussion with the Senator from Connecticut. He and I differ. He knows what his views are and I know what mine are, and every Senator on this floor must know what his views are on this civil-service question. We believe that better men can be gotten by the appointment by the Secretary of Commerce and we have so reported. If the Senate does not agree with it, just let Senators vote it down. The only thing, I think, which will serve the country now is a vote and not a running discussion between the Senator from Connecticut and myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not invited the Senator to enter upon any discussion. I appreciate that taking the position he does and holding the view he does upon this question, it perhaps would be more prudent not to engage in any discussion upon the merits of the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing for the Senator to enjoy the opinion of his own superiority. I hope it will be a delight to him. I said what I did purely in the interest of the dispatch of business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not yielded to the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have said about all I wanted to say, whether the Senator yielded or not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator had said probably all he wanted to say and probably more than he would have wished to have said. In spite of that exuberance of the Senator I understand so far there is no reason on the record why these gentlemen should be exempted from the rules which the Government of the United States thinks are necessary to impose in the interest of the public service in the case of similar appointees of other departments whose duties are practically the same.

So, Mr. President, there being no reason presented why these commercial attachés should be exempted from the policy pursued by the Government in similar cases, in appointments involving similar abilities, I assume that no reason exists except the desire of the party in power to create $100,000 worth of offices to be filled solely in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, without any provision in the law as to how much each one is to receive. One hundred thousand dollars is appropriated in a loose lump sum without even naming how many of these attachés shall be hired for it. It is left to the uplift tendencies and the civil-service love of this head of a department to divide among the faithful according to his sweet will.

If that is to be considered a fulfillment of a profession for advancing the civil service of this Government upon an impartial basis and as a manifestation of the keen desire of the party in power to regulate carefully our expenditures and to reduce what they have been denouncing as the extravagance of the Republican Party, I submit the question upon its merits, if it has any, and am perfectly willing to join with the Senator from Virginia in taking a vote and making a record upon the question.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to what I think is an inadverience on his part in saying that no reason has been stated for prohibiting the application of the civil-service merit system to these appointments. I understood the Senator from Virginia to state a reason very distinctly, and to state it with his customary frankness and courage, and the reason he stated will be taken and must be taken by the people of the country as the reason which actuates the Democratic majority in this Chamber if they keep this provision in the bill. He said he believed that we would get better officers through an appointment by the Secretary of Commerce than we would get through the civil-service system.

That is, Mr. President, this amendment to the bill is conceived in a spirit of general hostility to the civil-service reform system, and, if adopted, it is fair notice that the dominant party in this Congress will do whatever they dare do to break down that system.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from New York can not justly draw any such inference from what I have said. I have indicated no hostility to the principle of civil service. I said that for this particular service it was my opinion and the opinion of the committee that better men could be obtained by selection through the Secretary of Commerce. I believe that better service can be obtained by selection rather than by examination in this particular service; but I declared no hostility to the general principle of the civil-service system; I entertain no such opinion; and I speak only for myself when I say that I believe, in the main, it is an excellent service and has done great good. The Democratic Party has no purpose of destroying it; I have no such purpose; and I have said nothing to lead to such a conclusion. I said that for this particular service, which is a peculiar one, the officers should be appointed by selection of the Secretary of Commerce, and not by examination under arbitrary rules. I firmly believe that; but in believing that, and declaring that, and expressing the desire in this way to get the very best possible service for the country, I did not in any way indicate hostility to the principle of civil service.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, when I said that no reason had been given why this should be done, of course I meant no reason that could stand intelligent examination, no reason that could stand before the country. Of course I heard what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] said—that, in his individual opinion, this Democratic Secretary of Commerce could get better men than the civil-service system could furnish if it were not ravished and repealed—but I did not consider that additional reason, if I may call it such, given by the Senator from Virginia, why in this particular case this particular Secretary under this particular administration should select, was such a reason as I was seeking.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Wait just a moment, until I finish the sentence, and then I will gladly yield. Why in this particular case it so happens by some inherent, I have no doubt, but not visible to the naked eye, reason that better men will be secured by violating the method which experience and all the political platforms have agreed would result in better service in all other cases, is one of those mysterious things that I am not competent to pry into nor to understand; but, of course, I assume it exists, for I know it did exist in that other "particular and peculiar case" where some "particular and peculiar" reason was given when we ravished the civil service to accommodate some of our Democratic hungry, faithful, outside-of-the-breastworks patriots, who were put into the offices of internal revenue collectors and United States marshals and deputies; and you will find, Mr. President, wherever the civil service is to be torn down and thrown to the winds in order to provide places for the Democratic faithful who are yearning for them that it is a "particular and peculiar case," which to the naked eye does not bear any peculiar evidence of requiring peculiar treatment, but which, to those skilled in the psychology of this situation, it is perfectly apparent demands that remedy.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I suppose this is an appropriation of $100,000 to furnish provender; from the discussion that has gone on here and from the language in the bill it appears to me purely political provender that is to be handed out. At this time, when deficits are being created by extravagance, and our revenues are declining, though new systems of taxation have been discovered, I think that it is not very opportune to waste the public money in this way simply to give a lot of men jobs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in the committee amendment found on page 132, in line 20, to strike out the following words:

Without examination under the civil-service rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I think that under the terms of my pair I am entitled to vote, though I shall not vote at this time, but will withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). Inadvertently I voted without mentioning by pair. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the general pair which I have with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently, forgetting for the moment that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], with whom I am paired, was not present. I now transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who has a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ashurst	Clapp	Lane	Root
Borah	Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brady	Cummins	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Jones	Norris	Thomas
Bristow	Kenyon	Page	Vardaman

So the amendment of Mr. SMOOT to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer an amendment, on page 17, line 16, after the figures "$2,000," to insert "stenographer, $1,000," and then, in line 17, to change the figures from "$6,600" to "$7,600." That is to provide for the Joint Committee on Printing a stenographer, who is very much needed. A resolution has heretofore passed the Senate providing for this employee. Four committees of the House and of the Senate, two of each body, have approved of that proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That amendment was never presented to the committee, as the Senator from Florida was absent from the city when the bill was being considered by the committee. I am satisfied, however, that such stenographer is needed, and, so far as I am concerned, I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 16, after the numerals "$2,000," it is proposed to insert "stenographer, $1,000," and in line 17 to strike out "$6,600" and insert "$7,600."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send forward an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 8, and, for the purpose of having the amendment considered, I ask that the vote whereby the committee amendment on that page was adopted may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the vote by which the amendment was adopted is reconsidered, and the amendment is open to amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, at the end of line 10, after the numerals "$2,500," it is proposed to insert "assistant clerk, $2,220."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], was also absent from the city when the bill was being considered by the committee, and this amendment proposes to give to the committee of which he is chairman the clerical force it has had in the past. There was in previous appropriation bills a clerk provided for that committee by name—I refer to Mr. Pulsifer—but we struck that out of the last appropriation bill. This amendment makes for the Committee on Commerce the same provision in regard to assistant clerks as is made for the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Commerce has only three employees attached to it now, and this allows the present chairman of that committee the clerical force allowed the committee when the late lamented Senator from Maine, Mr. Frye, was chairman of the committee. The Senator from Arkansas, who is now chairman of that committee, wants the same force that was formerly provided. I hope the amendment may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 130, line 25, I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000."

In explanation of the amendment, I desire to state that the Secretary of Commerce has established a number of branch bureaus of foreign and domestic commerce. Such branches have up to the present time been established in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and New Orleans. There have been applications for the establishment of similar branches at Atlanta, Seattle, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, and Boston. The Secretary of Commerce wrote a letter to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] indorsing in the strongest terms the establishment of one of these branches at Boston. It will take $10,000 for that purpose, and this amendment is offered at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts with that object in view.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I now offer the amendment which I sent to the desk some time ago, to come in on page 107.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of line 12, page 107, the following:

For the temporary employment of typewriters, at $2.50 per day, who shall be certified by the Civil Service Commission in such numbers as may, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Patents, be necessary to keep current the work of furnishing copies of records, $10,000.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, the Patent Office furnishes each year typewritten copies of records embodying from 25,000 to 30,000 words. This is a source of revenue to the Government. There is not sufficient clerical help from time to time to keep these orders for records fully discharged, and especially in the summer months, when some of the employees are away on their vacations there is a congestion of these orders. When the orders are not filled, at times the persons interested have the work done through outside agencies.

I am informed—and the information comes from the department head, from Mr. Lane himself—that each of these typewriters, costing the Government $2.50 a day, actually produces a return of $10 a day to the Government in the way of income earned in this manner.

The amendment which I suggest is an amendment proposed by the Interior Department. I understand the chairman of the committee is familiar with the merits of the amendment, and I think it should be adopted. To defeat it would be to deprive the Government of a certain income which it will receive if these typewriters are kept at work during the summer months.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment at the bottom of page 153 was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 153, line 25, after the word "this," the words "or any other" were inserted as a committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had intended, at the time the committee amendment was agreed to, to make a point of order against those three words, "or any other." The bill as it stands provides in part as follows. I shall read only a very small portion of it:

That no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used during the fiscal year 1915 for the purchase of any typewriting machine—

And so forth.

It is, of course, within the power of Congress to impose a limitation upon the expenditure of the money carried in this bill without violating the rule of the Senate, but it seems to me that when this paragraph provides that neither the money appropriated in this bill nor in any other act shall be expended for a given purpose it clearly becomes general legislation upon an appropriation bill. Other acts of Congress which have appropriated money, and other acts——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut make the point of order?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In order to save time and facilitate the disposition of the bill, I consent to the striking out of those words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order being made, the Chair sustains it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi offers the following amendment:

On page 116, line 4, under the "Division of Assistant Attorney General," strike out "one, $2,000," and insert in lieu thereof, "two at $2,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi also moves to change the total in line 7, so as to read "$24,270," instead of "$22,270."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 16, under the head of "Collecting internal revenue," it is proposed to insert the following:

For one stamp deputy at Portland, Me., $600.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether that has been estimated for?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has not been estimated for, so far as I can recall. It was rejected by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine for what reason he offers the amendment, and whether it is really necessary?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I have here a copy of a letter which the collector of internal revenue for that district wrote to the commissioner recommending the increase. It is only $300. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue says, in reply, that the salary is lower than it is in other places, and it ought to be increased, but that because of existing law, the amount having been appropriated in a lump sum, the increase can not be made unless there is some amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I merely desire to correct what I said. I was addressing myself, as I supposed, to an amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE]. I do not think this amendment was ever before the committee, but in a conversation with the Senator from Maine it commended itself very strongly to me as a just one.

Mr. JOHNSON. The only increase asked for is from $300 to $600. The collector of internal revenue reported that he could not obtain anybody to perform the work for $300.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator to read the letter from the commissioner?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have here a letter from the commissioner, which reads as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 19, 1914.

SETH W. JONES, Esq.,
Collector Internal Revenue, Portsmouth, N. H.

SIR: This office is in receipt, by reference from Representative MCGILLICUDDY and Senator JOHNSON, of your letter of the 13th instant concerning the manner in which the business of the stamp deputy at Portland, Me., your district, is conducted and in which you recommend that the compensation of that place be increased from $300 to $600 per annum.

You say that Stamp Deputy Cummings has never done the work of said office, as he could not for the salary, but has farmed it out to a female stenographer, giving her one-half of the salary ($150) for doing the work.

Concerning this matter you will please see that this practice on the part of the stamp deputy at the place mentioned is discontinued at once, and that the person who performs the duties of stamp deputy receives the salary allowed for the place by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the recommendation of this office.

Concerning the compensation of the place referred to, this office is of the opinion that compared with the compensation now being received by other stamp deputies who perform a like service the stamp deputy at Portland should receive a greater compensation, but in view of a provision of the act of March 4, 1913, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, this office is not authorized to recommend an increase in the compensation of such place. The provision referred to is, in part, as follows:

"SEC. 7. That no part of any money contained herein or hereafter appropriated in lump sum shall be available for the personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the previous fiscal year * * *."

In all probability the compensation of the stamp deputy at Portland was fixed at a time when deputy collectors were embraced in the competitive classified civil service and the deputy who accepted the place was appointed without regard to civil-service law and rules, and under a rule of the civil-service commissioner could not receive compensation in excess of $300 per annum.

Your letter of the 16th instant on the same subject reached this office yesterday and is fully replied to herein.

Respectfully,

W. H. OSBORN, Commissioner.

In accordance with that letter and the statement of the collector of internal revenue, I saw the chairman of the committee after the bill was reported, and was advised that the only way the amendment could be offered at this time was to ask for an increase from $300 to $600.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask to have the amendment stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 16, the Senator from Maine proposes to insert:

For one stamp deputy at Portland, Me., $600.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that is adopted, then I shall ask that the lump sum be decreased by $300.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, the stamp deputy to-day is paid out of the lump-sum appropriation the amount of $300 per annum?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, the Senator wants to provide in the bill a specific appropriation of $600 for that particular office?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And he will then ask that the lump-sum appropriation be decreased by $300?

Mr. JOHNSON. Three hundred dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. The only real objection to that, in my mind, is that there is no deputy stamp collector specifically provided for in any other State in the Union. This is naming that particular office in that particular State. I think it ought to be done, if it is to be done at all, in conformity with the appropriations that go to all of the other States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator will appreciate the fact that some time ago we adopted an amendment here forbidding any officer to raise a salary from a lump sum. All the other stamp deputies in the United States have salaries of $500, $600, and on up. This seems to be the smallest there is. The commissioner says he can not raise this salary out of the lump sum because of the amendment I introduced, as the Senator will remember, two years ago; so the only way to get it done is to do it specifically.

Generally the stamp deputies get all they are entitled to, but this man can not get anybody to employ for $300. Nobody will take the office. If you want a stamp deputy at this point, therefore, you will have to give as much as $600, and the only way to do it is to name it specifically in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I now move, on page 64, line 6, to strike out "$2,190,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,189,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 15, lines 11 to 16, was adopted.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi moves to reconsider the amendment agreed to on page 15, lines 11 to 16, relative to the purchase of automobiles for the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I propose an amendment, as follows: On page 49, line 9, after the words "expert accountant, $3,000," I move to insert the words "chief of division of postmasters' accounts, $2,750"; in the same line, to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three"; and at the end of the paragraph, in line 18, to strike out "$433,340" and insert "$433,840".

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, under the heading "Office of Auditor for Post Office Department," in line 9, after the words "expert accountant, $3,000" and after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert: "chief of division of postmasters' accounts, $2,750"; and on page 49, line 9, to strike out "four," where it reads "four chiefs of division," and insert "three"; and to change the total in line 18 to read "$433,840."

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the object of these amendments is to increase the compensation of the chief of the division of postmasters' accounts by the sum of $500. This was in the estimates of the department.

There are four divisions under the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and this is by far the leading division. In fact, it has very little less than three times the average number of employees of the other divisions. The position to which the amendment refers is a very important position. The Post Office Department estimated that the compensation should be increased, and reduced its estimates elsewhere in order to get increased compensation for this very important official, whose present compensation is very little more than many of the clerks under him are now receiving.

The following statement will give the Senate some conception of the situation:

> The Division of Postmasters' Accounts has assigned to it the most important work in the bureau, namely, the audit of the postal and money-order accounts of 58,000 postmasters, in which practically the entire revenue of the Postal Service is involved, as well as all expenditures under appropriations for that service which postmasters are authorized to disburse; the payment and collection of balances and the settlement of accounts of postal and money-order depositories, including the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States and the Superintendent Division of Finance, Post Office Department. It also conducts the correspondence pertaining to those settlements, and keeps a record of all data necessary for the auditing function.
> The division consists of 140 employees, with salaries ranging from $1,200 to $2,000 per annum. The character of the work requires the highest clerical ability, as the standing of the bureau as an auditing office is largely determined by the work done on the Division of Postmaster's Accounts.
> In view of the importance of the work of this division, the ability required to properly conduct the business, and the small difference between the maximum salary of the clerks and the compensation of the head of the division, the recommended increase will provide a salary more commensurate with the existing duties and responsibilities of the position.

In conclusion I should like to say that it is exceedingly poor policy not to give the men who are doing important supervisory work proper compensation in the Government service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this amendment was before the committee. We gave it as careful consideration as we could, and concluded we could not increase this salary. It is simply an increase of salary. On the same line of argument as that used by the Senator from Maryland, you might increase every salary in this list.

It is absolutely necessary to exercise some restraint on our disposition to be overgenerous to the clerks in the employ of the Government. Many of them perhaps are underpaid; but in this case $2,250 is what this clerk has been receiving, and it seems to me it is an adequate compensation.

I hope the Senate will not start here the system of just letting Senators get up and, to satisfy their own feelings for some employee of the Government, start to increase the salaries in this bill. If so, there is no end to it.

Unless some Senator wants to speak further on it, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a minute, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the chief of division in the office of the Auditor for the War Department receives only $2,000, and the chief of division in the office of the Auditor for the Navy Department receives only $2,000. It is true that in the case of the chiefs of division of the auditors for the other departments, where they are designated as "chief clerk and chief of division," they receive $2,250, and all four of the chiefs of division in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department receive $2,250, the highest salary that is paid any chief of division.

I want to say to the Senator offering the amendment that there appeared before the committee parties interested in the increase of the salary of the chief of division from $2,000 to $2,250, and they gave as a reason for the increase that we are paying chiefs of divisions of the Post Office Department that amount, and if this is carried to-day, on the next appropriation bill every one of them will be asking for an increased salary to the same amount.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I wish to suggest, before the Senator makes his motion to lay on the table, that this is an estimate of the Post Office Department. The proposition was never heard of by me until a few minutes ago. The proposition involves the bringing of the total for this item up to the exact amount the total of this item was last year. The total for this item last year was $433,840, and the estimates for this year were reduced by the Post Office Department in order to provide for this increase, not by any emotional sympathy of the Senator from Maryland but by the cold calculation of the department in the exercise of its judgment that this change should be made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say, in answer to the Senator, that the same line of reasoning would control every time the committee refuses to make appropriations over what they were last year. By the same kind of a rule we would increase the amount so as to make it equal. These people have been getting $2,250 a year, and they have received their appointments by reason of that rate. If there is going to be a change in the entire system of the payment of clerks, it might be well to consider the question with relation to this matter; but when the Senator says he never heard of it until a few minutes ago, to come in and move to raise the salary $500 in the case of four persons, it seems to me is something it would not be wise for the Senate to adopt.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator misapprehends what I said. I wish it to apply to only one person. It involves the raising of one salary $500, and is the estimate of the Post Office Department for one of the most important positions of that department.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator from Maryland takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. Do I understand that he offered this amendment without a knowledge of the facts concerning it until a few minutes ago? And I should like to ask him whether that information was furnished by the parties interested.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. No; the information came from the department estimates and from the official over the party interested, and one who was perfectly disinterested in his statement on the subject, so far as I can judge.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in on page 35.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 18, strike out "$4,500," the first numeral in the line, and insert "$5,500," and strike out

"$4,000," where it appears in the line, and insert "$5,000," so that if amended it will read:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For commissioner, acting as president of the commission, $5,500; two commissioners, at $5,000 each.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall take but a few moments of the time of the Senate. I offered an amendment in the committee providing for a greater increase than this amendment proposes, but it was voted down very strongly. Probably this amendment will be voted down also, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the increase in the work of the commission.

I consider it to be one of the most important organizations in the executive department of the Government. I believe myself in the civil-service system. I believe in everything that has been said about it here this afternoon. I am not in favor generally of increasing the salaries of the various officers. The members of the committee will bear me out in the statement that I have endeavored in the committee to keep down the appropriations as much as possible. But it does seem to me that there is a very great inequality in the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners, especially when compared with many other officers of the Government occupying positions that I think are not nearly so important nor so responsible as are the positions which the members of this commission fill. If you will go through this bill, you will find position after position where, in my judgment and in the judgment of others—although Senators may differ, of course—the positions are not so important as the positions held by these commissioners, and yet a higher salary is given. I do not think they have such great responsibilities and duties devolving upon them.

The salaries of the members of this commission were fixed a great many years ago. I do not think they have been increased since the commission was organized. When the commission was organized there were in the classified service to be considered by it only 13,789 positions. That was in 1883. This number had increased in March, 1895, to 15,573 positions; June 30, 1897, to 87,104 positions; June 30, 1901, to 108,967 positions; June 30, 1905, to 171,807 positions; June 30, 1909, to 234,940 positions; and June 30, 1913, to 232,597 positions, showing the wonderful growth of the business of the Civil Service Commission.

Not long ago we placed under the commission the supervision practically of all the employees to be selected for the physical valuation of the railroads. They have to look after that. Then we placed the second assistant postmasters under the commission, and a great many other positions which warrant the statement made here as to the tremendous growth of the offices that are brought under the classified service. If we are going to have a Civil Service Commission—as we are going to have it, for the people of the country are behind it, and it is not going to be done away with—it should be just as efficiently administered as possible, for the commissioners who have charge of it have tremendous responsibilities.

I am not going to take further time, because I know the chairman of the committee is anxious to get through with the bill; but I really believe we should make the increase I propose here, of only $1,000, in the salary of these commissioners, which I understand is the salary which they were given when the commission was organized, in 1883. What I propose to give them is not as much as they really deserve, but we certainly ought to give them this additional amount.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to make an error, but the salary of the commissioner, acting as president, has been increased.

Mr. JONES. It was increased $500.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. It was originally $4,000, and it has been increased to $4,500.

Mr. JONES. I am glad the Senator called that to my attention, because, of course, I did not intend to misstate it.

Mr. KERN. Let me ask the Senator if the commissioners are demanding an increase of salary?

Mr. JONES. I do not think they are. Their position is very different from that of other bureau chiefs. They have nobody really to speak for them. They are not demanding it, I understand. I suppose they would have considerable delicacy about coming to the Senate. An increase of their salaries has been estimated for, I know. An estimate, I think, of $6,500 was made.

Mr. KERN. Has the Senator heard of any of them threatening to resign?

Mr. JONES. No; I think not. If that is to be used as an argument, then, of course, we would not increase any salaries, because there are very few of these people who are threatening to resign. I know there have been one or two increases in this bill where the head of the department came and said unless there was an increase made the party would resign. Yet there is not any doubt it would be very easy to get somebody who would competently fill the place. At least we would wonder what would become of the Government if a man happened to be stricken with palsy or heart failure or something of that kind when holding the position. It does not seem that the question suggested by the Senator from Indiana is a good argument to apply to a position of this kind. It is a question whether these men are being justly paid for their services. It certainly does require those among the most competent men of the land to fill the place.

We should remember, when we are considering the question whether these men are being justly paid for their services, that it certainly does require most competent men to fill this place. I know one member of the commission and I know he is most competent to fill any position under the Government, as far as that is concerned. Of course, he is not threatening to resign. He does not have to hold the place. He is filling it, however, and giving the best of his time and the best of his talent to its duties. I have not any doubt that other members of the commission are equally competent.

Mr. KERN. I should like to know the name of the member of the commission to whom the Senator has referred.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Craven, a gentleman I have known for a great many years.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the commissioners need automobiles in their work, and if the Senator has that in mind in offering the amendment?

Mr. JONES. No; I think not.

We pay the Director of the Mint a salary of $5,000 a year. I do not imagine that it takes a man any more competent to handle the position of Director of the Mint than one to look after the qualifications of the various officers throughout the country. Yet we pay him $5,000 a year and I hear no objection to that.

We have an assistant treasurer in several different cities around through the country the duties of whose office may be filled by any ordinary business man—that of receiving and disbursing money. As a matter of fact, the work is done very largely by subordinates. Yet what do they get? In Chicago the assistant treasurer gets $5,000 a year; in the city of Boston he gets $5,000 a year; and in the city of New York he gets $8,000 a year. Why the assistant treasurer should get more in New York than in Chicago I do not know. I do not imagine that he works any more hours a day in the city of New York than does the assistant treasurer in Chicago. I do not imagine that he works any harder during the hours he does work in New York than does the assistant treasurer in Chicago. Yet he gets a salary of $3,000 a year more than the assistant treasurers in the other cities receive.

Then we have the Commissioner of the Land Office, who receives $5,000 a year. That is a very responsible position, of course, yet it is not any more responsible than a position of this character. The work is done very largely by subordinates. Of course, I know all his time is taken up; there is no question about that; there is no question that he earns his salary; and I am not objecting to that amount. I think he is entitled to it, and he is probably entitled to more, but I am simply using it in a comparison between the salary paid this official and that paid the Civil Service Commissioners.

Then, the Chief of the Bureau of Education gets $5,000. The Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations gets $5,000. The Commissioner of Lighthouses gets $5,000; the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce gets $6,000. I do not claim that these salaries are too much, but I submit that none of these gentlemen have any more responsible positions or have any more work to do or fill a place that needs any higher qualification. I doubt if a great many of them need as high qualifications as the members of the Civil Service Commission. Yet the Civil Service Commissioners get only $4,000 a year, and my amendment simply proposes to increase the salary of each one of them $1,000, increasing the salary of the president of the commission from $4,500 to $5,500.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this amendment was considered by the committee and the Senator from Washington gave the committee the benefit of his views. The committee was unwilling to grant this increase. Unless we are going into a general increase of the salaries it ought not, in my judgment, to be allowed. If we are going to revise all the entire salary list and revise it up, then this amendment ought to be adopted; but we could not see our way clear to grant the increase unless we were going into a revision of that sort and increase salaries generally. While there are others receiving more, there are others receiving less. I hope the Senate will adhere to the report of the committee, which gave conscientious consideration to this proposition.

Mr. BURTON. Quite a number of salaries have been increased under this bill, have they not?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Undoubtedly they have. It was almost impossible to resist the importunities of Senators who came before the committee about some particular man. We fought against it as far as we could conscientiously, but we have been unable to resist in some cases because it seemed to be necessary and just; but we did not feel that in this case it was necessary or just when considered in relation with the salaries paid other people in the employment of the Government. Of course we have increased some salaries.

Mr. BURTON. I notice there has been a considerable increase in the salaries of the Assistant Attorneys General.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. BURTON. From $5,000 to $7,500.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But that is the most important and the most responsible work that is now confronting the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, on page 105 I move to strike out lines 11 to 19, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 105 it is proposed to strike out the paragraph, beginning on line 11, which reads as follows:

During the fiscal year 1915 not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions herein above provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service in said bureau. And the salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as herein above provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of fine feeling expressed in this body lately in behalf of the old soldiers of the country and there is no one who has more good feeling for them than myself. The real fact of the matter is, I realize, and all ought to realize, that every man who offers his service as a private volunteer soldier to the United States not only faces the legitimate ability of the enemy that he may go up against, but he goes forth to war under a system where there is no adequate provision for properly educating volunteer officers to lead troops. There ought to have been in this country, and there ought to be now, two more West Points. There ought to be another West Point in the Mississippi Valley and another West Point on the Pacific coast. But, as it is, the American soldier goes forth under the rawest imaginable kind of volunteer leadership. It costs many lives to educate such officers.

We have here a provision affecting the old soldier, and this being a practical question, I am interested to see how the Senate is going to act about it. Here is a bureau largely manned by a lot of old soldiers. If they become inefficient from old age, and additional help is needed, you have to discharge four of them to get one new man under this provision. You must discharge four old soldiers to get one young official under this provision of the bill, assuming that that department is largely manned by old soldiers.

Not only is this department itself in large part filled by old soldiers, but it is a department upon which the prompt, efficient payment of pensions depends.

In this connection I want to read to the Senate from page 432 of the hearings on this bill in the House, the statement of Mr. Saltzgaber, Commissioner of Pensions:

I want to ask you first of all—

Mr. JOHNSON inquired—

to say whether your office force is fairly efficient?

Mr. SALTZGABER. A large part of it is and a large part of it is inefficient.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the inefficiency due to?

Mr. SALTZGABER. It is due to old age.

I want to call the attention of Members of the Senate, those gentlemen who are so sympathetic for the old and decrepit soldier who loses his place, to this:

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the inefficiency due to?

Mr. SALTZGABER. It is due to old age. That is the principal disqualification.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have you very many old people in that bureau?

Mr. SALTZGABER. We have quite a good many. I think we have been the dumping ground for other institutions and departments of the Government in that respect. I am afraid so. We have some people who have been there more than 40 years.

Mr. JOHNSON. I see you are asking for 100 people less next year than you have now; why are you able to get along with a less force?

Mr. SALTZGABER. We think the work of the bureau will decrease.

It is proper to say at this period that some subsequent letters from the same head, Mr. Saltzgaber, and from Mr. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, reverse this last suggestion. They do not think that they will need less, but quite the contrary under certain conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you propose that vacancies shall not be filled, as has been the rule in that bureau for a number of years, except to a limited extent?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if it is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Maryland, it is demonstrated that we can not finish the bill to-night. There are confronting us quite a large number of matters which will take a long time, and it is perfectly manifest we can not finish the bill to-night. If agreeable to the Senator from Maryland that the bill shall go over until Monday, I will ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment, that I may have it printed?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will be glad to yield for that purpose. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator yields to me for that purpose, and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I am not willing to yield the floor at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg pardon of the Senator from Maryland. I did not mean to intrude myself into the discussion.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The chairman of the committee has asked me to yield. I will ask him when the bill will be brought up on Monday.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Immediately after the routine business.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. In view of the fact that I can not be here between 11 and 12 o'clock on Monday, I think it will be advisable to dispose of this amendment now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is impossible. The amendment is going to be debated. If Senators were not going to debate it, and if it were to be voted on at once, it would be all right, but it is impossible to dispose of it this evening.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator can at least let me present my views, and then the Senate can do what it pleases with the amendment, whether I am here or not.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. How long will it take the Senator to present his views?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Not very long.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is a very vague statement.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have two letters here to read—one from Mr. Saltzgaber and one from Secretary Lane.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator yielded the floor.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have not yielded the floor, except in response to the Senator's inquiry. I think I have the floor, and I do not see how the Senator can offer a motion to adjourn——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not disposed to be technical with the Senator, but he did yield the floor. I asked him to do so, and he said he would.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I did not respond.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Then I certainly misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator certainly did misunderstand me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I got the recognition of the Chair. However, if the Senator merely wants to present his views briefly, very well.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. A Senator always gets recognition of the Chair before he asks another Senator to yield to him in order that he may make an inquiry. He can not make an inquiry in any other way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Maryland will take over 10 minutes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not think I will take over 10 minutes, and I can not be here, as I have said, early on Monday.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall go on, then. I did not know how long the Senator desired to speak.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I did not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Now, the Senator says 10 minutes, and I will not make any further controversy about it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, when interrupted I think I was reading from page 433 of the House hearings. Mr. Saltzgaber went on to say:

I desire to submit to the committee a suggestion—

There were so many old people in his bureau that, out of mercy to these old employees, this kindly man desired to suggest some way of giving them occupation and support, and he really asked the committee to provide a number of small places where they might be employed in the reduced condition of their extreme old age. His suggestion was this:

It is going to be pretty hard to turn off 100 and upward of our people, and it has been suggested to me that there be added to the estimates 50 positions at $900 each, $900 being the lowest salary upon which it is supposed that one would be able to subsist in Washington. That is proposed in order that we may be able to take care of many who are old and who have rendered faithful service, instead of turning them absolutely out. Now, I offer that suggestion to the committee for your consideration. I really am in favor of it myself.

Representative JOHNSON asked this question:

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not practically every low-priced clerk in your office draw a pension? Are not practically all of your low-priced clerks on the pension rolls?

Mr. SALTZGABER. No, sir. I can not say what the proportion of soldiers is, but I could tell exactly if I had anticipated the inquiry.

Now, Mr. President, after saying to the committee that he had expected a decrease in the number of his employees, Mr. Saltzgaber subsequently, on April 9, wrote to Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, April 9, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: Referring to my conversation with you relative to the item in the legislative bill which provides that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service, I have the honor to advise you that the records show that this proviso restricting the appointments in the language contained in the bill has not heretofore appeared in any appropriation bill, with the exception of the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year.

It is understood that the proviso and restriction referred to, which appears in the legislative appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, was inserted on the recommendation of a former Acting Secretary of the Interior, to meet conditions and a policy which appeared to exist at that time, but which, in my judgment, would not apply to existing conditions at this time, or be in support and furtherance of the present policy of this bureau.

In this connection it is proper to state that from 1906 to 1910, inclusive, it was provided each year during that period in the legislative appropriation bill that no vacancy then existing in the clerical force of this bureau, or which might occur after March 1 and prior to July 1 of the years mentioned, should be filled by original appointment or transfer.

This provision was probably inserted to meet requirements existing during that period, but which appeared no longer necessary after 1910, as it was omitted from the appropriation bill after that year. Such a limitation certainly is not needed nor desired at the present time.

It is therefore earnestly requested that the proviso and restriction referred to herein be omitted from the appropriation bill for the next fiscal year.

Very truly, yours,

G. M. SALTZGABER, Commissioner.

This letter was followed by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, to Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, dated April 23, 1914. On the second page, after referring to other items, he says, after quoting the portion which I have moved to strike out:

I recommend that this be stricken from the bill, in order that the commissioner may be at liberty to fill such vacancies as may occur during the fiscal year, as the necessity may arise by reason of increase of work due to new legislation now pending, or likely to be enacted at this session by reason of changed conditions.

I need hardly say that such vacancies will not be filled, even though it be permitted, unless the necessity for such appointment shall arise.

In order that the reasons which prompt the above recommendations may be fully made known to the committee, I have the honor to request that the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Saltzgaber, and the chief clerk of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Parker, be given an opportunity to appear before the Committee on Appropriations and to be heard fully in the matter.

Thus, the Secretary of the Interior calls the attention of the Senate, Mr. President, especially to the fact that increased work is constantly being put upon the Pension Bureau by the legislation of Congress. It is certainly proper that this work should be efficiently carried out in that bureau. In addition to that, we have here from the Secretary himself, a respectable portion of a respectable administration, the assurance which should especially commend itself to this side of the Chamber that—

I need hardly say that such vacancies will not be filled, even though it be permitted, unless the necessity for such appointments shall arise.

Mr. President, I hardly think it is necessary for me to call any further attention to this subject, though there is another letter from Mr. Saltzgaber, the commissioner, which, if there is no objection, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD. It shows the large number of old employees in the bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the Senator will be permitted to print the matter referred to in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, May 26, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS B. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to call to your personal attention, and through you to the attention of other members of your committee, the proviso on page 105, lines 11 to 19, inclusive, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill now pending, as follows:

"During the fiscal year 1915 not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions herein above provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service in said bureau. And the salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as herein above provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury."

Under date of April 9, 1914, in a letter addressed to Mr. JOHNSON, chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations (copy of which is inclosed), my reasons for desiring the elimination in its entirety of this contemplated legislation are set forth.

Allow me to call special attention to the fact that from 1906 to 1910, inclusive, it was provided that no vacancy then existing in the clerical force of the Pension Bureau, or which might occur after March 1, and prior to July 1 of the years mentioned, should be filled by appointment or transfer. This covered a period of four months, during which time such salaries lapsed and the money was turned into the Treasury; whereas the clause in the present bill affecting original appointments and transfers covers the whole fiscal year, and if enacted into law will greatly handicap the Commissioner of Pensions in the work of the bureau. I believe that no good grounds now exist for the raising of this impediment to appointments or transfers to the Pension Bureau through the Civil Service Commission.

Out of a clerical force of 1,259 in the bureau, who are engaged in the adjudication and payment of pension claims, 26 are detailed to other departments and 394 have reached an age beyond 65 years, as follows: One is 90; 20 are between 80 and 85; 60 between 75 and 80; 145 between 70 and 75; and 168 are between 65 and 70; and when the force is decreased by 145, according to the present bill, the working force of the clerks below the age of 65 years will be reduced to 694.

It is therefore urged that the commissioner's hands may be free to fill these vacancies as they occur from natural causes, without restriction, to enable him to secure competent help when it is required, thus raising the standard of efficiency of the clerical force of the bureau, which, by reason of the mental and physical infirmities of the aged clerks, has fallen way below normal. It is not his intention or desire to fill any such vacancies unless the exigencies of the service actually require it. It is shown by his estimates and by the recommendations in the bill that the commissioner is very materially decreasing the force of the bureau, when and where it can be done judiciously, without impairment to the proper care and adjudication of pension claims, and this policy will be pursued hereafter with a view to improvement of the service and with a high regard for the rights of the pensioner as well as for the interest of the Government.

Present conditions in Mexico, which will certainly result in the presentation of many new claims, together with contemplated legislation relative to widows' claims, will very probably necessitate an increase of force unless the restrictive clause indicated be eliminated.

Your attention is particularly invited to the letter of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, addressed to you under date of April 23, 1914, bearing upon this subject.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Very cordially, yours,

G. M. SALTZGABER, Commissioner.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion for a moment to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. STONE. I withhold the motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I simply wish to submit an amendment to the pending bill, which I sent to the desk a moment ago, and ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, that action will be taken.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 30, after line 18, insert the following:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to prepare such indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use, pursuant to the act approved June 30, 1906, $25,000.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO. (S. DOC. NO. 498).

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the opinion handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the International Harvester Co. of America, plaintiff in error, against the State of Missouri, on information of its attorney general, decided on June 8, 1914, together with certain sections of the statutes of the State of Missouri referred to in the opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the International Harvester Co. may be printed in the RECORD, including certain sections of the Missouri statutes referred to in the opinion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. I desire to say that my reason for submitting this opinion is especially on account of the fact that one of the defenses which was offered by the International Harvester Co. in this proceeding, which was brought to oust it from the State of Missouri as a pool, trust, or combination existing in violation of the statutes of Missouri, was that the act was unconstitutional because it did not apply to combinations for the purpose of fixing the price of labor or services, and did not embrace within its purview organizations of that kind. Therefore it was claimed that the act was discriminatory. The defense was made in the following language, as quoted by the Supreme Court:

Because said statute arbitrarily discriminates between persons making or selling products and commodities and persons selling labor and service of all kinds, in that each section of said statute applies only to articles of merchandise, and not to labor or services and the like, the prices of which are equally and similarly determined by competition.

This opinion squarely decides that that defense is not a good defense, and that legislative bodies have the power to make that discrimination if they see fit. The decision is of importance at this time because it will throw light upon certain sections of the trust bill which has been recently sent to the Senate from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator amplify his request so as to have the opinion submitted by him printed as a Senate document, in order that it may be more accessible to Members of the Senate?

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to adopt the suggestion of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, that feature will be added to the request of the Senator from Missouri. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO.

Supreme Court of the United States. No. 166—October term, 1913.

International Harvester Co. of America, plaintiff in error, v. The State of Missouri, on the information of its attorney general. In error to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri. June 8, 1914.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court.

Information in the nature of quo warranto brought in the Supreme Court of the State to exclude plaintiff in error from the corporate rights, privileges, and franchises exercised or enjoyed by it under the laws of the State, that they be forfeited, and all or such portion of its property as the court may deem proper be confiscated or in lieu thereof a fine be imposed upon it in "punishment of the perversion, usurpation, abuse, and misuse of franchises."

The ground of the action is the alleged violation of the statutes of the State passed respectively in 1899 and 1909 and entitled "Pools, trusts, and conspiracies," and "Pools, trusts, and conspiracies and discriminations."

The facts alleged in the information are these: Plaintiff in error is a Wisconsin corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of agricultural implements, binders, mowers, etc., and was licensed on the 5th of April, 1892, to do business in Missouri under the name of the Milwaukee Harvester Co., and on September 18, 1902, became licensed to do and engaged in such business in the State. In that year the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey was organized with a capital stock of $120,000,000 for the purpose of effecting a combination of plaintiff in error and certain other companies to restrain competition in the manufacture and sale of such agricultural implements in Missouri, and the New Jersey company has maintained plaintiff in error as its sole selling agent in Missouri. Before the combination the companies combined were competitors of one another and of other corporations, individuals and partnerships engaged in the same business in the State and that thereby the people of the State, and particularly the retail dealers and farmers of the State, received the benefit of competition in the purchase and sale of farm implements. The combination was designed and made with a view to lessen, and it tended to lessen, free competition in such implements, and thereby the said corporations entered into and became members of a pool, trust, combination, and agreement. In furtherance thereof and for the purpose of giving the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey a monopoly of the business of manufacturing and selling agricultural implements in the State, and for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale thereof, plaintiff in error has compelled the retail dealers in each county of the State who desire to handle and sell or act as agent for it to refrain from selling implements manufactured or sold by competing companies or persons. By reason thereof competition in such implements has been restrained, prices controlled, the quantity of such implements has been fixed and limited, and plaintiff in error has been able to secure, and for several years enjoy, from 85 to 90 per cent of the business, all to the great damage and loss of the people of the State, and by reason of its participation in the pool, trust, and combination and by reason of the acts and things done by it plaintiff in error has been guilty of an illegal, willful, and malicious perversion and abuse of its franchises, privileges, and licenses granted to it by the State.

The answer of plaintiff in error denied that it had become a party to any combination or that in its transactions there was any purpose to restrain or lessen competition, or that trade had been or was restrained.

The case was referred to a special commissioner to take the evidence and report his conclusions. He found, as alleged in the information, that the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey was a combination of the properties and businesses of formerly competing harvester companies, and plaintiff in error being one of such companies and, thereafter by selling the New Jersey company's products in Missouri, had violated the Missouri statutes against pools, trusts, and conspiracies.

In exceptions to the report of the special commissioner plaintiff in error urged that the statute of Missouri violated the equality clause and due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, "(1) because said statute arbitrarily discriminates between persons making or selling products and commodities and persons selling labor and service of all kinds: In that each section of said statute applies only to articles of merchandise and not to labor or services and the like, the prices of which are equally and similarly determined by competition, and may be equally and similarly the subject of combination and conspiracy to the detriment of the public. (2) Because said statute arbitrarily discriminates between the makers and sellers of products and commodities and the purchasers thereof. It prohibits manufacturers and sellers from making contracts or arrangements intended or tending to increase the market price of the articles they make or sell, but does not prohibit purchasers from combining to fix or reduce the market price of the commodities or articles to be purchased by them. (3) Because said statute, as construed by the commissioner, unreasonably and arbitrarily interferes with plaintiff in error's right to make proper and reasonable business contracts, and deprives it of property rights in respect thereto."

These exceptions were urged and argued in the Supreme Court upon the filing of the commissioner's report. Judgment was entered upon the report, in which it was adjudged that by reason of the violation of the statutes of the State, as charged in the information, plaintiff in error had forfeited the license theretofore granted to it to do business in the State, and it was adjudged that the license be forfeited and canceled and the company ousted from its rights and franchises granted by the State to do business in the State, and a fine of $50,000 was imposed upon it. It was, however, provided that upon payment of the fine on or before the 1st of January, 1912, and immediately ceasing all connection with the International Harvester Co. of New Jersey and the corporations and copartnerships with which it had combined, and not continuing and maintaining the unlawful agreement and combination with them to lessen and destroy competition in the sale of the enumerated farm implements and giving satisfactory evidence thereof to the court, the judgment of ouster should be suspended. The company was given until March 1, 1912, "to file its proof of willingness" to comply with the judgment. It was also adjudged that upon a subsequent violation of the statute "the suspension of the writ of ouster shall be removed" by the court "and absolute ouster be enforced," and to that end the court retained "its full and complete jurisdiction over the cause." (237 Mo., 369.)

A motion is made to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff in error in its answer simply denied that it had violated the antitrust laws of the State, and, it is contended, that by not alleging in its answer that those laws violated the Constitution of the United States it waived such defense. It is further contended that because the Federal right was not asserted in the answer the Supreme Court of the State could not have considered and did not consider or decide it. Decisions of the Supreme Court of Missouri are cited to sustain the contentions. The decisions declare the proposition that constitutional questions must be raised at the first opportunity or, as it is expressed in one of the cases (Brown v. Railway Co., 175 Mo., 1), "the protection of the Constitution must be timely and properly invoked in the trial court."

In Milling Co. v. Black (242 Mo., 31) it is said: The ruling of this court is that so grave a question [constitutional question] must be lodged at the first opportunity or it will be deemed to have been waived. If it can be properly and naturally raised in the pleadings, and thereby be a question lodged in the record proper, such is the time and place to raise it," and that it is too late to raise the question after judgment in a motion for new trial. In Hertzler v. Railway Co. (218 Mo., 1) it was held: "A motion for a new trial was not the first door for the question to enter, and in our later decisions we have ruled that a question of such gravity must be raised as soon as orderly procedure will allow. This in order that the trial court may be treated fairly and the question got into the case under correct safeguards and earmarked as of substance and not mere color."

It is manifest, we think, that the court only intended to express the condition of appellate review to be that in the trial court constitutional question should not be reserved until the case had gone to judgment on other issues and then used to secure a new trial. The principle of the rulings is satisfied in the case at bar. It is, as we have seen, an original proceeding in the Supreme Court and upon the report of the commissioner which brought the case to the court for decision of the issues and questions involved in it the Federal questions were made "under correct safeguards and earmarked as of substance and not mere color." It is true the court has not referred to them in its opinion, but we can not regard its silence as a condemnation of the time or manner at or in which they were raised. The motion to dismiss is, therefore, denied.

The assignments of error necessarily involve a consideration of the statutes. The relevant provisions are contained in section 10301 of the Revised Statutes of the State of 1909, and section 8966 of the Revised Statutes of 1899.

Section 10301 provides "that all arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings made or entered into between two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade, or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, or sale" in the State "of any product, commodity, or article, or thing bought or sold," and all such arrangements, etc., "which are designed or made with a view to increase, or which tend to increase, the market price of any product, commodity, or article, or thing of any class or kind whatsoever bought and sold" are declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void, and those offending "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished" as provided.

Section 8966 provides that arrangements, etc., such as described in section 10301, having like purpose, and all such arrangements, etc., "whereby and under the terms of which it is proposed, stipulated, provided, agreed, or understood that any person, association of persons, or corporations doing business in" the State, "shall deal in selling or offer for sale" in the State "any particular or specific article, product, or commodity, and shall not during the continuance or existence of any such arrangement * * * deal in, sell, or offer for sale," in the State, "any competing article, product, or commodity," are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void; and any person offending "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to the penalties" provided.

By section 10304 of the Revised Statutes of 1909 it is provided that domestic offending corporations shall forfeit their charters and all or any part of their property as shall be adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction, or be fined in lieu of the forfeiture of charters or of property.

Foreign offending corporations shall forfeit their right to do business in the State, with forfeiture also of property, or in lieu thereof the payment of a fine.

In State v. Standard Oil Co. (218 Mo., 1, 370, 372) the Supreme Court held that the antitrust statutes of the State "are limited in their scope and operations to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, and do not include combinations of persons engaged in labor pursuits." And, justifying the statutes against a charge of illegal discrimination, the court further said that "it must be borne in mind that the differentiation between labor and property is so great that they do not belong to the same general classification of rights or things, and have never been so recognized by the common law or legislative enactments."

Accepting the construction put upon the statute, but contesting its legality as thus construed, plaintiff in error makes three contentions—(1) the statutes as so construed unreasonably and arbitrarily limit the right of contract; (2) discriminate between the vendors of commodities and the vendors of labor and services; and (3) between vendors and purchasers of commodities.

(1). The specification under this head is that the Supreme Court found, it is contended, benefit—not injury—to the public had resulted from the alleged combination. Granting that this is not an overstatement of the opinion the answer is immediate. It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions and has had some good effect. (Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S., 56, 62; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S., 20, 49.) The purpose of such statutes is to secure competition and preclude combinations which tend to defeat it. And such is explicitly the purpose and policy of the Missouri statutes; and they have been sustained by the Supreme Court. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which precludes a State from adopting and enforcing such policy. To so decide would be stepping backward. (Carrol v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 199 U. S., 401; Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U. S., 157.)

It is true that the Supreme Court did not find a definite abuse of its powers by plaintiff in error, but it did find that there was an offending against the statute, a union of able competitors and a cessation of their competition, and the court said: "Some of the smaller concerns that were competitors in the market have ceased their struggle for existence and retired from the field." This is one of the results which the statute was intended to prevent, the unequal struggle of individual effort against the power of combination. The preventing of the engrossment of trade is as definitely the object of the law as is price regulation of commodities, its prohibition being against combinations "made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, or sale of any commodity or article or thing bought or sold." (See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S., 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., Id., 106; United States v Patten, 225 U. S., 525.)

(2) and (3). These contentions may be considered together, both involving a charge of discrimination—the one because the law does not embrace vendors of labor, the other because it does not cover purchasers of commodities as well as vendors of them. Both, therefore, invoke a consideration of the power of classification which may be exerted in the legislation of the State. And we shall presently see that power has very broad range. A classification is not invalid because of simple inequality. We said in Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Matthews (174 U. S., 96, 106), by Mr. Justice Brewer: "The very idea of classification is that of inequality, so that it goes without saying that the fact of inequality in no manner determines the matter of constitutionality." Therefore it may be there is restraint of competition in a combination of laborers and in a combination of purchasers, but that does not demonstrate that legislation which does not include either combination is illegal. Whether it would have been better policy to have made such comprehensive classification it is not our province to decide. In other words, whether a combination of wage earners or purchasers of commodities called for repression by law under the conditions in the State was for the legislature of the State to determine.

In Carrcll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., supra, a statute of Iowa was considered which made it unlawful for two or more fire insurance companies doing business in the State, or their officers or agents, to make or enter into combinations or agreements in relation to the rates to be charged for insurance and certain other matters. The provision was held invalid by the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa on the ground of depriving of liberty of contract secured by the fourteenth amendment and of the equal protection of the laws. This court reversed the decision, saying, after stating that there was a general statute of Iowa which prohibited combinations to fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity or to limit the quantity of the same produced or sold in the State:

"Therefore the act in question does little, if anything, more than apply and work out the policy of the general law in a particular case."

Again:

"If an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business, the constitution embodies no prohibition of laws confined to the evil or doctrinaire requirement that they should be couched in all-embracing terms."

And—

"If the Legislature of the State of Iowa deems it desirable artificially to prevent, so far as it can, the substitution of 'combination' for 'competition,' this court can not say that fire insurance may not present so conspicuous an example of what the legislature thinks an evil as to justify special treatment. The imposition of a more specific liability upon life and health insurance companies was held valid in Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Mettler (185 U. S., 308)."

Other cases were also cited in illustration.

Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., supra, is especially apposite. It contains the elements of the case at bar and a decision upon them. It will be observed that the statute, which it was said declared the general policy of Iowa, was a prohibition against a combination of producers and sellers. There was the same distinction, therefore, between vendors and purchasers of commodities as in the Missouri statute and the same omission of prohibition of combinations of vendors of labor and services as in the Missouri law. The distinction and omission were continued when the policy of the State was extended to insurance companies. The law was not condemned because it went no further, because it did not prohibit the combination of all trades, businesses, and persons. We held that the omission was not for judicial cognizance, and that a court could not say that fire insurance might not present so conspicuous an example of what the legislature might think an evil "as to justify special treatment."

We might leave the discussion with that and the other cases. They decide that we are helped little in determining the legality of a legislative classification by making broad generalizations, and it is for a broad generalization that plaintiff in error contends—indeed, a generalization which includes all the activities and occupations of life, and there is an enumeration of wage earners in emphasis of the discrimination in which manufacturers and sellers are singled out from all others. The contention is deceptive, and yet it is earnestly urged in various ways which it would extend this opinion too much to detail. "In dealing with restraints of trade," it is said, "the proper basis of classification is obviously neither in commodities nor services nor in persons, but in restraints." A law to be valid, therefore, is the inflexible deduction, can not distinguish between "restraints," but must apply to all restraints, whatever their degree or effect or purpose, and that because the Missouri statute has not this universal operation it offends against the equality required by the fourteenth amendment. This court has decided many times that a legislative classification does not have to possess such comprehensive extent. Classification must be accommodated to the problems of legislation, and we decided in Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Bank (207 U. S., 251) that it may depend upon degrees of evil without being arbitrary or unreasonable. We repeated the ruling in Heath & Milligan Manufacturing Co. v. Worst (Id., 338), in Engel v. O'Malley (219 U. S., 128), in Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell (222 U. S., 225), and again in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis (233 U. S., 389, 418). In the latter case a distinction was sustained against a charge of discrimination between stock fire insurance companies and farmers' mutual insurance companies insuring farm property. If this power of classification did not exist, to what straits legislation would be brought. We may illustrate by the examples furnished by plaintiff in error.

In the enumeration of those who, it is contended, by combination are able to restrain trade are included, among others, "persons engaged in domestic service" and "nurses," and because these are not embraced in the law, plaintiff in error, it is contended, although a combination of companies uniting the power of $120,000,000 and able thereby to engross 85 per cent or 90 per cent of the trade in agricultural implements, is nevertheless beyond the competency of the legislature to prohibit. As great as the contrast is, a greater one may be made. Under the principle applied a combination of all the great industrial enterprises (and why not railroads as well?) could not be condemned unless the law applied as well to a combination of maidservants or to infants' nurses, whose humble functions preclude effective combination. Such contrasts and the considerations they suggest must be pushed aside by government, and a rigid and universal classification applied, is the contention of plaintiff in error; and to this the contention must come. Admit exceptions and you admit the power of the legislature to select them. But it may be said the comparison of extremes is forensic, and, it may be, fallacious; that there may be powerful labor combinations as well as powerful industrial combinations, and weak ones of both, and that the law to be valid can not distinguish between strong and weak offenders. This may be granted (Engel v. O'Malley, supra), but the comparisons are not without value in estimating the contentions of plaintiff in error. The foundation of our decision is, of course, the power of classification which a legislature may exercise, and the cases we have cited, as well as others which may be cited, demonstrate that some latitude must be allowed to the legislative judgment in selecting the "basis of community." We have said that it must be palpably arbitrary to authorize a judicial review of it, and that it can not be disturbed by the courts "unless they can see clearly that there is no fair reason for the law that would not require with equal force its extension to others whom it leaves untouched." (Mo., Kan. & Tex. Ry. Co. v. May, 194 U. S., 267, 269; Williams v. State of Ark., 217 U. S., 79, 90; Watson v. State of Maryland, 218 U. S., 173, 179.)

The instances of these cases are instructive. In the first there was a difference made between landowners as to liability for permitting certain noxious grasses to go to seed on the lands. In the second, the statute passed on made a difference between businesses in the solicitation of patronage on railroad trains and at depots. In the third, a difference, based on the evidence of qualification of physicians, was declared valid.

In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Milling Co. (218 U. S., 406), a distinction was made between common carriers in the power to limit liability for negligence. In Engel v. O'Malley, supra, a distinction between bankers was sustained; and in Provident Savings Institution v. Malone (221 U. S., 660), deposits in savings banks were distinguished from deposits in other banks in the application of the statute of limitations.

Other cases might be cited whose instances illustrate the same principle and in which this court has refused to accept the higher generalizations urged as necessary to the fulfillment of the constitutional guaranty of the equal protection of the law, and in which we, in effect, held that it is competent for a legislature to determine upon what differences a distinction may be made for the purpose of statutory classification between objects otherwise having resemblances. Such power, of course, can not be arbitrarily exercised. The distinction made must have reasonable basis. (Magoun v. Illinois Trust, etc., Bank, 170 U. S., 283; Clark v. Kansas City, 176 U. S., 114; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S., 183; Petit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S., 164; Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S., 270; American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S., 89; Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S., 563; Chicago, R. I. & Pac. Ry. Co., 219 U. S., 453, 466; Lindsay v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S., 61, 79; Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. New York, 221 U. S., 467; Murphy v. California, 225 U. S., 623; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S., 269, 270; Mo. Kan. & Tex. Ry. v. Cade, 233 U. S., —.)

And so in the case at bar. Whether the Missouri statute should have set its condemnation on restraints generally, prohibiting combined action for any purpose and to everybody, or confined it as the statute does to manufacturers and vendors of articles and permitting it to purchasers of such articles; prohibiting it to sellers of commodities and permitting it to sellers of services, was a matter of legislative judgment, and we can not say that the distinctions made are palpably arbitrary, which we have seen is the condition of judicial review. It is to be remembered that the question presented is of the power of the legislature, not the policy of the exercise of the power. To be able to find fault, therefore, with such policy is not to establish the invalidity of the law based upon it.

It is said that the statute as construed by the supreme court of the State comes within our ruling in Connelly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (184 U. S., 540), but we do not think so. If it did, we should, of course, apply that ruling here.

Judgment affirmed.

The sections of the Missouri Statutes quoted in the above decision are as follows:

"SEC. 8966. Certain agreements declared unlawful.—That from and after the passage of this article, all arrangements, contracts, agreements, or combinations between persons or corporations, or between persons or any association of persons and corporations, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture, or sale of any article, product, or commodity in this State, and all arrangements, combinations, contracts, or agreements whereby or under the terms of which it is proposed, stipulated, provided, agreed, or understood that any person, association of persons, or corporations doing business in this State shall deal in, sell, or offer for sale in this State any particular or specified article, product, or commodity, and shall not during the continuance or existence of any such arrangement, combination, contract, or agreement deal in, sell, or offer for sale in this State any competing article, product, or commodity are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void; and any person, association of persons, or corporation becoming a party to any such arrangement, contract, agreement, or combination, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud and be subject to the penalties provided for in this article." (Laws 1897, p. 208.)

"SEC. 10301. Combination to increase prices declared conspiracy.—All arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings made or entered into between any two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, or sale in this State of any product, commodity, or article or thing bought and sold of any class or kind whatsoever, including the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, or storm, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings made or entered into between any two or more persons which are designed or made with a view to increase or which tend to increase the market price of any product, commodity, or article or thing of any class or kind whatsoever bought and sold, including the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, or storm are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void; and any person or persons creating, entering into, becoming a member of or participating in such arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and punished as provided for in this article." (Laws 1907, p. 377.)

[Section 10304 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1909.]

SEC. 10304. Offending corporations to forfeit charter and property: Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State which shall violate any of the provisions of this article may, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, be declared by the court to have forfeited its corporate rights and franchises, and the same may by the court be declared forfeited, void, and of noneffect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and such court may, by such judgment and decree, also declare all or any part of the property of such corporation forfeited unto the State, or in lieu of the forfeiture of its corporate rights and franchises or in lieu of the forfeiture of all or any part of the property of such corporation, assess against it a fine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any other State or country which shall violate any of the provisions of this article shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, be declared by the court to have forfeited its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State, and the same shall by the court be declared forfeited, void, and of noneffect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and such court may, by judgment and decree, also declare all or any part of the property in this State of such corporation forfeited unto the State, or in lieu of the forfeiture of its right and privilege to do business in this State, or in lieu of the forfeiture of all or any part of the property of such corporation assess against it a fine; and in all proceedings for the violation of any of the provisions of this article against any corporation created or organized under the laws of this or any other State or country proof of the acts of any person who has been acting as the agent of such corporation in transacting its business in this State in the name, behalf, or interest of such corporation shall be received as prima facie proof of the acts of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in which any judgment of forfeiture shall be rendered, as herein provided for, to certify the decree thereof to the secretary of state, and if it be an insurance company also to the superintendent of the insurance department, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation; and in case any court shall render a decree forfeiting all or any part of the property of any corporation violating the provisions of this article, such court shall also appoint a receiver thereof to dispose of the same in such manner as the court may direct, and the net proceeds arising from the sale thereof shall be paid into the State treasury, as shall all fines that may be imposed against any person or corporation violating the provisions of this article be paid into the State treasury. (Laws 1907, p. 377.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 13, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Paul R. Hickok, pastor of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, King of kings and Lord of lords, from whom proceeds all power and dominion in heaven and earth, most heartily we beseech Thee to have in Thy loving favor these Thy servants summoned here for performance of duty by the great people they represent. Command the Holy Spirit to do His gracious work, guiding, directing, and overruling, for Thy glory, and the strengthening of righteousness and justice in the world. May our Nation continue increasingly to be a source of life and light and helpfulness to our own citizens and to the peoples of the earth. Upon this day particularly, when the thought of our country is directed to the flag we deeply revere and tenderly love, may there be a new sense of duty, a new appreciation of privilege. And may the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, together with all the acts of our lives, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Journal as read will stand approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice the Journal shows that a resolution concerning Clifford H. Tate was passed. It was not passed but it was objected to.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected in that respect. The Journal as corrected will stand approved.

There was no objection.

JAMES W. M'GREEVEY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the House last night passed H. R. 12909. There is an error in the name and I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was engrossed and ordered to a third reading, and passed, and that it may be amended so that the name will read in the body of the bill "McGreevey."

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Twelve thousand nine hundred and nine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that all proceedings touching H. R. 12909 back to the amendment stage be vacated.

Mr. MANN. And that the bill be amended so as to change the spelling of the name in the body of the bill to "McGreevey," the same as in the title.

The SPEAKER. And that the bill be amended so as to spell the name correctly. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 10523), and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and then read the conference statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 817).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 7, 9, 10, 11, 18, 19, 20, 24, 26, 36, 37, 38, 50, 51, 54, 59, 61, 64, 68, 77, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 107, 109, 115, 122, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 150, 151, 157, 161, 168, 170, 171, 183, 187, 190, 191, 201, 202, 203, 204, 212, 218, and 224.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 25, 27, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 55, 57, 58, 63, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 93, 95, 96, 100, 108, 111, 114, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 148, 149, 153, 155, 156, 159, 162, 163, 167, 172, 173, 174, 175, 179, 184, 186, 192, 193, 194, 197, 198, 199, 200, 205, 207, 209, 210, 213, 217, 219, 220, 221, 222, and 225, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$115,610"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,034"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "Columbia," in line 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing a suitable viaduct and bridge to carry Benning Road over the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., and of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $110,000. And authority is hereby given said commissioners to acquire by purchase, or to condemn in accordance with existing law, the land necessary to carry out the construction authorized by this appropriation, and to construct said viaduct and bridge and the approaches thereto, and to reconstruct, grade, and pave, by day labor or otherwise, the streets, avenues, and ways changed in line or grade or newly created hereunder: Provided, That the cost of constructing said viaduct and bridge, including approaches thereto, shall be borne and paid one-half by said railroad companies in proportion to the widths of their respective rights of way, and the remaining one-half by the United States and the District of Columbia; and said sums shall be paid by said companies to the Treasurer of the United States, one half to the credit of the District of Columbia and the other half to the credit of the United States; and the same shall be valid and subsisting liens against the franchise and property of said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., respectively, and shall be a legal indebtedness of said companies in favor of the District of Columbia, jointly for its use and the use of the United States as aforesaid; and the said lien or liens may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by bill in equity brought by the commissioners of said District in the Supreme Court of said District, or by any other lawful proceedings against the said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co., or said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., or both; and any relocation in the line or change in the grade of the tracks of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. necessary to permit the completion in accordance with approved plans of the viaduct and bridge and approaches herein provided for shall be made by and at the cost of said railway company; and in the event of said railway company failing or refusing to do such work the same shall be done by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the cost to be paid from the appropriation for said bridge and viaduct and collected from said street railway company in the manner provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$4,150" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$2,000, the same to be payment in full for said purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$142,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For paving with asphalt the north approach to the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River from Water Street to the west intersecting park driveway nearest to the Highway Bridge, a distance of about 1,900 feet, and for paving with granite block the balance of the north approach from the west intersecting driveway to the bridge structure and the south approach to the bridge, $27,000: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to do this work with their portable asphalt plant if, in the judgment of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, such work can be economically performed by the use of said plant: And provided further, That the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to transfer to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds for the above work any granite blocks removed from streets in the District of Columbia whose roadways are authorized herein to be repaved with a smoother pavement, the cost of hauling the blocks so transferred from the streets to the site of the work to be charged against this appropriation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$190,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"There shall be assessed as special benefits for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District Line upon the aforesaid plans, such sum or sums as the jury hereinafter provided for may determine, on such lots and pieces or parcels of land abutting the area of improvement, and adjacent thereto, and any other lots, pieces, or parcels of land in the District of Columbia that such jury shall determine are specially benefited by reason of said reclamation and development, in the manner following, that is to say: It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of said assessment, to divide into sections, in such manner as he may deem best, the entire area of improvement; as soon as practicable after the reclamation and development of each section is completed he shall furnish to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a plat of such section showing the area reclaimed and developed, and thereupon it shall be the duty of said Commissioners to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a District court, by petition, a proceeding in rem for the assessment of benefits. The proceedings in such case shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, in so far as the same are applicable. It shall be the duty of the jury provided for in said proceeding to find as special benefits the increase in value which such reclamation and development has added to each lot, piece, or parcel of land abutting such improvement, and adjacent thereto, and any other lot, piece, or parcel of land in the District of Columbia, which it may find will be specially benefited by reason of said improvement; and of the amount which said jury shall find such lots, pieces, or parcels of land so benefited it shall assess one-half thereof upon such lot, piece, or parcel of land. In determining the amounts to be assessed against said lots, pieces, or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations and topographical conditions of said lots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the benefits and advantages they may specially receive from such reclamation and development, and where any part of any lot, piece, or parcel of land has been dedicated for the purpose of such reclamation and development, the jury in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, or parcel of land is to be assessed for benefits and the amount of benefits if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of land so dedicated. The said assessments shall be levied and collected under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and of the District of Columbia in equal parts, and when finally ratified and confirmed by the court shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed and shall be collected as special improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable in five equal annual installments with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after 60 days after the confirmation of the verdict of the jury. Where not otherwise herein provided for, all of the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall be applicable to the levying and collecting of said special assessments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 215: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$2,000" where it occurs in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 223: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 223, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$86,935"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 101, 103, 104, 105, 169, 178, 226, and 227.

ROBERT N. PAGE,
THOMAS U. SISSON,
CHARLES R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. What became of the item placed in the bill in the Senate providing for the improvement of Seventh Street NW., $30,000?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There was an amendment put in by the Senate authorizing the expenditure of $30,000 for taking up the present pavement on Seventh Street, beginning—I do not remember at what street——

Mr. AUSTIN. New York Avenue.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; New York Avenue, and extending for several blocks; and on that amendment the Senate receded.

Mr. AUSTIN. What was the objection on the part of the House conferees to the amendment?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. After a personal investigation of this pavement it was found that it was entirely good and served in every way the purpose for which it was placed there. The expenditure in taking up this pavement and replacing it at this time is not warranted.

Mr. AUSTIN. The present pavement is cobblestone, and there has been no improvement for half a century on the street.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is Belgian block—not asphalt pavement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Have not large property holders along Seventh Street asked that this improvement be made?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Why, certainly; they appeared before the Senate committee, as did their citizens' association, and for that reason, I imagine, the amendment was placed in the bill in the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is an important street, and they really deserve a change in the pavement.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the House that the pavement, while it is Belgian block, is perfectly good, and, with the expenditure of a few dollars in repairs, would last for a number of years. The House committee considered there were a number of other places in the District of Columbia that needed improvements and appropriations for improvements vastly more than this. This is a street on which there is a great deal of heavy traffic, and the present pavement is adapted particularly to the traffic passing over the street.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the District engineer recommend the change?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The District Commissioners estimated for this, but there was no special recommendation on the part of the engineer or the commissioners.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that amendment 31 provides for the payment of $2,000 to Thomas W. and Alice N. Keller for ground taken and damages on account of condemnation proceedings in square No. 2838, in the city of Washington, instead of $4,150, as recommended by the Senate——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. By the Senate committee.

Mr. MADDEN. By the Senate. Just exactly what property was taken away from Mr. and Mrs. Keller?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I will say that the testimony before the Senate committee, which was presented to the conference committee, as I remember it, showed under this proceeding that there were about 1,500 square feet of land held in fee by these parties that was taken—I will not say taken, because I believe the fee is still in them—for the establishment of a building line.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, as a matter of fact, the property has been improved considerably by the fixing of the building line, has it not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is a matter about which there is a very great difference of opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. Was not there an assessment made for benefits accruing to this property by reason of the fixing of the building line, and did not Mr. Keller pay part of the assessment?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, sir; the record shows that there was a jury appointed to assess certain damages against property, and, on the other hand, because of the moving back of the building line of the corner lot, which adjoined his, certain benefits. From the report of this jury the amount of the benefit exceeded the amount of damage, my recollection is, by $480; and the record shows, upon investigation—and I will say to the gentleman that I investigated it personally—that he has paid one of the quarterly payments on this $480.

Mr. MADDEN. And this $2,000 is appropriated in this bill now to enable him to pay the other three quarterly payments?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It will very much more than enable him to do that.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I would judge.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman realizes that in a conference there are a good many things take place that may or may not be agreed to that are not personally agreeable to the conferees.

Mr. MADDEN. But the conferees on the part of the House seem to have been committed to this proposition.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The conferees on the part of the House certainly were not committed to it in any way.

Mr. MADDEN. They were not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They were not.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, how did the conferees reach the conclusion that $2.000 was the exact sum that ought to be paid?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, sir, the House conferees reached that sum in the same way that a good many figures are reached, not based upon any very accurate calculation, but as the best they could do under the circumstances.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the conferees have before them the information that this man had never appealed from the verdict of the jury in the condemnation case?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, sir; we had before us that information.

Mr. MADDEN. And what excuse could Mr. Keller give for not having appealed from the verdict of the jury and then come before the Congress of the United States asking payment for damages to his property when it was really benefited, according to the verdict?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. To be entirely frank, I do not know what Mr. Keller's representation was, because his representation was made to some other than the House conferees. I can not answer the gentleman's question, but the representation was very effectively made to the other legislative body.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to disagree to the agreement of the conferees with respect to amendment No. 31. This is a case, Mr. Speaker, where it seems——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to inquire of the gentleman if this is a complete agreement?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This is a complete agreement on this item.

The SPEAKER. This item is included?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is included within those items agreed upon.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois, then, is out of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, is it not within the power of the House——

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MADDEN. To amend the report?

The SPEAKER. Not where it is complete.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would say to the gentleman that his remedy is to vote down the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The only thing in the world to do with the conference report is to agree to it or disagree to it as a whole.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to address the House for two or three minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MADDEN. Five minutes, I think.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that in a case like this, where all the court procedure that is usually had was complied with, and where condemnation proceedings were had to fix a building line, the result of which was that the property referred to in this amendment was benefited, and an assessment levied against the property as the result of the conclusion of the jury that such benefit did accrue to the property, and the man whose property was improved and affected materially by reason of the verdict of the jury did not appeal from the decision which levied upon him $480 benefit, it is a species of sandbag to report and comply with the demand made by this man now to pay him $2,000 for damage done to his property when, as a matter of fact, the records of the court show that the property was benefited. He had his remedy in court. When $480 was levied against this property for benefits, he could have appealed from the verdict. What did he do? He acquiesced in it; he paid the first assessment levied under that verdict, and it is fair to assume that he intends to pay the other three assessments levied when the time arrives for their payment.

Now, what process of reasoning could have induced anybody in the face of these facts to appropriate $2,000 to pay this man for so-called damages to his property about which he never complained when the case was in court, where he had his remedy and where he ought to have made his complaint, is more than I can understand.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman understands that this claimant is an old and long-trusted employee of the Senate and that the whole United States Senate is behind this item?

Mr. MADDEN. I really do not know who he is, where he comes from, what his influence is, or how it is exercised.

Mr. BARTLETT. And does not the gentleman know that the Senate has for years been trying to put this particular item on every appropriation bill, deficiency bill, and everything of that kind?

Mr. MADDEN. I think this is one of the greatest outrages ever attempted to be perpetrated on the public.

Mr. BARTLETT. You are criticizing the conferees, but the Senate on both sides seems to be behind it.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the House ought to vote down the conference report and have it distinctly understood that why it is voted down is that it does not under any circumstances propose to be sandbagged by this kind of an item, even though the whole Senate of the United States may be behind it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Do I understand this appropriation is made to reverse the judgment of a court?

Mr. MADDEN. This is made to reverse the judgment of a court from which the beneficiary has never appealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And has the Senate of the United States recalled a judicial decision upon the unsworn testimony of one of the litigants?

Mr. MADDEN. It looks that way. It has perhaps constituted itself into a higher court of appeal than we recognize under the laws of the land.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But it has been decided upon unsworn testimony?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir; without any testimony, I suppose.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. CULLOP. The Senate seems to have already adopted the recall of decisions of the court without any law to that effect.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say that the Senate, on the recommendation of the House conferees, modified its own verdict, because, I understand, the verdict of the Senate was to the effect that originally $4,150 was the amount of damage that ought to be paid to this man, but by the persuasive art of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], acting as conferees on this bill, they were able to induce the Senate to reduce the verdict from $4,150 to $2,000. And this $2,000 is nothing more nor less than a mere sandbag.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is a gratuity that is paid out of Uncle Sam's Treasury, that everybody goes after when he has a chance.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us not grant the gratuity. I hope the House will vote down the conference report and send the bill back with instructions to the conferees to disagree to the payment of this $2,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in regard to this item, and the remarks injected by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] have brought before the House and the membership of the House the real facts as they exist in connection with this item of appropriation. This gentleman is an employee of the Senate of the United States, and has been for a number of years. This item, as I understand it, has been placed in various appropriation bills as an amendment of the Senate for several years, probably ever since these condemnation proceedings were had.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked about the decision of the court, and my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] suggests the recall of judicial decisions.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like the gentleman to quote me correctly upon that. What I said was that from what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said, the Senate, without a law, had adopted the recall of judicial decisions. They were getting progressive very rapidly, without legislating to that end. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I accept the gentleman's statement. The conferees on the part of the House, I want to say, are not going to try to defend this amendment. It was just one of those circumstances that arise, I imagine, in disagreements between the House and Senate in every conference, when there are matters that you have to accede to without your judgment being convinced; and I am free to confess, as one of the conferees, that this matter comes within that list. I do not believe, however, that it warrants the rejection of the conference report merely because it happens to be in it. To be frank with the gentleman, this man did not take advantage of an appeal from this decision of the court, and I imagine it was because he desired to get his case into another court—into which he did get it—and there he found not only the court, but the members of the jury and the attorneys, all with him. It is a mere matter, to be frank about it, as to whether the House, as the gentleman from Illinois expresses it, shall refuse to be sandbagged or shall undertake to sandbag the other body.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MADDEN. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report be disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. It is the business of the Speaker to put the question when the motion is made. An agreement, of course, is had by an affirmative vote, and a disagreement by a negative vote. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAGE of North Carolina) there were—ayes 39, noes 47.

The conference report was disagreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move a further disagreement to all the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] moves a further disagreement to the Senate amendments and asks for a conference.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees be instructed——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. We will come back here later.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments numbered 28, 103, 104, 105, 169, 178, and 226, and I ask for a separate vote on the various amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to recede and concur in Senate amendments 28, 103, 104, 105, 169, 178, and 226.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, those are practically the amendments that are still in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. MANN. They are all in disagreement now.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There were two others that the gentleman from Wyoming did not mention that are also in disagreement.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendments referred to in my motion are amendments that were in disagreement in the report submitted by the conference committee. There are other items which were also in disagreement which are not included in my motion.

Mr. MANN. Why not dispose of the amendments which are not enumerated by further insisting on a disagreement—those upon which no one desires a separate vote?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the question be put on amendment No. 101 and all the amendments other than those enumerated by the gentleman from Wyoming, on which he asks a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina adds amendment No. 101 to the list. The gentleman from Wyoming asks that a separate vote be taken on the amendments he named.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina moved that the House insist upon a disagreement to all the other amendments in difference between the two Houses except those enumerated by the gentleman from Wyoming, so as to close up the bill, so far as all other disagreements were concerned, except the particular ones named.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to insist on a disagreement except as to amendment 101; to disagree on the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, with the exception of those amendments.

Mr. MANN. No; not ask for a conference, Mr. Speaker, but to further insist upon the disagreement between the House and the Senate on the amendments. The question of conference would come after the other motions are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina made it all in one motion.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I amend the motion, Mr. Speaker, because at the time I made it the gentleman from Wyoming had not made the motion on the various amendments. I now ask that the House further insist on the disagreement to these amendments in difference between the two Houses not enumerated by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. And not including the one that the gentleman suggested himself?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I withdraw the one I suggested.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendments, except Senate amendments Nos. 28, 103, 104, 105, 169, 178, and 226.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks a separate vote on these several amendments. The Clerk will report amendment No. 28.

Mr. MONDELL. Amendment 28 is to strike out what was known as the Borland amendment, placed on the bill in the House. I move that the House recede and concur.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with. It is what is known as the Borland amendment, relative to assessments for streets and sidewalks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the reading of this amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the matter proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. This is an amendment to strike out all of page 22 after line 5, all of page 23, and all of page 24 down to and including line 8, of the bill. That is the Senate amendment. The Clerk is not reading the Senate amendment. It is not in order to read what is not included in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. What would the House know about it if it was not read? They might be striking out the Ten Commandments. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Members can read it for themselves, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 28.

Strike out the following:

"That hereafter whenever, under appropriations made by Congress, the roadway of any street, avenue, or road in the District of Columbia is improved by laying a new pavement thereon or by resurfacing an existing pavement from curb to curb or from gutter to gutter, where no curb exists, where the material used is sheet asphalt, asphalt block, asphaltic or bituminous macadam, concrete, or other fixed roadway pavement, such proportion of the total cost of the work, including all the expenses of the assessment, to be made as hereinafter prescribed, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the abutting property, and assessments therefor shall be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of said property on the street, avenue, or road, or portion thereof upon the roadway of which said new pavement is laid or the existing roadway of which is resurfaced: Provided, however, That there shall be excepted from such assessment the cost of paving or resurfacing the roadway space included within the intersections of streets, avenues, and roads, as said intersections are included within building lines projected, and also the cost of paving the space within such roadways for which street railway companies are responsible under their charters or under law on streets, avenues, or roads where such railways have been or shall be constructed.

"The assessments herein provided for shall be levied and paid for in the following manner, namely: Where the width of the roadway actually to be paved is 40 feet or less between the curbs, or between the gutters, where no curbs exist, after deducting the amount required to be paved by the street railway companies, the total cost of the work, including the expenses of assessments, shall be assessed against the abutting property owners, one-half to each side; where the width of the street thus to be paved, after deducting the amount required to be paved by the street railway companies, shall exceed 40 feet, the cost of construction as herein provided for shall be levied and paid for as follows: The cost of constructing 20 feet on each side of said street shall be assessed against the abutting property owner, and the cost of paving the remaining portion of said street, including the cost of intersections, shall be paid for by the government of the District of Columbia out of funds available for that purpose.

"Assessments levied under the provisions hereof shall be payable and collectible in the same manner and under the same penalty for nonpayment as is provided for assessments for improving sidewalks and alleys in the District of Columbia, as now provided by law: Provided, That the cost of publication of the notice of such assessment upon the failure to obtain personal service upon the owner of the property to be assessed therein provided for and of the services of such notices shall be paid out of the appropriation for the work, and such assessments, when collected, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the fund available for similar public work."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this is what is known as the Borland amendment, which was placed in the appropriation bill on the floor of the House when it was under consideration here. The conferees on the part of the House have insisted upon the recession of the Senate from their amendment in striking out that provision, but have been utterly unable even to open the matter up for discussion. The direct question was asked me as one of the House conferees, before we went to conference, if the House would be given an opportunity to express itself upon this amendment before there was a final agreement, and I committed the conferees on the part of the House to the opportunity for further action. That time has come, and I will yield to my colleague on the conference committee, Mr. SISSON.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] yields to me, but still controls the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. This matter was so thoroughly discussed in the House before that I do not know that anything we might say upon this matter would be able to change the viewpoint of any Member of the House in reference to it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is this the amendment which provides that the cost of pavement shall be assessed against abutting property?

Mr. SISSON. This is the Borland amendment, which provides for the assessment of one-half the cost to the property owner on one side, and the other half to the property owner on the other side. In other words, all of the cost is assessed to the property owners on both sides. As has been suggested also, the Federal Government would be called upon to pay its pro rata share wherever Government property abuts on a street.

Some casual investigation of the matter will show that in about 55 per cent of the cities of the United States the abutting property owners pay all of the street improvements. So far as I know, every modern or new city in the United States has this rule. There may be a few exceptions, but very few.

In about 70 per cent the general treasury of the municipality responds to about one-third of the cost of paving. In about 95 per cent of the cities of the United States the property owners contribute something toward street paving. In about 5 per cent of the cities it is paid for out of the general treasury, but those are the older cities of the United States and not the new ones.

I do not know that I betray any sort of confidence when I say that it was the purpose of the conferees, if they could not get the Senate conferees to agree to this item, to agree upon some basis of assessment, so that the property owner might pay at least a portion of the cost of paving the streets.

Your subcommittee that made up the bill have visited every street which it is proposed to improve. We visited every street where the Senate proposed an amendment to us before we agreed to it in conference, and we had an opportunity to learn more than we have ever known before about the city and its streets. I presume an examination of almost any city would be about like an examination of this city. You will find many streets where the only people benefited at all by the street pavement are the property owners themselves. There are many streets which are used only to go to the homes of the people living on the street, where the general public never use the street, except as the delivery wagons deliver produce to those homes for their convenience. It is admitted by every authority worthy of note in reference to municipal improvements that the immediate and direct benefit of laying a street or a sidewalk inures first to the benefit of the man who owns the property where the pavement is laid. The other benefit to the general public is an indirect benefit. It is the benefit that may be obtained by using the street. But in this country all the public roads, except a few of the older toll-gate roads, are free to the public. The modern policy has been to make them all free to the public without charge of any kind.

In other modern cities, when the people living on a certain street desire to have that street improved, they have the right to go before the authorities. In some cities it requires a majority of the property owners on the street. In some cities two-thirds are required to demand the kind of street pavement that they desire; but under the rule which prevails in the District of Columbia you will find that where there are only two or three homes on a street, where the cost of paving the street amounts to more than the homes on the street would cost, the property owners do not bear the expense, and the unimproved real estate gets the benefit of the improvement. When a man desiring to become a home owner goes to buy a lot upon that street, he pays the unearned increment taken out of the general treasury of the District and out of the Treasury of the United States.

The man who desires to become a home owner buys the lot and is compelled to pay the real-estate agent that additional sum. All the modern cities say, in view of the fact that that improvement enhances the value of the property in front of which the street is laid, have adopted the rule of requiring the property owners to pay half the cost of the street. In nearly all the large towns that is the rule. Your conferees were willing to confer with the Senate conferees. Your conferees were willing on the Borland amendment to receive suggestions, and, if they could do so, meet on common ground. I do not believe I betray any confidence when I say that it is admitted on the part of many Members of the Senate with whom you talk about it that something ought to be done. They do not believe that the present rule ought to prevail.

Now, gentlemen of the House, if you shall concur in the Senate amendment and strike out the Borland amendment, then it goes out of this bill and the conferees will have no opportunity of further insisting upon getting together with the Senate conferees on some proposition whereby we may work out that which is infinitely more equitable than the present system.

I believe also that the three conferees on the part of the House would be willing to agree with the Senate on a proposition that one-third of the cost be borne by the property owner on one side, one-third to be borne by the property owner on the other side and the other third by the General Treasury.

Now, so far as the streets that have already been improved are concerned, where the streets in the city have been perfected within later years, the argument is made that the other sections that have been neglected would be burdened by it. That can be worked out without any trouble. We can follow this with proper legislation as they have in a number of cities. I believe Baltimore is one of them, where they adopted the plan of requiring the property owner whose street had been improved to contribute to the new street, those streets where the city had improved them—they levied a street tax against the already improved streets for the purpose of requiring these people to pay for the benefits which they got in the past. In that way they equalized the burden so that those people who now have to pay under the new régime will be able to have the amount which they pay toward the general improvement in the city and toward street improvement so much reduced that their taxes in a few years will be equalized with those people who have streets already built.

If the present system is a bad one, it is no sufficient argument to say that those people who have got the benefits of the past ought not to have them, and so we will not change it but give people in the future the benefits which they ought not to have.

So, the conferees insist that the House stand with the conferees and further insist upon their disagreement with the Senate, and let us make an effort, and if we have the backing of the House, if you gentlemen believe in going forward in street improvements, if you believe we benefit the municipal government by giving them something modern and progressive in legislation such as we have in the Western States, you will stay with us and insist that we come to some terms in reference to this matter. If we do not, and the old system continues, you are just as far from making progress as you were when it commenced.

I am not going to discuss further the question of the rightfulness of the proposition, because it was discussed here for perhaps a whole day when the bill was up. It was discussed on several occasions and on both sides of the proposition. The discussion was one most interesting to those who stayed and listened to it. The speeches were very full; the speech of Judge PROUTY was filled with wisdom and facts, and I presume all are familiar with it. So the conferees ask the House to stand with them, so that we may go back and work out some system whereby the property owners will pay a portion of the advantage they get in street improvements.

Now, there is one thing I want to leave with you. Whatever tends to make the land of a nation unusually high, whatever tends to make building lots of cities artificially high, impedes the progress of home owning, and whatever impedes the progress of home owning impedes the progress of a city, impedes the progress of a county, impedes the progress of a State, and impedes the progress of a nation. In other words, what we need in America is a Nation of small landowners, a Nation of small home owners. As Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, said on one occasion when addressing the people of Boston in that famous speech of his shortly before he died, "If you will anchor a man to the soil, you make a patriot of him." So if you want to settle the labor question, if you want to settle the labor troubles in this country, the quickest way to do it is to let the laborer own the roof that shelters his wife and child. If you want to settle the problems that face this great Nation, it is necessary that the great leaders should give their time and attention to these municipalities, not so much on account of the importance to the municipality itself, but because the great problems in our cities are affecting the whole country. And if you will devote your time patiently to working out municipal problems in this District it will be reflected throughout the country and advance the cause of good government.

I know that there is no city in the United States that would adopt the system now in vogue in the District of Columbia. I know the argument is made that this is the Capital of the Nation. That is no reason why the property owner in the Capital of the Nation should have any special privileges over anybody else. They have at their door the best pay roll on earth. I do not believe that you will find any factory town where the business is as steady, where there is no upheaval affecting the pay roll. No bank failure affects the Government pay roll, no epidemic affects the Government pay roll, no crop failure affects the Government pay roll, and yet every town and city has to undergo all these chances and uncertainties, together with the inclemency of the weather and the failure of the crop season.

But in the District of Columbia, as long as the people back among your people are earning the money that can find its way into the Federal Treasury the salaries of the Government officials will constantly increase from year to year, and the number of employees will increase from year to year, and it puts behind the property of this District a substantial bulwark and support that you do not find in any other city of the same size in the United States, and there is no reason why the District government here should not be conducted somewhat upon modern and advanced lines. I would not do the District of Columbia one particle of injury, and with all of the criticisms that may be heaped upon those of us who want an honest and fair government here in the District I want to say that if this should become an issue in your district you would have a great deal of trouble, except upon sentimental lines, in defending the present system in vogue in the District of Columbia. The present system is unjust to the taxpayers of the United States, and for this reason I hope that the House will further insist upon its original proposition, and that the Senate will recede.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. PAGE of North Carolina rose.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, how much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi occupied 18 minutes, and he said he had nothing to say.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman from Wyoming has nothing to say, how long does he wish to occupy?

Mr. MONDELL. I have something to say on the subject, and I think I ought to have as much time as the gentleman from Mississippi had, but I shall be perfectly content with 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has only 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] began his 18-minute oration with a statement that he had nothing to say. I shall not question the gentleman's accuracy and veracity by insisting that he has said anything particularly pertinent to the subject. He has given us a beautiful oration on his hopes and expectations with respect to the future of the Union, and we all join with him in the hope and desire that some day, some time, we will all be good and happy. But in the meantime the question before the House is the question of assessments upon the people of the District of Columbia for paving and repair of streets. In this matter there are two general policies that may be properly followed, either of which, if inaugurated at the beginning of the building of a municipality and continued through to the end, is fairly just, reasonable, and equitable; but to depart from either one of the policies abruptly, as is proposed here, after a city is largely built and is rapidly expanding into the country, involves necessarily inequity and great hardship. For a century this city has been building on the plan of the pavement of streets and work of that character out of the General Treasury.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The last statement of the gentleman is correct, but I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is equitable and right?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if it is continued from the beginning to the end, it is reasonably equitable, just, and fair, as equitable, just, and fair as any system, because no system that can be devised is in all respects equitable, just, and fair; and the gentleman from Mississippi himself practically admitted that by his illustrations as to conditions in the outskirts of this city. What is the situation to-day? All of the main thoroughfares of the city have been paved, and they have been paved at the expense of all of the people of the District. The streets in the wholesale and retail and manufacturing portions of the city are all paved. Streets abutting valuable residential property on the Avenue of the Presidents, on New Hampshire Avenue, and elsewhere, where are situated the homes of the rich and the millionaires, have all been paved. The paving now needed is in the suburbs abutting the homes of people in moderate circumstances—people who in very many instances own their own building lots—and the burden will be lifted by this legislation from the shoulders of the merchants and the property owners along the rich and valuable business and residential streets, it will be lifted from the shoulders of the owners of the million-dollar homes on the principal residential streets, and will be placed upon the shoulders of the owners and prospective builders of humble homes in the suburbs of the city. That is the plan proposed. If from the beginning we had had this plan of assessment, then it would have been fair and equitable to continue it, but to abruptly change conditions and suddenly burden the owners of small homes, those who have property in outlying districts, purchased with the understanding that they would not personally be burdened with these assessments, is to lay upon them a burden that they should not be compelled to bear.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Will the people to whom the gentleman refers have to bear this burden, or will it not, if this bill goes through in its present shape, benefit those who lay out these subdivisions—the real estate men principally?

Mr. MONDELL. This legislation, if it goes through, will benefit no one, in my opinion, except those who already have their streets paved; and who are they? The owners of valuable property in the heart of the city, the owners of valuable property on the residential avenues. On the other hand, who will be burdened by it? The people who have bought lots in outlying districts, the people who purchased homes in outlying districts; in the main they are people of small, limited means. The gentleman says that the real estate dealers in the suburbs will benefit. How? The real estate dealer now sells his property upon the basis of its value and on the basis of its cost, and one of the elements of cost is the cost of paving, and if there be no cost of paving assessed against the property then the real estate dealer can not add to his price what that improvement cost; but under this change in procedure the real estate dealer will place the burden on the shoulders of the man who buys the house. Is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] or any other gentleman simple-minded enough to imagine that the owner of property in the suburbs desiring to sell lots and houses will bear the burden of the cost of street improvements? Will not the purchaser have to pay?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, will not the purchaser of property know when he buys the property that he will have to pay for the street improvements, and does he not take that into consideration?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the purchaser of property in the future, if this law went on the statute book, might not be seriously injured by it, because he would buy his property with that understanding.

But all those who have purchased property up to this time, and there are thousands of them—departmental clerks, people with small salaries, people of limited means—have purchased their property on the basis of the laws as they are now on the statute books. You are proposing by this legislation to lay upon the owners of all lots abutting unimproved streets on the outskirts of the city this additional burden, which should be borne to a very considerable extent by those owning property in the business part of the city, and particularly those owning these magnificent mansions on the residential avenues. If at the beginning it had been deemed wise to build this city on the basis of such assessments as are suggested and that has been done, it would have been unwise, inequitable, unfair, and unjust to have departed from that policy. It is just as unjust, just as unwise, just as inequitable, just as unfair to the owners of property now, after three-fourths of the city has been well paved, to relieve these property owners whose property has been improved from the share of the burden they should bear in the improvement of other streets. There is this additional reason why the plan proposed is not fair or just in a city like this in these days of automobiles. There are many streets much more largely used by the general public for business or pleasure purposes than by the abutting owners. It is not fair that the property owners along a street largely used and quickly worn out by general automobile traffic should bear all the burden of placing or keeping such a street in repair. The general public benefits by the use of such streets; the general public should pay for their paving and repair.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on this amendment.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to recede from House disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 28 and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were—ayes 15, noes 38.

So the motion to concur was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 103.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a four-room addition to the John F. Cook School, $33,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 103 as just read by the Clerk and amendments Nos. 104 and 105 all relate to appropriations either for the extensions of present school buildings or purchases of school sites. I would say to the House that these matters were all carefully and diligently investigated by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations formulating this bill in the House; that we made the appropriations for the extension of the school system by the erection of school buildings and purchased all the additional ground that appealed to the committee as being in any way necessary at the present time. This amendment and the two following were estimated for, it is true, by the District Commissioners, but they were not insisted upon either by the District Commissioners or very insistingly by the board of education. They are matters that at some time may have to be attended to, but they are not now in any measure urgent. As one of the conferees, I ask that the House sustain us and disagree to the amendment now before the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. What are these amendments which the Senate added?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The Senate has added, in this particular amendment before the House, the Cook School, a colored school, located in the northwest, $33,000, for an addition to the building. Upon investigating it we found, while that building was full, it was not particularly crowded, and that there were other school buildings for colored children within reach of some of these pupils in which the schoolrooms were not full, and the pupils might reach them and not be at all crowded.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman sure this is a colored school?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The Cook School?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I was thinking of the next school—the Powell School.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman ought to be more accurate——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The facts are the same that exist as to both of these schools—the colored school and the other.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much is wanted for the other?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Sixty-six thousand dollars for the Powell School and $33,000 for the Cook School. One is a four-room addition and the other is an eight-room addition.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is also mistaken about the next school—the Powell School. That is not a colored school. I have two children who attended it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I beg the gentleman's pardon again; I was mistaken; it is very easy to make a mistake about this great number of schools, but the facts are as I stated and are absolutely true, that the necessity does not exist provided that a proper distribution of the children is made in the localities where the schools now exist.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like about five minutes on this one item.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Wyoming begins the Chair would like to ask him a question. Now, the gentleman from North Carolina says the very same question is involved in amendments numbered 103, 104, and 105, and the Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he wants a separate vote on those three amendments?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to having amendments numbered 103 and 104 voted on together.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. One is for a building and the other is for a site.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will give me 10 minutes on the two items.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the gentleman can discuss them in five minutes; the same principle is involved.

Mr. MONDELL. I may not use all the time——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The same principle is involved and the gentleman can use five minutes, and then if he has something more to say——

Mr. MONDELL. I think I know more about these schools than the gentleman does. I am going to speak of my knowledge.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the gentleman has a habit of thinking he knows more about everything than anybody in the House——

Mr. FOWLER. Not altogether; there is Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to insist on a separate vote on this item. Mr. Speaker, it is not very difficult for me to prove, as far as this particular matter is concerned, that I know more about it than the gentleman from North Carolina. He thought it was a colored school. It is a white school, just off Mount Pleasant Street, a school two of my children attended a year ago. There is a very great need for an additional school building up there on the hill at that point.

It is a part of the city that is growing more rapidly than any other part. I had great difficulty last winter in getting my children into the schools in that part of the city owing to the fact that there was not room. It was necessary to send part of them to the Cook School and part of them to the school that is provided for in the next item—the Powell School—in order to secure accommodations for them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. CRAMTON. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I found the same difficulty. I was not able to put my little girl in this Cook School for a period of two or three months owing to a lack of accommodations.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say, from the number of children the gentleman from Wyoming has, part in this and part in another school, he ought to be a Progressive.

Mr. MONDELL. I am progressive in the true sense, as all good Republicans are. I am blessed with five. Four of them are attending school in the city of Washington.

This school is needed and it is needed badly. It is in a very crowded condition, and it is very difficult to take care of the growing school population up there on the hill.

Scholars in this particular locality are divided between the Cook School and the Powell and Thompson Schools. There is an abundance of need for the additions to these schools. The District Commissioners very wisely bought enough ground so that the additions could be built and still leave ample ground around the schoolhouses. And if the gentleman is really anxious to provide the District with needed school facilities, he will not hesitate to agree to this item.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may get the facts in the RECORD, I wish to say that on school buildings and grounds your committee has been most liberal. If the committee would look on pages 56 and 57—I am not going to enumerate them all—they will find that the subcommittee of the House and the House itself were more liberal this year in the amount of money contributed to the school buildings than they have been for several years. I want also to state for the benefit and information of the House, to those who may have forgotten, that two years ago a very accurate measurement was made by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of the school space in the District of Columbia for pupils, and it is vastly in excess of school space in any other city in the United States, and perhaps in the world. And where they speak of the schools being crowded in the District of Columbia, it is largely a question of apportionment and assignment of children, because there is more floor space, more cubic feet of air space, for every eligible child in the District of Columbia than in any other city in the United States.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just for this suggestion. Mr. Speaker, I live up there on the hill, and have two children. I tried to get them into the Powell School and the school across the street—I have forgotten the name of that—but could not get them in there at all, and then went over to the Cook School, and after quite a bit of persuasion got the children in there. But my little boy has been sitting at the teacher's desk all the year because he could not get a seat elsewhere. It does seem to me that there is a lack of facilities on the hill.

Mr. SISSON. That is possibly true, because they allow much more floor space and air space per child in the District of Columbia than they do anywhere else in the world. Now, it is not a question of the availability of the floor space; it is failing to use what they have. Another thing, in some portions of the city there is ample space, and in order to apportion these children this thing was all thrashed out here in this bill once or twice before, and statements of the character made by my friend just sitting down had been made so repeatedly that when the present Postmaster General had charge of this bill he had the engineer commissioner of the District measure all the floor space in this city in all the schools, and the overwhelming facts were that there was more floor space per educable child in the District of Columbia than in any other city. And that was when they were making the demand for these additional schools. Notwithstanding the condition as it prevailed at that time, your committee has added school buildings, has added additional rooms to these other schools, and we have been most liberal with the schools here. In fact, I state that the liberality in reference to the schools in the District is more than the liberality shown by the people of any other city in the world. They have more teachers; they have more floor space; the schools are more accessible, as a rule, to the children than they are in other cities, and the salary of the teachers is higher here than in any other city in the world for the amount and character of classes which they teach. There can be no complaint from any source. And your committee gave to the schools of this District liberal appropriations, and we yielded to the Senate on many of the items which we thought were not necessary, but which they insisted upon, and these are the items we could not agree upon. And to be perfectly frank about it, this bill now carries more money with those items which we have already agreed to than any bill that ever passed both Houses of Congress, and there can be no criticism lodged against your subcommittee, there can be no criticism lodged against your conferees. If you add all of these amounts, you will find that they are vastly more than the District bill has ever carried before. Your conferees have done the very best they could, and we have been most careful in investigating these matters, and we have given in this bill more than, I think, was necessary. In many instances, upon the demand of the Senate conferees, we yielded when we ought not to have yielded, in an effort to get together.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to recede from the House disagreement on Senate amendment 103 and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 40.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the next amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 104.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an eight-room addition to the Powell School, $66,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I want to get the right to ask a question, if I may be allowed to do so.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I have the floor, and the gentleman may ask his question.

Mr. DONOVAN. What are you going to do with these statements made by two Members here that they could not get their children into the schools? Are they untruthful about it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do this with them: An investigation of the conditions herewith show that if these two gentlemen or any other gentlemen who live in that locality, and a great many other people who live in that locality, will remove their prejudices or their lack of desire for their children to go a few blocks farther to school, they will find plenty of room for them.

Mr. DONOVAN. They go to the schools in their neighborhood, and both gentlemen state here that they could not get their children into school. Now, you bring in here a report, or your associate from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] brings in a measurement, showing the space in the schools, but yet these Members can not get their children into school.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I am not controverting the facts. I am not controverting answers to the gentleman's inquiries.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In a moment. I am not controverting the facts, I say, as to this particular amendment. Gentlemen who are well acquainted with the city know that it is over on the hill known as Columbia Heights, or Washington Heights, where there is very dense population. The whole city there is built up. There are three schools, none of them very far from each other, and all of those schools are about full. We are willing to admit that. We do not deny that. But we do come with the statement that there are a number of buildings, not a very great distance removed, that have classrooms that are practically empty; and whether it is the business of these particular gentlemen to send their children to those schools or to suit all other people in sending the children to school, I contend that the board of education should adjust this matter by a reassignment and readjustment of the children.

The school buildings are not now so overoccupied, are not so far distant from these children, that there is any hardship for the children to enter them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman suggests that perhaps by sending the children farther away accommodations could be secured. It happens that my little girl of 7 has to go about 7 blocks in order to go to this Cook School, crossing two street-car tracks. How much farther do you think it necessary and proper to send a child of that age in order that she may go to school?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think that if the gentleman will investigate he will find a school nearer to him into which he can get his child.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have investigated, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has; but it is apparent that the gentleman from North Carolina has not investigated the subject, because there is no school nearer than that for me to send my child to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there is but one remedy, if we are to make these appropriations and spend these amounts of money for the purpose of accommodating the children of Members of Congress, because I have heard no particular complaint from elsewhere, and that is to pass a provision requiring that Members of Congress shall live in some other locality in the city where there are school facilities.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not complaining on my own account, for the reason that my little girl is now in school, although she was delayed several months in getting in. But I am trying for the benefit of others to elicit information for the gentleman in charge of the bill so that he can act intelligently. The gentleman has manifested by his statements that he does not understand the situation surrounding the schools.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is all right for the gentleman to say—the gentleman who knows nothing about the general conditions in this city or the general school conditions here; it is all right for him to come in here and charge me with ignorance, when I have visited practically every school building in this city in an effort to discharge my duty as a member of this committee, and I do come here and say I do know what the conditions are generally in the District of Columbia, whereas the gentleman from Michigan does not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to suggest that the amendment we have before us and which was under discussion—No. 103—has to do with the John F. Cook School and not with general conditions. The decision should be made with reference to that school, and not with reference to general conditions.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, we must take into consideration the general school facilities of the city in making appropriations and not one particular school. Otherwise we would build three or four additional schoolhouses in that section, and possibly in a few brief years there would be some other schoolhouses in other sections of the city in which there would be no children, merely to bring the schoolhouses into the same block where the children reside.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it not desirable to bring the schoolhouses into the localities where the children are?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Would the gentleman abandon schoolhouses only a few blocks away, throwing that investment away, so that he might bring the schoolhouses within the reach of the children?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no such schoolhouse involved in this case.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have about 10 minutes. I know something about the Powell School, and I would like to say something about it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has laid great emphasis on the statement that a showing was made some time ago to prove that the city of Washington had better and larger school facilities, compared with the school population, and more air and floor space for students, and so forth, than any other city in the country. Well, I do not know as to the accuracy of those statements. I live in a little town of a thousand people, and I know that our school facilities there, as to the amount of space for scholars, are better than they are in this beautiful Capital of the Nation.

Now, I happen to know something about these particular schools. I want the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], who believes in schools and who is a friend of education. He is trying to keep down the appropriations. That is the trouble with him. In order to make this matter clear I must refer to my own experience. The nearest school to my home is 8 blocks away; in a radius of from 8 to 10 blocks from my home we have the choice of 3 schools—the Powell, the Thompson, across the street from the Powell, and the Cook. A year ago it was some weeks before we could find school accommodations for our four children, and then it became necessary to send the two smaller children 10 blocks to school; and it was necessary to take them there, because it was necessary to cross car lines in order to get there.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman inform us how far he went to school when he was a child?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman how far he went to school when he went as a child?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I went a good way, and I went through snowdrifts and all that sort of thing.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman whether he feels it is a hardship for a child to go 10 blocks, or even 12 blocks, to reach a school?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is a good deal of a hardship for a child of 7 or 8 to go that distance in the winter and to cross several car tracks in going that distance in a city. Now, there may be all the school facilities in this city that are needed, provided you could bring the school facilities and the children together. The gentleman certainly does not expect that the people living in the northwest will send their children clear across the city to school; and yet that is what we are compelled to do. Pupils in my neighborhood, including my eldest daughter, go between 4 and 5 miles to the high school, because there is no high-school accommodation available nearer, and two street car transfers are necessary in going that distance.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman knows very well that steps have been taken to meet this condition that he speaks of.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand there have.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. And he is trying to prejudice this case by one that has been provided for.

Mr. MONDELL. It will be three years at the earliest before these new high-school facilities are provided, and if we do not provide for this condition at the Powell School, the congestion will grow worse year after year, and before the school is provided for there will be hundreds of children up there without school facilities.

Now, another thing. Adjacent to the Powell School, and across the street from it, is the Thompson School. Adjacent to the Thompson School is an old wooden building; and I will say to the gentleman that I left my youngest daughter at that old wooden fire trap several mornings this last winter with very considerable misgivings. I am not compelled to send my children to that kind of a schoolhouse in the little country town in which I live, and I ought not to be compelled to do it in the Capital of the Nation. It is an old frame shack—a fire trap—heated with stoves, adjacent to the back doors of half a dozen residences, and crowded to the doors with children in the lower grades, little children who would find it difficult to escape if a fire should break out. The gentleman from North Carolina pretends to tell us that we do not need additional school facilities in that part of the city, when we have children crowded out of school, children going 5 miles to the nearest high school available, children going to school in a fire trap that is a disgrace to the city. Yet the gentleman insists that we shall not make provision for these schools. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment numbered 104, and agree to the same.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 47.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two, not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the other side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that there is no other side for tellers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One-fifth of a quorum is the required number.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. One-fifth of a quorum orders tellers; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raises the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Of course we can not get tellers with one-fifth of a quorum present in the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I merely desired to save time by making the point of order, but rather than have the point of no quorum made and the roll called I will ask unanimous consent that tellers be ordered.

Mr. DONOVAN. No; you get tellers by the count. You said that there were 32. A fifth of a quorum is 20.

The SPEAKER. This is in the House, not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that tellers be ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that tellers be ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed Mr. PAGE of North Carolina and Mr. MONDELL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 52.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. MONDELL was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 105.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a site for a new school building in the sixth division, north of G Street and east of Tenth Street, $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 105 and agree to the same.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 169.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, to be erected on the site purchased and owned by said hospital, $50,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 169 and agree to the same.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 178.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preparation of plans and specifications, necessary grading of site, and for the erection of hospital buildings, including power house and domestic-service building, for municipal purposes, to be located and erected on the site now owned by the District of Columbia at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, and hereafter to be known as Gallinger Hospital, with authority to contract for the completion of said buildings at a total cost not to exceed $300,000, which amount is hereby appropriated and made immediately available.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 178 and agree to the same.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] desire to make any statement in regard to this?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I had not desired to make any statement; but if the gentleman wants to discuss it, I will make a statement.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not care for more than a minute or two myself.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, for the information of Members who may not have been listening when this amendment was read, I will state that this is a proposition to construct a hospital in the northwest, near the location of the Tuberculosis Hospital, and the hospital which it is proposed to construct is to be for indigent patients in the District of Columbia now cared for in another locality. The conferees did not believe that this amendment should be agreed to, or that this construction should be proceeded with at this time. I ask the House to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield me time?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asked the House to join with the committee in progressive legislation. Here is the opportunity. No city worthy of the name should be without a municipal hospital. Few cities in the world worthy of the name are without municipal hospitals. One of those cities, great and beautiful as it is, the Capital of this great Nation, has no municipal hospital. We are entirely dependent upon private hospitals. The time has certainly arrived when a municipal hospital should be undertaken and its building speedily begun. We have the ground for such a hospital. It will take four or five years to build it if we begin the work now. There are sufficient revenues available in the treasury of the District to pay the District's half of this work. It is proposed, in this connection, to perpetuate the memory of a Senator of the United States who has done a splendid work in general legislation and for the people of the District of Columbia, and I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who believes in progressive municipal legislation, according to his statement, to embrace the opportunity to so legislate.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the provision in this bill which authorizes the appropriation of $300,000 for a municipal hospital is a question that has been agitating the minds of certain gentlemen in the city of Washington for a good many years. The city of Washington is now taking care of its indigent poor in various hospitals of the city, together with the Washington Asylum, which is the poorhouse. I think, so far as the Government is concerned in taking care of this class of patients, we are very well situated. The idea of going out here, as has been said in the hearings on this subject, 3 or 4 miles to establish a municipal hospital is not going to work any benefit to those who find it necessary to enter such an institution. Three hundred thousand dollars is but a beginning. We must understand, and the House must understand, that if $300,000 is authorized for building this hospital it does not mean that that is the extent of the expense that would be necessary for such an institution, because it means in the end what was recommended a few years ago by a commission who investigated the subject—$3,000,000. That was the sum recommended 10 years ago. I think there is no neglect of this class of people. If there was any neglect, I would be the last man in the world to stand before you and advocate the saving of a few thousand dollars in taking care of the unfortunate class of people who are not always paupers, but indigent at the time on account of the unfortunate condition of being sick.

So I believe the House ought not at this time to authorize the beginning of the building of this municipal hospital. I hope the House will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming and let us go along as we are doing now in taking care of this class of patients in these most excellent hospitals that the city of Washington now supports.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I served on the Committee on Appropriations some years, and while in that service I had an assignment to the subcommittee that has jurisdiction over this bill. During my service there we had the question of establishing a municipal hospital under consideration several times. The judgment of the committee was, and my judgment still is, that we have a much better system of taking care of the indigent patients in the District than we could have by the establishment of a municipal hospital. To-day we have the benefit of every hospital in the District of Columbia. So, as a matter of fact, we have a municipal hospital better equipped for the care of indigent sick than any municipal hospital in the world could afford. It is a much more economic plan than it would be to establish a hospital under the jurisdiction of the local authorities. The private hospitals are contributed to out of the funds of the District and of the Government every year, and every hospital in the District is required to take patients sent to them, not only by the Board of Charities but by every official charged with the conduct of affairs in the District of Columbia.

The conclusion reached by the committee when I was serving on it was that the thing which we needed most here was a tuberculosis hospital, and that committee recommended the establishment of a tuberculosis hospital on the ground where it is proposed to build this municipal hospital. The Tuberculosis Hospital is in existence to-day. It is caring for all that class of patients.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. It is also fair to state that all the other institutions declined to take tuberculosis patients.

Mr. MADDEN. They did, and that was the reason of establishing the tuberculosis hospital. To establish this hospital now for the care of indigent sick to be managed by the District government officials would be a species of extravagance unjustifiable, and would take away the efficiency which already exists for the care of these people and place them in an institution where the brand of poverty would be placed upon them; whereas now, although they may not be able to care for themselves and pay for their care, they are sent to institutions which house people who are able to pay for services, and where they are given the same character of treatment that the man who has millions of dollars receives in the same institution.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I ask solely for information on my part. Does the Government contribute to the maintenance of a hospital such as the Providence Hospital?

Mr. MADDEN. This bill appropriates something for almost every hospital in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COX. How much does it amount to?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the amount in my mind.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It appropriates $19,000 for the Garfield Hospital, $19,000 for the Providence Hospital, and $5,000 for the George Washington University and Georgetown.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a per diem allowance for each patient that goes to these hospitals.

Mr. COX. The amount which is contributed to these hospitals is designed to take care of the indigent people?

Mr. MADDEN. The amount contributed throughout the bill takes care of the indigent sick in the District, and it does not amount to as much as one-half of the salaries to be paid for the operation of a municipal hospital would amount to. So that if you build a municipal hospital you invest about $2,000,000, and then you employ a staff, to whom you pay an enormous salary. The interest on the investment and the salary roll will amount to five times more than we pay for the care of the indigent sick in the District under the present plan. Although I am not in favor of economizing against the interests of the sick who are poor, yet if we can get more effective service in their behalf by the payment of 10 cents, there is no reason why we should expend $10 for it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman believe from his experience on the committee and dealing with this subject that even if we should establish a strictly charitable hospital the patients in that hospital would get the same treatment that they would get under the present system, where the hospital authorities are required to treat all patients alike?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have just said that they would not get anything like the treatment they get now, because each one of these institutions at present is organized to treat all classes of people, and they are only treating the indigent sick of the District because they are compelled to do it, and they are compelled to do it on the same basis that they treat the millionaires. So not only from the standpoint of benefit to the poor who are sick, but from the standpoint of the investment, we are getting better service to-day than we would get if we established a municipal hospital in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentlemen from Wyoming to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment 178 and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment 226.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 8, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That to the extent the revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1915 shall exceed the proportionate part of the appropriations made in this or any other act and chargeable against said revenues, the same shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of 'Miscellaneous receipts.'"

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to discuss this proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. How much does the gentleman expect to use?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. My expectation is to discuss it for about three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not use over three minutes, I will not ask for more than that time.

Mr. PAGE or North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I do not care at this time to enter into any discussion as to what the meaning of the language of this amendment is. When the bill was before the House I tried to explain at some length what the result of the adoption of the language meant. It is unquestionable. We tried to have no concealment that it is a turning back into the Treasury of any unexpended sum that may remain after the payment of the amounts carried in this and other bills, and that means that the proportion contributed out of the National Treasury to the support of the District government is diminished by that sum, whatever it may be. In other words, to put it frankly, it is an invasion of what has come to be a sacred thing, worshipped by a great many people in the District of Columbia, the so-called half-and-half principle. We believe that there is not any reason why the National Government should contribute to the support of the District of Columbia in exactly this proportion. As one Member of the House, and as a member of this committee, I do believe that there is an obligation upon the National Treasury to contribute to the support and maintenance of the District of Columbia, and I shall not enter into any detail as to why these reasons exist. They are apparent, but there is no reason why it should be in the proportion of $1 from the taxpayers of the District of Columbia and $1 from the General Treasury, contributed to by all of the taxpayers in the United States. While the exact language of this amendment may not be the proper thing to write into the law, it establishes a principle that I believe this House should establish and places the conferees in a position in its conference with the Senate whereby we may evolve a plan that will meet not only with the approval of this House but with the approval of the taxpayers of the country.

I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in three minutes I shall give three reasons why I do not care to discuss this question at length. First, it is very apparent that with the very small attendance, not even a quorum of the Committee of the Whole much less a quorum of the House, the Committee on Appropriations will be able to control a majority friendly to its view of the matter and vote down any amendment that might be offered. It is also very well known that in a full attendance of the House the other day on District day a bill involving this same question, this same principle, was defeated overwhelmingly, and therefore it would not be worth while to discuss the matter with the small attendance that we have now, controlled, I think, by the committee. I feel sure, at the same time, if we had a full attendance of the House the House would vote favorably on my proposition.

My second reason for not desiring to discuss the matter at length is that the gentleman from North Carolina has himself admitted that he has rather lost faith in his former view of the matter and that he doubts now whether the provision should stand at least in the form in which it passed the House.

My third reason is that of course this provision will, in any event, go off upon the insistence of the Senate. It is new legislation upon an appropriation bill and never should have been placed upon an appropriation bill, and under the practice of the two bodies new legislation on an appropriation bill, placed on by one body, must go off ultimately upon the insistence of the other, the other body understanding that on a square vote with a full membership of the House this provision would be voted out of the bill, it will of course insist upon its going off, so it is not necessary to have a record vote now.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I find that several gentlemen desire to be heard on this proposition. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall occupy the five minutes, but I wish to express a few ideas which I have gathered from time to time during the 12 years of my service in this House respecting the half-and-half system. I will say, to begin with, that I for one came here a believer, and I still believe, that the National Capital should be made the most beautiful city in the world, regardless of expense, and I for one am willing whenever a proposition comes up to beautify this city, to vote an unlimited amount from the Treasury of the United States to do so; but I am absolutely convinced that there is no reason at all for basing the appropriations upon the arbitrary rule of one half from the Government and the other half from the District. Why? Some years the Congress might want to appropriate much more than one half. Some occasion might occur in which we wanted to beautify this city many millions of dollars above one half. Again, occasions might occur when the revenues of the city expended properly might be sufficient to care for the needs of this city, supplemented by an additional sum of one-third or one-quarter; so that the arbitrary, fixed rule of one-half is inconsistent, illogical, unwise, and, in my judgment, to a certain extent unjust and inequitable. I wish to say after consideration on my part I have come to the conclusion that, in the first place, a reasonable valuation assessment should be made upon the property of the city and a reasonable and just rate of taxation based thereon. I mean reasonable in this, not as large, perhaps, as some of the other cities of the United States have to pay, but a reasonable assessment upon the value of the property here, owing to the conditions existing here. Upon that, after the collection is made, then a just and proper distribution should be made of the money; or, in other words, an estimate should be made of what the city actually requires and needs owing to its being the Capital of the Nation. Expend the money that is raised by assessment as far as it goes, then continue on and make the improvements according to the estimates that the Congress determines is right and proper, and then the deficiency, whatever it may be, be it one-half, be it two-thirds, be it three times the amount, the Government ought to pay it, and I for one would be willing to vote for it.

Let the commissioners make their estimates for what they need. Send them to the proper committee of this House. Let those estimates be approved. Then, in so far as the District revenues will pay them, pay them out of that. In so far as the revenues will not pay them, then the Congress, I feel sure, will vote the required amount, regardless of what it is. If we desire to be extravagant or if times are good and we have plenty of money and we desire to beautify this city, let us beautify it out of the National Treasury, and not be restricted by the one-half system and be bound to pay that every year, regardless of what the needs of the Government are.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. Just one minute more.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. DAVIS. Let a just and proper estimate be made. Let the committee adopt it, and I think the Congress would also sanction and approve it and act upon it, regardless of what revenue the city had raised. Let us put that into effect; let us make the improvements, and the deficiency, whatever it may be, the General Government should pay.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] desires a little time, and I yield him five minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, as you perhaps all know, I have given a good deal of thought and consideration to the taxation situation in the District of Columbia. As I look at it, Congress faces a condition and not a theory. When the commissioners were appointed in 1874 to investigate this whole question they found that if they would levy upon the people of the District a tax of $1.50 on the $100, at actual value, that it would produce about enough revenue to pay one-half of the contemplated expenses of this administration, and such a law was enacted. As the city grew in wealth it was not very long until it was found that if this rule were applied it would produce more money than was really necessary, provided the Government paid a corresponding amount. The first thing they did, as this began to show, was to try to find ways to cut down the amount that would be raised from the District, and one of the first things they did was to take off the tax list all moneys and credits—what is known as "intangible property." That did not quite reduce it enough, and then they concluded they would take off all such things as diamonds, personal wearing apparel, articles of personal adornment; and that did not keep it down low enough, and then they provided that instead of real estate being assessed at 15 mills, or $1.50 on the $100 of its actual value, it should be assessed at 10 mills, or $1 on the $100. Now, everybody who has studied the question at all knows if you apply even these rules that it produces more revenue than is legitimately needed here, provided the Government continues to put up its additional one-half; and the very minute you attempt to propose any kind of legislation here to put taxation upon these people such as we all bear at home they raise the cry, "Why, there is no necessity for it."

A few years ago when this House did in fact pass an inheritance tax, it was sent to the commissioners and the commissioners reported that it was a good bill; that it was just; that practically all the States of the Union had such a tax; but there was no necessity for levying it here, because the taxes they now collected were ample to meet the District's one-half. Now Congress is facing this situation of allowing great favoritism and exemption and partiality to these people or abolishing the half-and-half principle. This little amendment is a mild one, but it goes quite a way toward effecting a reform. In a few days I expect to try to get before this House an inheritance-tax bill which I have prepared and which has been reported favorably by the committee. When we were discussing that question in the House recently, attention was called to the fact that men all over the country who did not actually live here made this their place of technical residence in order to escape the inheritance tax and other taxes, and reference was made to a Mr. Post, who had just died a few days before that. The claim was made that although he lived at Battle Creek, Mich., and possessed a great many million dollars there, yet he had sought to make this his technical residence to avoid two classes of taxation, one taxation upon personal property, such as moneys and credits, and the other to avoid the inheritance tax. Some gentleman on the other side at once sprang to his feet and asserted that there was nothing in that claim; that he had investigated it and that there was no truth in it.

Since that time—and I happened to-day to get a copy of the will and the schedule—that man's will has been filed in this District for probate, in which he recites that he is a resident of the District. The inventory filed with the will on application for probate shows that he is worth $22,000,000. He has for many years lived in Battle Creek, Mich. He had only $9,700 worth of real estate in this District—a little bit of a property up here—in which he never lived. All the personal property he has in this District is $1,000 worth of household goods, which have been in storage in one place for 10 years, and I have the record of it. And yet, by doing that, he defeats Michigan out of more than a million dollars of inheritance tax, if he had died an actual resident where he really had lived. And I might say while I am making this same point that he had $18,000,000 of money and credits that would have been taxed all of these years under the laws of Michigan. But he claimed he was a resident here, and therefore fought taxation there. When he comes here he does not have to pay it, because under the law it is not required of him. We have neither inheritance tax nor tax on moneys and credits here.

Now, Congress has got to look this thing squarely in the face. Are we going to make Washington an asylum for the rich, where they can get out of taxation elsewhere by claiming a technical residence in the District of Columbia? I apprehend, if I propose my bill, there will be fellows all over this House who will say, "You do not need that kind of a tax. We do not need it; we have more revenues than we need." I admit that. But that is no ground, in my judgment, why we should exempt these men from taxation of these vast estates; and I have got a good many cases of the same kind in the city of Washington, where that thing has been carried on successfully and systematically for the purpose of escaping taxation in the jurisdiction where they actually lived. For one, I will put myself on record that I am going to fight just as long as I am in this Congress for the abolition of that practice, and help put through laws making that impossible. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I should say anything upon this proposition at all. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was allotted three minutes for the purpose. Our distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who is the ranking Republican on the subcommittee for appropriations for the District of Columbia, expressed himself in favor of the House yielding on the half-and-half proposition, and my friend from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], the ranking Republican on the Committee on the District of Columbia, has expressed similar sentiments. I do not know whether these two latter gentlemen represent a majority of this side of the House, or a minority, upon this proposition. But I know that their views do not represent the unanimous sentiment on the subject.

I do not agree with my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the city of Washington ought to be made the most beautiful city in the world, regardless of expense, as stated by him.

Mr. DAVIS. Why?

Mr. MANN. I think the city of Washington ought to be a beautiful city, and I know it is a beautiful city; but I would not make it the most beautiful city in the world regardless of expense, nor do I think it is essential to make it the most beautiful city of the world in any event. It is a beautiful city and ought to be maintained a beautiful city. I believe that the half-and-half system in the main has worked very well. I do not undertake to say whether it is the most perfect system which could be devised, but in my opinion it is much better than any which has yet been proposed to take its place.

Under the proposition in the bill every dollar which would be appropriated in the District of Columbia for anything more than the bare necessities would be considered as coming out of the General Treasury, because all of the revenues raised on the property of the District would be subject to be used, first, for the ordinary necessities of government, and as it is proposed that the General Treasury shall contribute the balance, whenever we erected a bridge, or paved a wide street, or put in a bathing pool, or provided for anything else other than the bare necessaries of government, any gentleman could properly say that it all comes out of the General Treasury. I do not believe that is a wise position to place Congress in. I think we fairly ought to know in advance what portion of the expenses is to be borne by the local people and what portion is to be borne by the General Government. Hence I am opposed to the proposition which is put in the House bill. While I do not apprehend that the House will now recede, I think that if the Senate insists upon its amendment, at some later period, when the House membership is larger, when the seats are all occupied, when the matter has been again fully canvassed, as it was on the District bill, which was defeated the other day on a roll call, the House will take the same position again on this amendment which it took on the substitute for the George bill. Of course, no one can predict what will take place. I believe that the present system in the main produces harmony and is fair. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Wyoming may be agreed to; if not now, later on.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to contest this amendment at this time. I do not know that I would do so at any time, as I realize the fact that the committees of the House must, to a large extent, work out these bills. But on the question of taxation, especially in this District, I believe, of course, that all taxation should be uniform and that it should be distributed in accordance with the wealth of the District and the wealth of the individuals that pay it. I am one of those who believe that all men ought to pay some taxes, because I believe that to support the Government makes a good citizen. But the man who has great wealth should pay in proportion to his wealth and the man who has poverty should pay in proportion to his poverty. But I do not agree with the idea that we should tax neither wealth nor poverty unless the exigencies of the Government require it.

That government is most fortunate that can run at a low rate of taxation. The citizenship of a government is more fortunate that lives under a government that taxes them lightly, because when a citizenship is burdened with low taxation they not only have a larger field for the expenditure of their individual income, but they have a greater opportunity for the development of institutions under that government for the benefit of the whole community and the protection of those who are in distress.

But I want to say, so far as this matter pending before the House is concerned, that although I believe the people of the District of Columbia ought to bear a fair share of the burdens of taxation, I am one of those who believe that the District of Columbia does not belong alone to the citizens of this District, but that it belongs as well to the people of the United States. This is the Capital of the greatest country in the world. We should be proud of it, and we should make the Nation proud of it, and we must make expenditures here to set an example to the other cities of the United States that would not, under ordinary circumstances, be borne by a city.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not right now, please. There is no city in the world where the Government itself owns more property. We can not overlook the fact that the fire and police protection is granted to the property of the Government of the United States here by the government of the District of Columbia. I do not believe for a minute that this great Government of ours should put the entire burden of sustaining the government of the District of Columbia on the people of this District. I believe that we as a Government derive benefits, and we ought to be willing to pay for them, just like any citizen pays for the benefits he derives.

Now, as to what is a fair distribution I am not prepared to say. I doubt very much whether there is a man in this House who is prepared to say and to sustain what he says by facts by which he can demonstrate his position. A number of years ago an agreement was made that the Government should pay half and the people of the District half. That may have been a very fair agreement then. We may have outgrown it; possibly we have. What I do say is that none of us is in a position to-day to say whether that agreement is abstract justice or not, and I should like very much to see the committees that have charge of this matter authorize a commission of disinterested persons to be appointed to go out and consider what is a fair and equitable division of the taxes between the people of the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In just a moment. And when that is ascertained and we know how much of the burden of the Government, according to the report of disinterested men who have the time to investigate, should be borne by the citizenship of this District and how much should be borne by the General Government for the benefits it receives from the government of the District, then Congress can intelligently face the question and legislate intelligently as to how much of the burden should be borne by the General Government and how much by the citizenship of this District.

I think it is a mistake to say that a vast number of wealthy people live in this District and must go untaxed. Why, the wealth of this District does not pay the taxes of the District. The wealth of no great city pays the taxes of the city. The great wealth of no government bears the great burden of taxes of the government. It is the masses of the people who must pay the taxes under any government, and the masses of the people here are the people who will bear the taxes in the end.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment 226 and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the last amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is the last one.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House ask for a further conference on the matters in disagreement between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments? Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota.

CHANGE OF CALENDAR REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. House bill No. 4273, a bill referring the claims of the State of Rhode Island to the Court of Claims for adjudication, was referred to the Private Calendar. It ought to be referred to the Union Calendar, and it is now so referred.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend a few remarks in the RECORD upon the reclamation extension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the reclamation extension bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] is compelled to leave the city to attend some commencement exercises in which some of his children will take part. He requested me to ask unanimous consent that the Frankford Arsenal item, which was pending when the Committee of the Whole rose yesterday, might go over until Tuesday. I told the gentleman that I would make that request myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] requests that the Frankford Arsenal item may go over until Tuesday next.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, if that request is granted, it will be in order at that time to return to the items in this bill for the purpose of offering additional items as amendments. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] was attempting to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not my understanding. I do not wish that there shall be any misunderstanding, because I do not wish to take any advantage of anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will indulge the Chair a moment, the Chair will make a statement.

Just after adjournment yesterday afternoon several gentlemen from Pennsylvania who were interested in the Frankford Arsenal item, and especially interested in the point of order pending, expressed to the Chair the wish that that matter might go over until Tuesday. The Chair stated to them that he had no objection, and suggested that they see the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]; and the Chair understood later that they had that agreement; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] who was one of those who were talking with the Chair, said that he desired to offer an amendment when the matter came up. The Chair understood that that was included in the conference had with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take any advantage of gentlemen who made the request in good faith, and I am willing to ask that the Frankford Arsenal matter be passed until Tuesday, and that the pending question be then settled, and any other germane amendment offered at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the Frankford Arsenal item be passed until Tuesday, when the point of order pending will be disposed of, and any germane amendment may be offered.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this would not require its disposition on Tuesday, if any other matter should come up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean on the first day when the matter comes up.

Mr. MANN. The request is that it be passed over, to come up later.

The CHAIRMAN. That it be passed over without prejudice, to be reverted to later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FITZHENRY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the Clerk be permitted to finish the reading of the paragraph relating to the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I prefer to offer the amendment at this point, if I am permitted to do so under the rules.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is in order at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order at this point. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting as a new paragraph, after the word "Illinois," in line 21, page 52, the following:

"For the purchase of such additional machinery as may be necessary for the manufacture of ammunition in an existing building owned by the Government, $225,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment it is not my purpose to take work away from other arsenals and bring it to the Rock Island Arsenal, but to manufacture ammunition at the Rock Island Arsenal that has heretofore been manufactured by private manufacturers.

The first question is, Is it a good policy for the Government to manufacture its ammunition instead of buying it from private manufacturers? On that question I have some figures here—not old figures, but figures pertaining to ammunition that is now being manufactured in Government arsenals as compared with ammunition that is now being manufactured by private manufacturers. As I say, these figures are not old, but they are of the present day—right up to the minute.

We are now manufacturing in the Government arsenals a 3-inch finished shrapnel case for $1.75, while we are paying private manufacturers $3.06 for the same case.

We are manufacturing 3.8-inch common shrapnel, without fuses or base charges, for $7.94 in Government arsenals and paying private manufacturers $17.50.

We are manufacturing 4.7-inch common sharpnel in the arsenals for $15.45 and are paying private manufacturers $25.26.

We are manufacturing 31-second combination fuses for $2.92 and paying private manufacturers $7.

These illustrations are not exceptional, as I will endeavor to show by the fact that on a contract given to Frankford Arsenal for ammunition valued at $1,900,064 we are saving $979,840; or, in other words, we are saving approximately $1,000,000 on a $2,000,000 contract, as compared with what it would cost if that contract was given to outside manufacturers.

If we can manufacture this ammunition in arsenals more cheaply than in private concerns, the next question is, How much of this ammunition do we intend to manufacture? If we were going to manufacture only $500,000 worth, then perhaps it would not pay to equip additional buildings; but the program of the War Department calls for the manufacture of $20,000,000 worth of field-artillery ammunition alone, to say nothing of any other kind of ammunition; and it is the intention of the department to obtain this $20,000,000 worth of ammunition as fast as Congress will appropriate the money.

In the Army appropriation bill for this year $3,000,000 is appropriated for field-artillery ammunition alone. As a matter of fact, in this year's fortifications and Army bills we are providing for about $6,000,000 worth of ammunition. On every dollar's worth of this ammunition that we manufacture in the Government arsenals as compared to its manufacture by private concerns we can save 35 per cent. On $6,000,000 worth of ammunition we can save $2,000,000; that is, comparing the cost in the arsenal with the cost when purchased from private manufacturers.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman state where the ammunition manufactured by private concerns is manufactured?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes. It is manufactured largely by the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Midvale Steel Co., and the Carnegie Steel Co. A few other concerns get a few of the crumbs, but those three firms alone have drawn down $140,000,000 worth of contracts from the Army and Navy in the last 17 years, and they have not only overcharged the Government, but they have cheated the Government in every way. For instance, we have affidavits from workingmen in the Bethlehem steel plant which say that jewelers were taken into these plants at night to gloss over defective gun forgings, so that they could fool the Government inspectors when they came around to inspect the work the next morning.

The extent to which the armor, ammunition, and powder trusts have been overcharging the Government is almost unbelievable. There has seldom been honest competitive bidding between the manufacturers. Secretary of the Navy Daniels discovered this condition as soon as he entered office, and as a result of his activity in getting new independent bidders to enter the field he has saved the Government more than $2,000,000 and has been in office little more than a year.

Here are two sample illustrations out of a multitude which could be cited showing what happens under real competitive bidding:

Realizing the Government was being overcharged for turbine rotary drums the Secretary invited an English firm to submit a bid for the drums to be installed in the new battleship, No. 39, now building in the New York Navy Yard. The Midvale Steel Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Co., two of the three concerns composing the armor ring, bid $160,272 and $169,568, respectively, while the English firm, acting for the Cyclops Steel & Iron Works, of Sheffield, England, offered to furnish the drums for $57,436, a saving to the Government over the lowest bid of the armor ring of $102,836.

Then, recently the Secretary awarded a contract for building 100 torpedo flasks, including heads. There was competition; new contractors entered the field previously monopolized by the ring, and the Secretary of the Navy was able to purchase 100 flasks for $58,246, which under former conditions would have cost $115,075.

The bids of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Midvale Steel Co. under honest competitive bidding showed a reduction of 44 per cent as compared with bids for similar forgings submitted by these companies only four months previous.

Personally, I believe that these officers who in the expenditure of the people's money have been paying $115,075 for supplies which could have been obtained for $58,246 should, somewhere or in some manner, be required to make a public accounting for their acts.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask the gentleman, as a matter of information, in ordinary times what per cent of ammunition used by the Government is manufactured by the Government?

Mr. TAVENNER. I have tried to find out, and I asked the War Department, but was told that they would have to have a special appropriation in order to employ extra clerks to ascertain that fact. The War Department is not anxious for outsiders or even Members of Congress to know too much as to the prices paid for ammunition.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman any idea about it?

Mr. TAVENNER. I know that right now the private manufacturers have contracts for $1,000,000 worth of field-artillery ammunition alone. The private manufacturers now have ammunition contracts to be delivered before June 30, 1914, amounting to $1,112,324. My contention is that if this $1,000,000 contract had been given to the Government arsenal we would have saved $333,000. The War Department in fixing what it costs at the arsenal to manufacture the ammunition includes interest on all the money invested in the plant, the working capital, and salaries of officers. That is a point open to argument, and each Member can have his own opinion about it. Personally, I contend that the Government does not pay interest on the money involved in these transactions; if it does, who does it pay it to? I contend also that the salaries of these officers would be paid to them whether we manufacture the munitions of war in the arsenals or purchase it from the war trust.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. I will.

Mr. HAY. How much was appropriated last year for field-artillery ammunition?

Mr. TAVENNER. Well, the gentleman from Virginia knows more about that than I do.

Mr. HAY. There was $900,000 in the fortification bill and $500,000 in the Army bill, making in all $1,400,000. Now, the gentleman says that $1,000,000 worth of ammunition is being manufactured by private individuals.

Mr. TAVENNER. No; not one million out of that one appropriation. They may have taken money from previous appropriations. Here is the report showing that private manufacturers have that amount in contracts. It does not necessarily mean that it is under the last appropriation bill; it may be scattered through half a dozen years. They have over $1,000,000 in contracts to be delivered June 14, according to Col. Montgomery.

Mr. HAY. My recollection is that these sums are only made available for two years.

Mr. TAVENNER. Then it could only cover two years.

Mr. HAY. The year before that the Army bill contained an appropriation of $100,000 and the fortification bill, I think, $900,000.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman tell us why it is that the War Department is unwilling to give the information as to the per cent of powder which is manufactured by the Government?

Mr. HAY. In my judgment the War Department is perfectly willing to give the information to anybody that wants it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAVENNER. I will be glad to insert, if I can find it, the letter I received from the War Department saying that they would have to have extra help to get this information in regard to the proportion of field-artillery ammunition manufactured in recent years in the arsenals, as compared to the quantity purchased from outside manufacturers.

Mr. HAY. Because it was necessary for them to get additional clerical help to give the gentleman the information, it does not necessarily follow that they did not want to give it.

Mr. TAVENNER. I know they are mighty reluctant about giving it.

Mr. HAY. I know that the War Department is perfectly willing to give the information. There can be no reason why they should not, and, as far as I am concerned, I know that the officers of the Army who have been in charge of this work are men that are above reproach in every way.

Mr. TAVENNER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question since he is so anxious to say that they are willing to give all the information—whether he knows whether the man that lets these contracts has any business relations with the parties who manufacture the ammunition?

Mr. HAY. Oh, I understand the allusion that the gentleman makes. The gentleman is alluding to a contract made with Gen. Crozier by the Bethlehem Steel Co. 15 years ago, before he was made Chief of Ordnance. When he was made Chief of Ordnance the same attack which the gentleman has made upon him in the RECORD and is now making by innuendo was made in the Senate. The whole matter was discussed in the Senate when his name came up for confirmation. He was cleared absolutely from having in any way done anything that would have cast any aspersion on his character.

Mr. TAVENNER. I would like to ask the gentleman if Gen. Crozier did not receive $10,000 from the Bethlehem Steel Co. for a patent from which they never realized a penny?

Mr. HAY. I do not know——

Mr. TAVENNER. The gentleman ought to know.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman from Illinois will wait until I get through. I do not know whether Gen. Crozier received $10,000 or not; but if he did receive $10,000, he received it honestly. Whatever he did was honestly done. He has been Chief of Ordnance now over 12 years, and I say it without fear of contradiction from any man who is conversant with the facts, that he has discharged the duties of that office honestly, uprightly, and that he is a soldier without fear and without reproach, I care not what the gentleman from Illinois may say. [Applause.]

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think in justice to Gen. Crozier——

Mr. TAVENNER. I can not yield. I desire to do Gen. Crozier full justice. I did not say that Gen. Crozier obtained any money dishonestly. I said that he received it from one of the firms to which he awards each year a large slice of these big Army and Navy contracts at excessive prices.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I simply want information. I was interested in the statement made by the gentleman as to the practices of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and some other steel people in cheating and defrauding the Government. Will the gentleman repeat that? I think he said that somebody covered up the defects.

Mr. TAVENNER. I have placed affidavits and other information on the subject in the RECORD, page 10501, this session, and the gentleman can read it. I have another mission just now. I had this up once or twice, and the gentleman can go to the document room and find all the information he wants.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said, at the Rock Island Arsenal we have two fine stone buildings erected for manufacturing purposes, at a cost of $400,000 or $500,000 each. These buildings were never used for manufacturing purposes, because if the Army officers had caused them to be equipped they could not have awarded these fat contracts for this ammunition to the ammunition ring. We also have at the Rock Island Arsenal absolutely free water power for all time, and if we equip these buildings for the manufacture of this ammunition at Rock Island it will not cost the Government a single additional penny for water power, because more power is being developed there than is being used, and there will be plenty of power to run this plant.

I presume there are two points that will be made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. One is that we have sufficient equipment to manufacture this ammunition now. I did receive information from Gen. Crozier on this subject, and he says, in a letter written to me on September 8, 1913:

> The Ordnance Department now has facilities at its arsenals for the manufacture annually of field-artillery ammunition to the value of about $1,500,000.
> The supply of field-artillery ammunition is, however, very low, there being on hand, including what is under manufacture, only about 23 per cent of the quantity which is considered by the War Department necessary to maintain as a reserve. The estimated cost of the ammunition needed to complete a proper supply for the guns we have now on hand or under manufacture is about $13,000,000; and for the number of guns which we ought to have the remaining cost of needed ammunition would be about $20,000,000.
> If the sum appropriated should amount to not more than $3,000,000, it would be necessary for the department to procure ammunition exceeding in value by about $1,500,000 the capacity of the present plant.

In other words, as I understand this letter, it says that the capacity of the Government arsenals for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition is $1,500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. I prefer not to yield now. I prefer to stick to my subject.

Mr. MADDEN. This is directly on the subject.

Mr. TAVENNER. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I will make the statement myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be granted five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can we not agree upon some time?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, unless the gentleman is willing to answer questions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ascertain whether we can not fix some time for debate.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the right to object, unless the gentleman cares to answer my question.

Mr. TAVENNER. Surely I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us see if we can not fix on time for debate.

Mr. MANN. We want 7 minutes over here in favor of the amendment and 15 minutes against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on this amendment close in one hour, 25 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] and 35 minutes by myself.

Mr. MANN. Out of that time can I be yielded sufficient to yield sufficient minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment be limited to 1 hour, 25 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] and 35 minutes to be controlled by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's amendment provides for an appropriation of $225,000 to install machinery in a building which is said to be already in existence for the purpose of making field-artillery matériel, I understand?

Mr. TAVENNER. For the purpose of manufacturing ammunition.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the same thing, is it not?

Mr. TAVENNER. No; that is for gun carriages and parts of cannons, while this is simply for straight ammunition.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman the reason for asking $225,000, when we already have in existence an appropriation for $250,000 which is not being used?

Mr. TAVENNER. That is an entirely different proposition. One is for the manufacture of field-artillery equipment in the form of gun carriages and this other appertains wholly to ammunition. As I say, it appears in this letter from Gen. Crozier that the capacity of the arsenal is $1,500,000, and the Army appropriation bill for this year provides in one paragraph for $3,000,000 worth of ammunition, but in the fortification bill and the Army bill together it amounts to more than $5,000,000; and the amendment I have offered does not limit this plant to the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition, but to the manufacture of any kind of ammunition. The Army bill this year, for the first time in the history of the Government, requires complete arsenal manufacture. This amendment was put in there over the protest of Gen. Crozier. He did not want the bill to provide for complete Government manufacture, and he went to the committee and argued against it, and after the bill went to the Senate he followed it over there and asked that he be left free to buy some of this ammunition from private manufacturers. As regards Gen. Crozier, I do not want to be unfair to him. I do not say that he obtained this money dishonestly, but I do say this, that all of the time he has been Chief of Ordnance he has been awarding these three firms I mentioned contracts running into millions and millions of dollars, and paying these firms from 20 to 60 per cent more than that ammunition would cost to manufacture it in the Government arsenals; and what I complain about is that he should have had any transactions whatever with the company he is dealing with. I claim it is his duty to protect wholly the interests of the Government in dealing with these concerns, and he should have no partnerships with these concerns, whether it is on this particular transaction or on some other transaction.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. FALCONER. I would like to ask the gentleman on what information he bases the assertion that Gen. Crozier had to pay so much more for this ammunition than it could be manufactured for by the Government.

Mr. TAVENNER. I just gave that information a few moments ago. We are now paying private manufacturers $7 for a 31-second fuse, while we are manufacturing the same thing for $2.92. I can not give the gentleman the reason why, but am simply stating the facts.

Mr. FALCONER. The Government is manufacturing that much cheaper?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, sir; that much cheaper.

Mr. FALCONER. The gentleman stands on the statement that the Government can manufacture that much cheaper than our officials have been paying for the ammunition?

Mr. TAVENNER. Gen. Crozier himself practically admits he can save 30 per cent to the Government by having it manufactured in the arsenals as compared with prices by outside manufacturers.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield another moment?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. FALCONER. I just want to observe this, that if the gentleman's statement be true, this Congress certainly has some work to do, and it is on us to do it. If the gentleman's statement is not true, we ought to know it.

Mr. TAVENNER. I wish Congress to get the exact truth; and I would like to see a congressional investigation. I will tell you, gentlemen, Gen. Crozier takes this attitude, that the manufacturers are very patriotic, and we ought to give them contracts in time of peace so that we may depend upon them for their patriotic cooperation in the emergency of war; but, gentlemen, when war with Spain was imminent, those three concerns got together and refused to manufacture a single piece of armor plate unless the Government should agree to pay $100 a ton more than the price which had been determined upon by Congress, after investigation, to be a fair price; but at the same time these patriots were selling to Russia for $249 a ton the identical character of armor plate for which they were charging this Government $616 a ton. [Applause.] The only other point, I presume, the Appropriations Committee would make is that Gen. Crozier has not recommended the equipping of these two fine stone buildings with the necessary machinery to enable the Government to manufacture ammunition now being purchased from the ammunition ring. I do not believe he ever will. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am not personally interested in the controversy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] and Gen. Crozier. Gen. Crozier made a statement relative to some charges which had been made about him, and in justice to him I ask unanimous consent to print his statement in the RECORD. By his efficiency and his skill and intelligence he has so developed the manufacturing plants of the War Department that he is the only officer in the Government who has signally demonstrated that the Government can manufacture war munitions more cheaply than we can purchase them. He has always taken the position that from the standpoint of the Department of War it was wise to manufacture some munitions and purchase others, and there is no mystery about his attitude. One paragraph from his statement I shall read at this time:

With reference to the gun carriage that Mr. TAVENNER speaks of, I only want to call your attention to the specifications for the patent which was granted to Col. Buffington and myself for that invention. In the preamble to the specification there occurs this statement:

"And we hereby dedicate to the Government of the United States the free right to use, to make, and to have made in the United States for its own use gun mountings embodying this invention."

Col. Buffington and I were desirous that there should not, through our death, by the action of our heirs or in any other way, be a claim brought against the United States for the use of this gun carriage; but as it was impossible to keep the construction of this carriage secret, we saw no reason why, if anybody else should choose to use it, they should not pay for such use. Therefore we entered into that relation with the Bethlehem Steel Co. which was set forth and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1911, and which was terminated in the manner which is also set forth in the RECORD.

In justice to Gen. Crozier I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD his statement in reply to statements heretofore made which reflect upon his integrity as an officer of the Army of the United States and which, in my opinion, are wholly unjustified.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUPRÉ). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that he extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the statement referred to?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman if this refers to the gun-carriage swivel?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is what is known as the Crozier-Buffington gun carriage.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if that gun carriage is not more or less a failure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In its efficiency?

Mr. FOWLER. In its efficiency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is now used in an improved form.

Mr. FOWLER. It is used somewhat, but is it not unsteady, it is not to be relied upon?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the charge against it, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the charge the gentleman from Illinois makes is that Gen. Crozier accepted $10,000 from the Bethlehem Steel Co. for the right to use his gun carriage, and that as a result of such relation with the Bethlehem Steel Co. his actions in connection with contracts on behalf of the Government with the company were not above suspicion.

Mr. FOWLER. Was that gun carriage patented by Gen. Crozier?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was; I read from the patent, and I read from it that he dedicated the patent to the United States Government to use free for its own use.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extract is as follows:

GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE MANUFACTURE, POLICY CONCERNING—ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, ENLARGEMENT OF FACILITIES AT.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is "New York Arsenal, Governor's Island, N. Y., repair of wharf, $8,500."

Gen. CROZIER. Before we leave the Frankford Arsenal, Mr. Chairman, there is something I would like to speak of in connection with the artillery ammunition plant which we have been considering, and for an addition to which we have just discussed an estimate of $32,000.

I have been subjected to some pressure to submit estimates for a greater addition to the artillery ammunition plant, but not particularly at the Frankford Arsenal, and I have been very severely criticized, to the extent of making an assault on my character as an officer, for not having done so. I think therefore that this is an appropriate place to speak of this subject, and to call your attention to some of the testimony which I have given before another subcommittee of your committee. I am alluding particularly to a speech which was made in the House on February 27, 1914, by Mr. TAVENNER, of Illinois, when the Army bill was under discussion, and which was extended afterwards in the RECORD under leave to print.

Mr. TAVENNER called attention to the statement which had been made that there was an inadequate supply of ammunition on the Pacific coast, and said, among other things:

"I desire to submit to the American people what I believe to be the reason for this state of affairs. The reason, in my opinion, is that Gen.

Crozier and other Army and Navy officers have for years been permitting a ring of eastern manufacturers to outrageously overcharge the Government for its munitions of war."

This speech, I may say, did not appear in the RECORD on the date on which it was made, but on March 4, 1914, where it is found on page 4596.

Mr. TAVENNER, in speaking of his desire that the artillery ammunition plant should be increased, in his speech stated:

"Gen Crozier has from the start opposed—not openly, but from under cover—my efforts to have these two buildings equipped with machinery for manufacturing field-artillery ammunition."

Speaking of two buildings at the Rock Island Arsenal:

"If these buildings were equipped, Gen. Crozier could no longer go before the Appropriation Committees and testify that he does not have capacity in the Government arsenals to do such manufacturing, and must therefore award the fat contracts to the ammunition ring."

Now, you will see there a charge that I unfairly award contracts for manufacturing ammunition at outrageous prices; that I give as an excuse my lack of capacity at the arsenals; and that, in order that this excuse shall continue, I oppose the increase of the artillery manufacturing plants of the Ordnance Department.

With reference to those accusations, I would like to submit to the committee a letter which, in reply to one from him, I wrote to Mr. TAVENNER last September. I have the letter here. It is a rather long one, explaining my position in regard to the manufacture of ammunition by the Government and by private parties, and it relates particularly to a number of bills which had been introduced by Mr. TAVENNER for increasing the plant at the Rock Island Arsenal:

SEPTEMBER 18, 1913.

Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TAVENNER: 1. I have your letter of September 9, inclosing one to you from the greater Davenport committee, both relating to certain bills which you have introduced for improving the manufacturing plant at the Rock Island Arsenal. Among these bills are four which you and I have discussed somewhat, and which, among those which you have introduced, appear to me to be the ones for whose passage by Congress the best case can be made out. These bills are as follows:

Appropriating $200,000 for a field-artillery ammunition plant;

Appropriating $65,000 for repairing shop H (for use in connection with such plant);

Appropriating $200,000 for an additional storehouse (to receive the stores removed from shop H);

Appropriating $15,000 for a magazine (to contain powder and other explosives for the manufacture of ammunition).

2. The Ordnance Department now has facilities at its arsenals for the manufacture annually of field-artillery ammunition to the value of about $1,500,000. This sum represents about the total of the funds available for field-artillery ammunition for the current fiscal year, of which about $1,200,000 has been utilized in placing orders for manufacture at the arsenals, while $300,000 is being expended in procuring ammunition, or parts of it, from private manufacturers. It therefore appears that unless the appropriations for the procurement of this ammunition are increased the department will not need greater facilities for its manufacture than now exist, except as a reserve for emergencies.

3. The supply of field-artillery ammunition is, however, very low, there being on hand, including what is under manufacture, only about 23 per cent of the quantity which is considered by the War Department necessary to maintain as a reserve. The estimated cost of the ammunition needed to complete a proper supply for the guns we have now on hand or under manufacture is about $13,000,000; and for the number of guns which we ought to have the remaining cost of needed ammunition would be about $20,000,000. This department has submitted estimates amounting to three or four times the current appropriation for ammunition for the consideration of Congress in connection with the appropriation bills for the next fiscal year. If the sum appropriated should amount to not more than $3,000,000 it would be necessary for the department to procure ammunition exceeding in value by about $1,500,000 the capacity of the present plant. The relative advantage would need to be considered of procuring this additional ammunition from private parties, or of increasing the Government's facilities for manufacturing for itself.

4. I have never been in favor of the Government doing all of its manufacturing. I think it desirable for the officers conducting a Government manufacturing establishment to have the stimulus of rivalry with private plants, and I think it advantageous to have others than Government officers stimulated to an effort to improve the quality of the material. I also think it worth while to have an opportunity for comparison of costs, so that it may be known beyond a doubt whether or not Government manufacture is economically carried on. In addition, there is the great advantage of having in existence private plants capable of aiding in doing the increased amount of work which is necessary upon emergency. The relative quantity of material which the Government should make for itself, and should procure from private manufacturers, is, of course, not easy to establish arbitrarily, but an important reason for providing facilities for manufacturing at least a part of the additional ammunition which the Government is in great need of is the economy of its present manufacture as compared with the prices which it is paying private concerns. The average cost of the ammunition now purchased for field artillery is about 20 per cent higher than the cost of manufacturing similar material at the Frankford Arsenal, including in the latter cost a proper charge to cover interest, depreciation, pay of officers, and other charges which are not paid out of the appropriation for the manufacture of the ammunition. In procuring $1,500,000 worth of ammunition by manufacture instead of purchase there is thus a saving of about $300,000 at present relative prices.

5. Now, as to the manner of bringing this general subject to the attention of Congress: I have not submitted an estimate for increasing the department's capacity for manufacturing ammunition. At the present rate of appropriation there would not be occupation for such increased facilities, and I have not received any assurance that we will obtain the increased appropriations which we ought to have. In addition, the amount of the estimate which the Ordnance Department shall submit is limited by the War Department, and the sum of the estimates for Rock Island is already larger than that for any other arsenal. There are certain pressing and immediate necessities, such as fire protection, for instance, which must take precedence of measures of general merit, of which the advantage would be in the future. I think that larger appropriations than at present should be made for field artillery ammunition, and I think it would be advantageous to the Government to provide for manufacturing a portion of it in its own plant. I have not yet made an estimate of the output which could be had from the increased facilities which could be provided with the sums carried in your bills, and I am not entirely clear as to the most advantageous way of presenting the subject for consideration. In regard to this last point I should be very glad to consult with you further, if you could conveniently stop at my office at any time when you may be in the vicinity of the War Department.

Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

You will see that Mr. TAVENNER was in the possession of information to the effect that unless the appropriations were increased the Government had plants enough to manufacture all the ammunition that they would provide for.

Now, in addition to that letter, my testimony before the subcommittee in charge of the fortifications bill, which, at the time of Mr. TAVENNER's speech, had been printed and to which his particular attention had been directed, also contained a refutation of his assertion that I was using the lack of capacity as a reason for wishing to continue to give contracts to private manufacturers at outrageous prices. In addition, this testimony gives my reasons for having given such contracts to private manufacturers as I had given, and evidence in regard to this point is also found on page 152 of the hearing, on page 157, and on other pages.

The CHAIRMAN. The hearings before the subcommittee on fortifications in the preparation of the bill for 1915?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; the hearings held during the current session of Congress.

The question and answer which I will read are as follows:

"Mr. SHERLEY. Let me put my question in another form. Do you consider it desirable, in view of this very large saving, that the Government should manufacture all of its ammunition, irrespective of the amounts that may be appropriated from year to year?

"Gen. CROZIER. No, sir. My view in regard to that is the same as in regard to all other material. I think that there are advantages, as I have stated to you before, in having part of it manufactured by private manufacturers, and I think we will hammer these differences down by continuing to show what we can do ourselves; in fact, we have done that to some extent already; we have gotten people to come in and manufacture at lower prices than other people have heretofore manufactured for us, when we have shown them it could be done. We have done this, as in the item I just mentioned, that of the shrapnel case, by using a new method which the private manufacturers had not up to that time used. I think we will be able to show the private manufacturers that our ammunition can be turned out at a much less cost than the prices they have been charging us. So I do not think we will be continually subjected to these great differences in price."

On page 157 there is the additional statement to the effect that there is plant enough to meet the appropriations that have been made, provided they shall not be increased.

On page 4598 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to which I have referred, in that portion of Mr. TAVENNER'S speech which he did not deliver on the floor he makes the statement that he could not get information on this and related subjects from my office. He states that he wrote to the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal asking for information and he did not get it, because I refused to let him have it. He says in his speech:

"The data has never come, but in its stead a letter from Gen. Crozier to the effect I would find the information I desired in the hearings of the Appropriations Committee. An examination of the hearings showed that it did not contain the special data I desired and did not contain the data I asked for."

With reference to Mr. TAVENNER'S inability to get this class of information, I submit to the committee some of his letters and the replies thereto.

On October 6 he wrote me this letter:

Gen. WILLIAM CROZIER,
Chief of Ordnance, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GENERAL: I will appreciate it if at your convenience you will have sent me the name of the bidder awarded the contracts for doing work of the character being done at the Rock Island Arsenal, to which contract you alluded in your conversation to-day.

I would like the contract price per unit and the total amount of the contract, compared with the prices paid contractors under preceding contracts.

This will show how much the department is saving per unit and the amount it is saving on the entire contract.

Very sincerely,

CLYDE H. TAVENNER.

Two days after, on October 8, that letter was replied to by myself as follows:

OCTOBER 8, 1913.

Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TAVENNER: Referring to your letter of the 6th instant, requesting a statement of the bidders recently awarded contracts for work of the character being done at Rock Island, I take pleasure in giving you the following information:

	Total cost, including 2 per cent for inspection.
Contracts were awarded the Bethlehem Steel Co., South Bethlehem, Pa., as follows:
63 3.8-inch howitzer limbers, model of 1911, at $1,446 each, $91,098. Including 2 per cent for inspection, the cost of these limbers will be $1,474.92 each	$92,919.96
36 4.7-inch howitzer limbers, model of 1912, at $1,498 each, $53,928. Including 2 per cent for inspection, the cost of these limbers will be $1,527.96 each	55,006.56
To the American & British Manufacturing Co., Bridgeport, Conn.:
47 3.8-inch howitzer caissons, model of 1911, at $2,114.40 each, $99,376.80. Including 2 per cent for inspection, the cost of these caissons will be $2,156.68 each	101,363.96
To the Albert & J. M. Anderson Manufacturing Co., Boston, Mass.:
36 4.7-inch howitzer caissons, model of 1912, at $1,886 each, $67,896. Including 2 per cent for inspection, the cost of these caissons will be $1,923.72 each	69,253.92

No exactly similar vehicles to these have been previously manufactured in quantity. Estimates at Rock Island Arsenal on the 3.8-inch howitzer limbers were $1,402.20 each; or, including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $1,519.98; on the 3.8-inch howitzer caissons, $2,230 each; including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $2,417.32 each.

The last order for 4.7-inch howitzer limbers and caissons, of a similar type but not identical, cost at Rock Island Arsenal as follows: 4.7-inch howitzer limbers, $1,127.94 each; including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $1,272.69; 4.7-inch howitzer caissons, $1,645.76 each; including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $1,784.

It will be seen from the above comparison of costs that the prices at which the last contracts were awarded compare very closely with the costs at the Rock Island Arsenal.

The matériel of which the greatest quantity has previously been manufactured are the 3-inch limbers and caissons. The last order for these placed by contract cost as follows: 3-inch gun caisson, model of 1902, $1,960 each; including 2 per cent for inspection, $1,999.20. At the Rock Island Arsenal the last order cost $1,041.20; including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $1,128.68.

The 3-inch gun limber, model of 1902, under contract cost $1,478.59; including 2 per cent for inspection, $1,508.18. At Rock Island Arsenal the last lot cost $635.81; including arsenal burden of 8.4 per cent, $689.22.

It will be noted that for the 3.8-inch howitzer limbers and caissons and 4.7-inch howitzer limbers and caissons, which are heavier and more expensive vehicles to manufacture than the 3-inch gun limbers and caissons, the prices are practically the same. This indicates that the manufacturers, as a result of the standard set at the Rock Island Arsenal, have been led to perfect their equipment and methods of manufacturing this matériel and are now bidding on a more satisfactory basis.

Very sincerely,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

On October 16 there was received the following letter from Mr. TAVENNER, dated October 15:

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am desirous of obtaining certain data for use on the floor of the House and will be greatly obliged if, at your convenience, you will supply me with the following information:

1. The total amount of contracts awarded private manufacturers by the War Department during the last five years.

2. The total amount of contracts awarded each of the following firms during the last five years:

Bethlehem Steel Co., South Bethlehem, Pa.
American & British Manufacturing Co., Bridgeport, Conn.
Albert & J. M. Anderson Manufacturing Co., Boston, Mass.
Carnegie Steel Co.

3. Names of the companies which have been awarded the bulk of the contracts for manufacturing field-artillery ammunition and other ammunition.

4. In a letter from the Chief of Ordnance dated October 8, 1913, No. 37835/817, I am informed that the Bethlehem Steel Co. was recently awarded a contract for sixty-three 3.8-inch howitzer limbers, model 1911, at $1,466 each, and thirty-six 4.7-inch howitzer limbers, model 1912, at $1,498 each; that the American & British Manufacturing Co. was awarded contracts for forty-seven 3.8-inch howitzer caissons, model 1911, at $2,114.40 each, and that the Albert & J. M. Anderson Manufacturing Co. was awarded a contract for thirty-six 4.7-inch howitzer caissons, model 1912, at $1,886 each. I would like to know what prices the Government paid for these same articles under recent previous contracts with private manufacturers. I understand that the prices just cited are a considerable reduction from previous prices, and my object is to be able to say just what sum the Government saved as a result of the action of the private manufacturers in now reducing their prices. I would also like to know the date on which these contracts (the ones referred to in this paragraph) were let.

Very respectfully,

CLYDE H. TAVENNER.

That letter was received in my office during my absence in Europe, and it was not immediately acknowledged. It calls for a great deal of information, and the office, as it should have, set to work to collect the information to answer the letter, but that took a long time; and on December 2 Mr. TAVENNER wrote to the Secretary of War as follows:

Hon. LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On October 16 I addressed a letter to the Chief of Ordnance, requesting data relative to the amount of the contracts awarded by the War Department to the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the last five years, and also other data which would indicate the extent to which the private manufacturers are overcharging the Government.

I have not received any facts or an acknowledgment of the receipt of the letter. The Secretary of the Navy gladly furnished the information.

I find from a table prepared by Col. George Montgomery, of Frankford Arsenal, that the Government manufactured a $1,900,064 order of artillery ammunition 51 per cent below the prices of the ammunition ring.

This manufacturing was done with power produced by coal. Had the order been manufactured at Rock Island, where the Government has free water power but is not taking complete advantage of it, a much better showing could no doubt be made on the side of Government manufacture.

There is going to be a fight in Congress to take the fat Government contracts away from the ammunition ring, and I hope you will stand with Secretary Daniels against the ammunition ring that in war time holds up the Government by refusing to manufacture articles of military necessity unless the Government pays an increased price. (See annual report of Secretary Daniels.)

I can not help but observe that the same Army officers who are fighting for the ammunition ring are also leading the fight to install the Taylor system of shop management in the Government arsenals, a system which a committee of a Democratic House of Representatives unanimously declared placed working men in the position of beasts of burden.

I will appreciate it very much if you will have my letter looked up, so that I may know whether I will have the data requested in time to use on the floor of the House when this matter comes up.

Very sincerely,

CLYDE H. TAVENNER.

There was an inclosure of a newspaper article by Mr. TAVENNER with that letter.

Two days later, on December 4, 1913, the Secretary of War replied to Mr. TAVENNER, as follows:

Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of December 2, 1913, relative to data requested from the Chief of Ordnance under date of October 16, I have the honor to inform you that the office of the Chief of Ordnance has been assiduously at work ever since the receipt of that letter tabulating the information desired by you.

The information requested, covering a period of five years, required an examination of considerably over 3,000 contracts, made at the various ordnance establishments throughout the United States in this period. This information has just been gotten together in the rough and is now being put in tabulated form in order that it may be more readily available for your use. It is expected that this work will be completed within two or three days at the outside, when it will be transmitted to you.

Inadvertently acknowledgment of your letter of October 16 and advice that the work would be at once taken in hand was omitted, which fact is regretted.

Very respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

In submitting the draft of that letter to the Secretary of War, I noticed the statement in Mr. TAVENNER'S letter about officers fighting for the ammunition ring in this memorandum which I gave to the Secretary of War. I do not know that it got beyond his office:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Subject: Reply to letter of December 2, 1913, of the Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER in regard to Government contracts.

Mr. TAVENNER writes drawing attention to the fact that he has not received a reply to a letter addressed to the Chief of Ordnance on October 16, asking for information concerning contracts of this department with private manufacturers. There is herewith a draft for your signature of a reply to Mr. TAVENNER'S last letter. There occurs in this letter the following paragraph:

"I can not help but observe that the same Army officers who are fighting for the ammunition ring are also leading the fight to install the Taylor system of shop management in the Government arsenals, a system which a committee of a Democratic House of Representatives unanimously declared placed workingmen in the position of beasts of burden."

This statement can refer only to officers of the Ordnance Department, and particularly to myself, who am installing the Taylor system of shop management in the Government arsenals. In the draft of reply to Mr. TAVENNER which I have prepared for you I have not referred to this paragraph, but if I were myself replying to Mr. TAVENNER I would say that his charge that officers of this department are fighting for the ammunition ring is so far from the truth that it seems difficult to believe that he is not aware of it; and that the further statement that a committee of the House of Representatives declared that the Taylor system of shop management at Government arsenals placed laboring men in the position of beasts of burden is also contrary to fact, as the committee referred to did not make that statement. The language of the committee was, however, such that a careless reading of it might have produced the impression obtained by Mr. TAVENNER.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

Two days after that, on December 6, I sent to Mr. TAVENNER a letter:

DECEMBER 6, 1913.

Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your request for data relative to contracts awarded to private manufacturers by this department during the last five years, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

1. The total amount of contracts awarded private manufacturers by the Ordnance Department during the last five fiscal years ending June 30, 1913, was $30,684,592.24.

2. The total amount of contracts awarded each of the following firms enumerated by you during this period was as follows:

Bethlehem Steel Co., $3,201,470.09.
American & British Manufacturing Co., $835,474.14.
Albert & J. M. Anderson Manufacturing Co., $520,511.26.
Carnegie Steel Co., $305,873.71.

3. The names of the companies who have been awarded the bulk of the contracts for manufacturing ammunition during this period are:

Powder.—The E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., The International Smokeless Powder & Chemical Co.

Steel shell.—American & British Manufacturing Co., Bethlehem Steel Co., Washington Steel & Ordnance Co., E. W. Bliss Co.

Shrapnel cases and shrapnel.—Bethlehem Steel Co., American & British Manufacturing Co., Rheinische Metallwaareb & Maschinenfabrik, E. W. Bliss Co., Tioga Steel & Iron Co.

Cast-iron shell.—The Tredegar Co., The C. H. Cowdrey Machine Works, The E. W. Bliss Co. (also some common steel shell).

Small-arms ammunition.—United States Cartridge Co., Peters Cartridge Co., Winchester Repeating Arms Co., Remington-Union Metallic Cartridge Co.

4. The prices paid for 3.8-inch and 4.7-inch howitzer caissons and limbers during the above period, which were awarded by contract, were as follows:

Kind of material.	Prices paid in the year—
	1909, per set of 1 of each.	1912, each.	1913, each.
3.8-inch howitzer caissons			[1] $2,114.40
3.8-inch howitzer limbers			[2] 1,446.00
4.7-inch howitzer limbers	$4,010.18	$1,477.30	[3] 1,498.00
4.7-inch howitzer caissons		1,879.02	[4] 1,886.00

[1] Date of contract, Oct. 1, 1913.
[2] Date of contract, Oct. 4, 1913.
[3] Date of contract, Oct. 7, 1913.
[4] Date of contract, Oct. 14, 1913. Advertisement dated Sept. 8, 1913. Proposals submitted Sept. 29, 1913.

The delay in furnishing this information was due entirely to the fact that it was necessary to assemble a large amount of data for all the various ordnance establishments to get the information asked for reasonably accurate.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

In regard to his statement that he was unable to get information which he tried to get from the Rock Island Arsenal, I have here a letter from the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal, dated December 23, 1913, the first paragraph of which is as follows:

"On November 1 the Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER, M. C., representing the Rock Island congressional district, forwarded to the undersigned copy of a speech relating to the Frankford Arsenal, delivered in the House of Representatives by the Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Pennsylvania, Friday, October 31, 1913, and asked me if I could furnish him similar facts relating to the Rock Island Arsenal, to be used by him in a speech on the floor of the House. I informed Mr. TAVENNER that I should be glad to furnish such information. On November 11 I wrote informally to the Ordnance Office, requesting certain data necessary for this memorandum, said data being particularly the prices paid for contract-made artillery vehicles. In reply to that letter the Chief of Ordnance informally stated that he desired such data to be given out through the Ordnance Office, and that if I would forward to that office the information which I thought would meet Mr. TAVENNER'S request it would be supplemented in that office by the corresponding information relating to contract manufacture."

That letter relates to the request that Mr. TAVENNER said he made of the Rock Island Arsenal. You will understand that it is desirable for information in regard to its operations to be given out from the headquarters of the Ordnance Department and not from the arsenals. This in order that certain discrepancies which sometimes result from not taking into account the same class of expenditures at the different arsenals may not appear, or may be reconciled if they do appear, and so that information can be furnished as consistently as the facts permit.

Now, you will observe that this letter was received after the letter of Mr. TAVENNER, in which he charged officers of the Army, which could mean no other than myself under the circumstances, of fighting for the ammunition ring. It would be, therefore, after a state of mind had been naturally induced which would not tend to an increase of the completeness of the information given to a man who would make such use of it as Mr. TAVENNER shows by that letter that he was inclined to make.

In consequence of the receipt of this letter written to the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal, I wrote to Mr. Tavenner, under date of January 14, 1914, as follows:

Hon. CLYDE H. TAVENNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Comparative costs of Government and private manufacture.

SIR: 1. The commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal has written to this office requesting certain information in regard to the prices paid for field artillery vehicles procured by the department under contract, in order that he may make accurate reply to a letter from you making inquiry as to the relative cost of private manufacture and Government manufacture of such material as is produced at the Rock Island Arsenal. The commanding officer has been informed that this office would reply to your letter, which it prefers to do, since information of a similar character to that which you request is from time to time given out by this office, and it is desired that it should embody the greater acuracy which can only be had when it receives the revision of this office, in order that the information given may thus always be consistent.

2. The relative cost under Government and private manufacture of such material as constitutes the output of the Rock Island Arsenal is made up from time to time and stated in the hearings of the undersigned, usually before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives. Such statements were made and are contained in the printed hearings in connection with the fortification act passed by the last Congress at its last session; and similar statements, with revised figures, have been made to the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives in hearings held before that committee, upon the fortification bill, since the date of your request for information to the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal. These hearings are no doubt available to you. Should any of the statements contained in them need further explanation or amplification, the records of this department for affording it are at your service.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

To that letter I have received no answer, and no further request in pursuance of the statement made in the last sentence.

I made up tables of information in regard to the prices paid by the department, similar to those which Mr. TAVENNER alludes to as having been presented by Mr. MOORE for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD relative to the manufacture at the Frankford Arsenal; I made up similar tables for the Rock Island Arsenal and submitted them to the committee, and they are found in the hearings of the current session of Congress on pages 149 and 150. I believe that if you will take the trouble to examine them you will see that those tables and the other information in the printed hearings and the information which is contained in the letters which I have presented to you as having been written in my office to Mr. TAVENNER refutes the charge that he could not get information from the Ordnance Department.

Now, Mr TAVENNER states as follows in his extension of his remarks:

"What Gen. Crozier's motive was in withholding this and other information I can not say, because I do not know."

But then he goes on to make a very direct innuendo as to what my motives were, and he does so by reprinting certain statements that were made in regard to me in the House of Representatives in 1911 concerning my relations with the Bethlehem Steel Co. with reference to a patent for the disappearing-gun carriage, which was invented by Col. Buffington and myself and which is in use as the principal mounting for guns for the seacoast defense. He leaves nothing to misunderstanding in the way of pointing to the inference that my motive was that resulting from improper relations with private manufacturers, and the Bethlehem Steel Co. in particular, which led me to desire to give these large contracts, as he calls them "fat" contracts, to these private manufacturers.

When some kind of a charge in regard to this subject was made in 1911 by Mr. RAINEY it was replied to by Mr. Smith of Iowa, on March 3, 1911, and the reply was printed in the RECORD. I do not care to take up your time by going over that. I am now perfectly willing to let such charges as those made by Mr. RAINEY and Mr. TAVENNER rest as replied to by Mr. Smith, and I am willing to let the character of the people making these statements on the two sides suffice as a sufficient indorsement of my action.

With reference to the gun carriage that Mr. TAVENNER speaks of, I only want to call your attention to the specifications for the patent which was granted to Col. Buffington and myself for that invention. In the preamble to the specification there occurs this statement:

"And we hereby dedicate to the Government of the United States the free right to use, to make, and to have made in the United States for its own use gun mountings embodying this invention."

Col. Buffington and I were desirous that there should not, through our death, by the action of our heirs, or in any other way, be a claim brought against the United States for the use of this gun carriage; but as it was impossible to keep the construction of this carriage secret, we saw no reason why, if anybody else should choose to use it, they should not pay for such use. Therefore we entered into that relation with the Bethlehem Steel Co. which was set forth and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1911, and which was terminated in the manner which is also set forth in the RECORD. Although Mr. TAVENNER places my motives before the House by innuendo, I will say that he states directly the facts which indicate what his motive is in attacking me, which is resentment because I would not stand in with him in his endeavor to procure for expenditure in his district the appropriations which my testimony before this committee, which was available to him, and my statements in letters written to him show were not necessary.

I will add, Mr. Chairman, although it is well known, that these contracts that Mr. TAVENNER speaks of are let after advertisement and competition to the lowest responsible bidder, the interests of the Government being taken into consideration; that the economies which have resulted in the great differences in price which in some cases appear have been due to the special efforts of the officers of the Ordnance Department under my direction; that the use of this difference in charges against us is the use of ammunition for controversy which we supply ourselves by our economical conduct of the establishments under our charge. I can invite your attention also to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that years ago, long before Mr. TAVENNER came to Congress, I submitted to the Congress an estimate for increase of the facilities at the Rock Island Arsenal for the manufacture of field artillery gun carriages, limbers, and caissons. As a consequence of that estimate, $250,000 was appropriated, and we are now nearly ready to put those increased facilities into operation, the object of the estimate and the appropriation being to about double the capacity of the Rock Island Arsenal for manufacturing this kind of material; and the advantage of thus doubling it being the fact, as shown by the tables to which I have drawn attention, that the cost of manufacture at the Rock Island Arsenal was considerably less than the price charged by private manufacturers for similar material.

I urged this appropriation because of the saving to the Government that would thereby be effected at the expense of the amount of work that was given to private manufacturers, although I did not then contemplate that we would do all of this class of work at the arsenal. I estimated then that the increased facilities would enable us to do two-thirds of the work of this class that our appropriation called for instead of the one-third we had been doing theretofore. I make this statement with particular reference to Mr. TAVENNER'S statement that I am "an enthusiastic advocate of the policy of giving as much work as possible to outside manufacturers at prices ranging from 20 to 60 per cent more than he can manufacture—and is manufacturing—the same articles for in the Government's arsenals."

This statement, coupled with the statements which I have frequently made in the hearings before your committee and to some of which I have alluded before, indicates clearly my position with reference to Government and private manufacture, which is to the effect that the Government should manufacture part of the material which it uses, and should patronize private manufacturers for a part.

Other manufactures, which had not theretofore been carried on by the Ordnance Department, which had relied for their product entirely upon private manufacturers, have been introduced under my direction, as follows: Smokeless powder, optical instruments for artillery, machine guns, pistols, armor-piercing projectiles. All of these are now in successful operation, dividing the work with private establishments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question before the committee is whether there shall be appropriated $225,000 to equip some building at the Rock Island Arsenal for the purpose of manufacturing field-artillery ammunition. The question whether the Government shall manufacture this ammunition or shall purchase it is not involved.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer to make this statement and then I shall yield for questions. It is impossible to state intelligently what the facts are unless I make a consecutive statement. I repeat that the question of whether the Government shall make this ammunition or shall purchase it is not involved. In the Army bill, which has already become a law, $3,000,000 is appropriated for use during the next fiscal year for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition. None can be purchased under the provision, and the fortifications bill as agreed upon by the managers upon the part of the two Houses, and the report has been adopted by the Senate, recommends an appropriation of $1,200,000 for the manufacture of this ammunition. After setting aside so much as is required for the purpose of meeting the obligations arising from contracts which are already in existence, not to exceed 10 per cent of the balance can be expended for purchase. The provisions of this bill will compel all field-artillery ammunition, for which we are appropriating next year in a sum aggregating $4,200,000, to be manufactured in the Government arsenals. The Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Militar, Affairs have done everything within their power to compel the manufacture by the Government of all ammunition of this character for which provision is made.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] was given a hearing by the Committee on Appropriations upon a bill introduced by him to appropriate $200,000 to equip one of certain buildings at the Rock Island Arsenal for the purpose of manufacturing this field-artillery ammunition. After he had made his statement the committee requested the War Department to send some one familiar with the operations of the Government arsenals before the committee. It then turned out that the building which the gentleman wished to equip had cost $400,000. It was being utilized as a storehouse. If it is equipped for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition, it will be necessary to provide a building for the storing of these valuable supplies which now fill it. A building that would be suitable for such purposes would cost $200,000; so that, after spending $200,000 to equip a building for the manufacture of the ammunition, it would then be necessary to provide $200,000 for another building to take care of the supplies.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When I finish my statement I will.

In addition, it would require for assembling the ammunition a building to cost $40,000; to equip the building, $10,000; and $35,000 for certain magazines that must be placed at Rock Island to store this ammunition, should it be manufactured there. So that, in all, in order to equip the Rock Island Arsenal for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition, it would require an expenditure of $500,000.

We have to-day arsenals that are now equipped and, under the authority given already, will be equipped to manufacture all of the field-artillery ammunition for which we have appropriated next year.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, that statement is not right; that is all. He is mistaken about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER]?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield. But if I have to substantiate every statement I make here by referring to the official record, I will do it. Usually, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who know my record in this House do not challenge statements of fact which I make.

Col. Babbitt, in speaking of the facilities of the department for this manufacture, under the date of May 28, 1914, said:

> We estimate that we can expend all the funds that have been appropriated in the Army bill, $3,000,000, and the $1,200,000 now carried in the fortification bill, if this bill becomes a law, with our existing plans by working three shifts.

So I repeat that we have to-day all the facilities required to manufacture in Government plants all the field-artillery ammunition which we are appropriating for next year.

That is not the important thing. At the end of four years, after next year, at the rate for which provision has been made for next year, we will have manufactured so much field-artillery ammunition that we will have obtained a complete reserve, both for the Organized Militia and for the Regular Army. And thereafter the appropriations annually for field-artillery ammunition will only amount to $500,000, so that instead of requiring facilities to manufacture $4,200,000 of field-artillery ammunition every year, we will only require facilities for $500,000.

In addition, in the appropriation carried in the fortification bill, the appropriation is made available not only for the manufacture of the material but for the acquisition of the necessary machinery to manufacture it. The item is:

> For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals.

The amount agreed on is $1,200,000. Then there is that other proviso to which I have called attention:

> Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, after deducting any amounts required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts to be entered into by contract, not more than 10 per cent may be used to purchase not exceeding 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material herein appropriated for that can be manufactured at the arsenals of the Ordnance Department, except when contract costs are less than arsenal-manufacturing costs.

The proof is that arsenal-manufacturing costs are less than they are by contract. The sole purpose of this amendment is not to compel Government manufacture of this ammunition, which the Committee on Appropriations favors, but it is to equip the Rock Island Arsenal for its manufacture.

What have we done for the Rock Island Arsenal? Last year it was pointed out that the Government could manufacture more cheaply field artillery matériel than it had been purchasing it by contract, and so this committee brought in an item apropropriating $250,000 to equip the Rock Island Arsenal to manufacture field-artillery ammunition. Some of the machines were ordered. Early in the year Gen. Crozier called my attention to the fact that unless he could have some assurance that this appropriation would be continued next year it would be necessary for him to place the order for all the machines authorized, and, as it was desirable to get several of them and test them out before ordering all of them, he asked whether he could rely on the reappropriation of the unexpended balance, if he acquired some of them in order to test them out. He was assured that he could rely upon the reappropriation being recommended by the committee. So this bill carries, as the first item under the Rock Island Arsenal, the unexpended balance of that $250,000, which amounts to about $200,000, for that purpose. In addition, the committee has recommended $127,000 more for improvements at the Rock Island Arsenal. What can reasonably be expected of the House? Facilities are provided for the manufacture of all the ammunition for which provision is made.

Col. Babbitt states that they will take out of this $1,200,000 in the fortification bill $100,000 to purchase the necessary machinery to provide for the Government manufacture. The pending amendment merely means that we shall compel the Ordnance Department, instead of using the Springfield and Watertown Arsenals, with very little work to do, and where this work should be done in addition to that done at the Frankford Arsenal, to prepare to manufacture this ammunition at the Rock Island Arsenal. It means an expenditure of $500,000, and at the end of five years the plant that we will have erected at that arsenal for that purpose will be no longer required. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 15 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. If the department wanted to do so, they could use $200,000 or $225,000 to provide machinery?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They could use $1,200,000.

Mr. GARNER. For the purpose which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois mentions. So they really, then, have appropriated $1,200,000 which they can use for this identical purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This amendment would compel $225,000 to be expended at the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from New York to say we already had all the facilities we need to manufacture all the field artillery?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Field-artillery ammunition.

Mr. MADDEN. Needed under the appropriations made in the Army bill and the fortification bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And that the bills provide that all of this class of work shall be done by the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides that all of the $3,000,000 of this ammunition provided in the Army bill must be manufactured by the Government, and after the contract obligations now existing are cared for out of the fortification bill not more than 10 per cent of the balance can be spent for purchase of ammunition.

The purpose of that was not to insure purchase, but it is necessary to make some allowance to purchase some of the things that they can not manufacture or can not do so to advantage.

Mr. MADDEN. And the gentleman from New York thinks it would be an extravagance to expend or to appropriate $500,000 to do something which we already have the facilities for doing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if it were necessary to equip arsenals for this work, I would favor it. I am a pioneer in this House in the movement to utilize Government plants in the manufacture of munitions of war. I stood here and helped to provide a torpedo-manufacturing plant for the Government, when the only establishment in which torpedoes were manufactured was located in my own congressional district. I should like to see somebody else produce a record like that in the House. I have always advocated the utilization of Government plants and of the Government entering extensively into the manufacture of munitions of war; but I can not justify, and no one else can justify, the unnecessary development of any particular establishment when the facilities and the means and the law already on the statute books require the Government to manufacture certain articles and provide ample means and facilities to do so. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes.

Mr. TAVENNER. I wish to use a couple of minutes, and then I will reserve the remainder of my time.

I want to say this is an "extravagance" that will save to the Government about $1,000,000 of the money appropriated in the Army bill. As I understand, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says the total appropriations for ammunition are $4,300,000, whereas I claim it is $5,565,000. It is simply a matter of arithmetic. Anyone can figure up all the appropriations made here for ammunition. That is the reason why the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and myself do not agree on this. That is, I claim that in the Army appropriation bill and in the fortification bill about $5,500,000 is appropriated for ammunition.

I just wanted to say one thing more in connection with Gen. Crozier. This patent that Gen. Crozier sold to the Bethlehem Steel Co. was perfected by him with the use of hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money. After this gun carriage was perfected with the American people's money, Gen. Crozier and his predecessor as Chief of Ordnance sold the patent to the Bethlehem Steel Co. for $10,000, and went into an agreement with that company by which they were to receive royalties on all of these gun carriages that should be sold to foreign nations until the amount of those royalties should reach $50,000. As soon as that contract was made, the Bethlehem Steel Co. sent their agents throughout Europe to sell those gun carriages to the different Governments. They were tested by the European Governments, and my information is that every one of the foreign Governments refused to buy these gun carriages.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. How do you insist that we would make a saving by adopting your amendment when the law, as I understand from the statement of the chairman of this committee, declares that none of this money shall be used for the purchase of ammunition from private concerns?

Mr. TAVENNER. I am going to answer that question. According to the letter from Gen. Crozier, which I have just read, we have capacity to manufacture only $1,500,000 worth of that ammunition. As you say, he can not under this new law buy this ammunition. How is he going to get this other $1,500,000 worth unless we have some plant or some place to manufacture it?

Now, I want to go back to this point about Gen. Crozier. After this contract was made between the Chief of Ordnance, Gen. Buffington, and Gen. Crozier, the Bethlehem Steel Co. sent their agents to Europe and tried to get rich quick by selling this great patent, but the foreign countries would not buy it. They said it was not practical. But in the meantime the Chief of Ordnance, one of those who was in the contract with the Bethlehem company, procured for this country $8,000,000 worth of these gun carriages which the other nations said were not practical, according to the information that I have. The point I make is this: I submit that if these patents are developed by the expenditure of the American people's money, they should not be even offered to foreign countries. What would result if we should get into war with these foreign nations which might purchase the gun carriages? American sailors and soldiers would be repulsed with fighting machinery that had been patented by the expenditure of the American taxpayers' money. Those weapons would be used by foreigners to shoot down our own soldiers and sailors. I say, a man who is paid a salary to protect the citizens of this country should not use the money that we appropriate for experimentation and then personally take out a patent as the result of those experiments and offer it for sale to foreign countries to be used against our own men in the event of war.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I am sure the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. TAVENNER. No; I do not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows, doubtless, that for years Gen. Crozier has had no interest in this patent.

Mr. TAVENNER. I understand he has no interest in it now.

Mr. HAY. He has not had any interest in it since he has been Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. TAVENNER. After he had this contract for nine years and could not sell the patent to foreign countries, he no doubt figured: "What is the use of my being tied up in this contract?" He also said: "However, I do not wish to relinquish in any way the right of my business partner, Gen. Buffington, who is now drawing a salary as a retired officer of the Army." And while Gen. Crozier retired from the enterprise, he did not release the Bethlehem company from paying further compensation to his business partner, Gen. Buffington.

Mr. HAY. Gen. Crozier had no right to try to dispose of any interest that his partner might have had. Why does the gentleman impute to Gen. Crozier by innuendo these unworthy motives? Gen. Crozier has no interest in this patent.

Mr. TAVENNER. He had business relations with the Bethlehem company, which he is now favoring with the fat Government contracts, paying them from 20 to 60 per cent more than he should on these contracts. I say this is a case where Gen. Crozier is very anxious about making contracts with these companies and about paying them from 20 to 60 per cent more than he is justified in paying; and in the absence of any reason why he should waste the people's money, we may take into consideration the fact that he has been in partnership with those concerns. It is possible, in the absence of any other reason——

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman ought to be fair, and he knows that Gen. Crozier gives reasons why he thinks some of this ammunition ought to be purchased.

Mr. TAVENNER. He gives no reason, but he gives excuses.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that I am not in entire accord with Gen. Crozier——

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; I know that the gentleman is not in sympathy with him——

Mr. HAY. And the gentleman knows that not one dollar of this money can be expended outside of a Government plant. If the gentleman will take Gen. Crozier's evidence given before the Committee on Military Affairs and before the Committee on Appropriations, he will find that Gen. Crozier gives in extenso the reasons why he believes that some of this ammunition should be purchased from private plants; and I think it is but fair to Gen. Crozier that that should be stated.

Mr. TAVENNER. Gen. Crozier has given several excuses, and they do not amount to the snap of my fingers. The main thing he wants to do is to give these contracts to the Bethlehem Steel Co., and he has a lot of excuses in attempting to seek to justify his action in paying on an average of 35 per cent more than this ammunition is worth; but he has not one reason that justifies it, in my opinion.

As to whether these articles should be manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal instead of some other arsenal, I prevailed upon the Secretary of War to ask Gen. Crozier for his opinion, and Gen. Crozier in a report made to the Secretary of War said:

If the department's estimates for increased appropriation for this class of ammunition—

Field-artillery ammunition—

are even partially met—

And they were—

an increase of its facilities will be desirable, and the Rock Island Arsenal will be a good place for the additional plant to be established.

To enlarge the Government arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., so that it may manufacture a large portion of the Army supplies for which the Government is now being grossly overcharged by the ammunition ring, would not require the expenditure of a penny for ground, buildings, or water power.

I do not believe the United States Government sufficiently appreciates what a prize it has in the Rock Island military tract, which is adjacent to the enterprising and thriving cities of Rock Island, Moline, Davenport, and East Moline, having a combined population in excess of 100,000, and in the very heart of one of the most promising manufacturing centers in the Middle West. The tract covers 896 acres of an island in the Mississippi, with a double row of great stone buildings and elegant drives, and every acre a natural park, with beautiful shade trees in profusion everywhere.

I firmly believe that this piece of Government property offers the best site that can be found for the proposed $7,000,000 armor-plate factory, and I have introduced a resolution (H. Res. 306) requiring the Secretary of the Navy to carefully consider the advantages of Rock Island before determining upon any other site for the armor factory. In the meantime every Member of Congress is invited to stop off at Rock Island and see for himself what a magnificent and advantageous site Uncle Sam already has for a great central military manufacturing plant without having to go to the expense of purchasing additional ground for this purpose.

At the Rock Island Arsenal to-day there are two great stone buildings, originally constructed for manufacturing purposes at a cost of approximately $400,000 each, being used only for storage purposes. These two buildings are magnificent structures, and at a cost of $225,000 each could be equipped with the necessary machinery to manufacture field-artillery ammunition.

As I rode through the arsenal grounds at Rock Island recently and saw these two fine buildings standing deserted and idle I could not help but think of the fact that contracts for war munitions which could be manufactured in these buildings are at present going to the ammunition ring, and that the Army officers are paying this ring from 20 to 60 per cent more than they could manufacture the same orders for in these two buildings at Rock Island.

Gen. Crozier has from the start opposed—not openly, but from under cover—my efforts to have these two buildings equipped with machines for manufacturing field-artillery ammunition. If these buildings were equipped, Gen. Crozier could no longer go before the Appropriations Committees and testify that he does not have capacity in the Government arsenals to do such manufacturing, and must, therefore, award the fat contracts to the ammunition ring.

The Rock Island Arsenal is now the largest arsenal in the United States, and when the policy of complete Government manufacture of munitions in Government arsenals gets to working the Rock Island Arsenal is destined to become one of the largest arsenals in the world. The Government can manufacture cheaper at Rock Island than at any other point in the United States.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. For information I want to ask whether or not the Government has the facilities in the other arsenals to manufacture the field-gun ammunition provided for in the appropriation bills?

Mr. TAVENNER. They only have facilities, according to this letter from Gen. Crozier, to manufacture one-half of it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then we shall be compelled to buy 50 per cent of this ammunition from outside parties unless this appropriation is made.

Mr. TAVENNER. That is exactly the fact; either buy it or go without it.

Mr. MADDEN. That statement does not agree with the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who said that we have all the facilities needed to manufacture field-artillery ammunition, by working three shifts a day in the present arsenals, where the facilities are afforded without the investment of an additional dollar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There would be some money necessarily expended for machinery.

Mr. HAY. But that money is already appropriated.

Mr. TAVENNER. I should like some time yielded to gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time have I used and how much time has the gentleman used?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUPRÉ). The gentleman from New York has 18 minutes left, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] has 10 minutes left.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has so lucidly explained the merits of this question that nothing more should be necessary. But in response to the question that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] asked, I think this House ought to understand, as perhaps it does not, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] who makes this motion certainly shows from his remarks that he does not understand, that the War Department assures us that they have ample facilities now to make all this ammunition without this addition at Rock Island. No addition is necessary anywhere.

But the other question comes up, if we did need an addition why should it be placed at Rock Island? The gentleman from Rock Island [Mr. TAVENNER] obviously would like more Government money spent in his district, and that explains this amendment and his attitude. There are a number of other arsenals in this country where this could just as well be done as at Rock Island. Any Member of this House who represents an industrial community could just as well get up a movement to have the plant placed in his district as the gentleman from Rock Island [Mr. TAVENNER] has, because this building in which he wants this machinery put is not an empty building. If diverted to this use another building must be built in substitution for it. It might just as well be put in any of your districts as in the district of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will yield if I have time when I get through. But other gentlemen in the House apparently have not the assurance of the gentleman from Rock Island to come forward and propose something for their district that the department does not need or want. If such a building is to be equipped somewhere, the department ought to look over the country and decide and recommend to us where the building should be erected for the best interest of the Government, and not have one gentlemen select his own district because that is for his best interest. It seems to me the amendment is obviously a selfish one. And I must say, Mr. Chairman, that it excites my indignation to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] get up and, by innuendo and insinuation, reflect upon Gen. Crozier. This whole matter which he refers to was investigated in the Senate years ago. At that time I remember——

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Not until I get through. Then I will if I have time. I remember that at that time I examined it. Gen. Crozier was completely exonerated, and I venture to say, having known him well, that there is not a man in this Congress, there is not a man in the executive departments who is more upright, more disinterested, more unselfish, more patriotic than Gen. Crozier. More than that, there are very few men who have the energy and executive ability that Gen. Crozier has. He has a genius for administration. One of the reasons why the Government manufactures more cheaply than private concerns is because for years it has had at the head of the Ordnance Department a man who any officer in the Army will tell you is not surpassed, not only in high character, but in executive ability. It is the only department in the Government, I believe, that keeps an accurate cost price. It has been one of the very best managed departments in the Government, and you will not have such an administrator always.

I have known the time when you did not have such a chief, and I believe a great many officers whom we are liable to have at the head of that department will not be able to make the ammunition or make other Government machinery or supplies with anything like the economy of Gen. Crozier. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], not trusting to the merits of his case, tries to throw out these insinuations and make you believe that Gen. Crozier will be influenced against Government manufacture by selfish interest. It is an unfair aspersion. I would like to see Gen. Crozier, with his remarkable power of statement and analysis, state his reasons in competition with the showing made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER].

Government manufacture of ammunition is not at stake, because that is already provided for. The question is, Shall this Congress, without the recommendation or investigation of any department, upon the motion of one man who would like to have an appropriation for his district, pick out one place where the Government will make an expenditure of $400,000, without any reason why it should go to that particular place except the selfish interest of the Congressman? Now, if I have the time, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has certainly shown by the bill that he reported from his committee, the Committee on Military Affairs, that he believes in Government manufacture of ammunition, and I think he deserves the greatest credit. Without boasting about it, or hardly mentioning the matter to anyone, he rendered the greatest service imaginable to the taxpayers of this country. His bill provides for the first time in the history of the Government that all ammunition must be manufactured by the Government, taking the profit out of preparation for war, establishing a great principle, and with one stroke of the pen saving to the Government of the United States millions of dollars. The best part of it is that we have now established this principle in the law itself, and I predict the Government will never go back to the old practice. I think the country is greatly indebted to the gentleman from Virginia. In the military affairs bill for this year alone he has saved to his constituents his salary for the next 100 years to come.

I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time simply to say that I am heartily in favor of the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER]. I am in favor not alone for the Government manufacture of ammunition but for armor plate as well. I introduced a resolution some time ago asking that something be done for the witnesses that came to the front and told how the Armor Trust had beaten this Government out of hundreds of millions of dollars. I sincerely hope that some day that resolution may pass, and we will find out how much money has been taken from the Government by the Armor Plate Trust.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. VOLLMER].

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of providing for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition at Rock Island. Whether that is done by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois or whether it can be done better by another amendment enforcing the expenditure of the unexpended portion of the $250,000 appropriated already in the bill, I do not know. But whichever way it can be done best I am in favor of it, for I want it done.

I am not in favor of continuing the discretionary expenditure of the vast amounts of the people's money by officials at Washington, whether they be civil or military, who have been shown, without making any charge whatever of improper conduct, of being altogether too close to interested parties who have made vast profits in past years out of these great military contracts.

I wonder if the Members of this House appreciate what this Government possesses in the way of an arsenal site at Rock Island—the only rock island in the Mississippi—the rest are mostly of mud. It is the bright particular jewel in the crown of the Father of Waters.

Cut out of the everlasting by some glacial or geologic process, it would seem, indeed, as though the finger of the Almighty were pointing at that spot as one specially designed for important and lasting purposes. In beauty of surroundings unequaled it stands forth boldly from the broad, shining bosom of the great river, which is there flanked with romantic hills, back of which stretch the billowy prairies of Iowa and Illinois, where to-day the greatest crop ever raised by man since this globe was tossed forth into space by an Almighty hand, is well on its way to maturity and destined to fill to overflowing the horn of plenty for the American people this fall.

Mr. MADDEN. What has all that got to do with the merits of this case?

Mr. VOLLMER. I am trying to show the advantages of the site under the control of the United States Government, and if the gentleman from Illinois will be patient with me, possibly I will show some slight connection before I get through.

Located in the heart of the great valley, the drainage system of 20,000 miles of navigable streams, which region, it is written in the book of fate, will be the home of countless millions of prosperous, educated, self-governing freemen, the center of great manufacturing as well as agricultural industries, and ultimately, by virtue of location and wealth, education, and numbers of its voters, the inner citadel of the future political power of this Republic. From every point of view this is the ideal location for a great military arsenal. Strategically 1,000 miles from the nearest frontier, it is safest from the attack of foreign foes, among which, in future, must be reckoned adventurous bird men making daring dashes within our lines to drop death and destruction-dealing explosives on our forts, arsenals, and depots. Geographically near the center of the continent, it is more easy of access by water and rail to any part of our common country when the exigencies of war or preparation for or prevention of war demand that military power and supplies be concentrated at any point. Economically unsurpassed as a place for manufacture of ammunition and supplies, by reason of the great water-power plant owned by the Government, and turned at a minimum of expense—about four-tenths of 1 cent per kilowatt hour—by the great, quiet giant concealed in the waves of the noble river at the foot of the Le Claire Rapids, which end at that point, where both rapidity and volume combine to generate vast quantities of hydraulic power, much of which is unused at this day.

If this power should give out, which is unthinkable, or be unavailable for any reason, we have boundless stores of coal on both sides of the river, within easy hauling distance, and north of us is the Mesaba Range, of Minnesota, with its inexhaustible supply of iron ore, and not far away is the copper of Michigan.

It has been demonstrated that at that arsenal we can manufacture ammunition at prices which are from 20 per cent to 60 per cent lower than the prices now paid by the Government to private concerns.

It has been the plan of the greatest minds connected with our War Department for years to concentrate at that place as far as possible all these activities. Its 1,000 acres—no danger of annoying the neighbors, as at Frankford—are regularly divided by miles of splendid military roads. There stand to-day, fronting on these great avenues, in serried ranks, massive stone buildings, erected for all time and representing an expenditure of $40,000,000. Two of these, costing $400,000 each, are standing there silent, except for storage use, to-day, though they were built with the intention of manufacturing therein the ammunition to be used by our Army and Navy, instead of turning it all over to the Pennsylvania monopolists, who have taken down $140,000,000 of Army and Navy contracts in the last 17 years and who have worked off armor plate on the Government that was honeycombed with blowholes at $616 per ton, when they were selling to foreign powers at $250 per ton. We have down there a plentiful supply of the right kind of labor, high-class mechanics and skilled artisans. Within a radius of 10 miles from the arsenal are 150,000 people, in the thriving, tricities of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island and Moline, Ill., and their manufacturing suburbs, where the wail of the calamity croaker is lost in the hum of prosperous industry. By the way, 90,000 automobile licenses were taken out in Iowa this year, 15,000 more than in all of last year, and still going at 500 per day, an eloquent commentary on the calamity howling about our poverty-stricken farmers who are buying buzz wagons in such quantities.

Gentlemen, the able chairman of the great committee reporting this bill on yesterday admitted most of these things, and that it was their hope and purpose to concentrate at Rock Island Arsenal as much as possible in time. But why not now? When will there be a better time? Develop this splendid plant to the limit of its magnificent possibilities and take away from Washington officialdom, military or civil, with or without sinister connections with the "interests," the discretionary power of distributing millions of the people's money among a favored few, like the Carnegie, the Bethlehem, and Midvale Steel Cos.

Concentrate at the right place, instead of frittering away money and effort in a "pork-barrel" policy, where in your hearts you know it is worse than wasted.

Let our Government make its ammunition where it can make it cheapest and best, and that is at Rock Island, the beautiful, historic island, under whose age-old oaks and elms the spirit of Black Hawk walks "in the glimpses of the moon" and on whose rocky cliffs and caverns the Indian legends of the past hang like poetic garlands; that favored spot where Illinois and Iowa, two great sister States, clasp hands over the Father of Waters in mutual pride and eternal amity.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, in the temporary absence of the chairman, and by his direction, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel any considerable amount of responsibility with regard to the appropriations made by this Democratic House; and yet I feel that I should be recreant to my duty as a Member of this House if I did not protest against the unwarranted and unnecessary expenditure of the public money now proposed. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] has strengthened his case or will strengthen his case by the unwarranted attack he has made upon one of the most efficient and faithful servants under the Government. I think that if his case is so weak that it needs bolstering up by an attack on Gen. Crozier, it is so weak that it will fall of its own weight. But it is not what Gen. Crozier thinks about this, but what do we think about it under the existing state of facts.

This matter was carefully considered by the subcommittee, and on pages 32 to 37 of the supplemental hearings of the committee it is fully set out. It is proposed to use warehouse H at Rock Island for the purpose of manufacturing ammunition. It will cost us $200,000 or $250,000 to equip that building with machinery. That building cost $400,000, and we are spending $65,000 for the purpose of manufacturing ammunition. It will cost $200,000 or $250,000 to equip that building with machinery. That building cost about $400,000, and we are spending $65,000 for repairing it in this bill. It is now used as a warehouse. If used for an ammunition factory, we will have to build another warehouse. We can build one for $200,000. There will be required, in addition to that, an assembling building costing $50,000 and three magazines costing $35,000. The total expenditure at the very least calculation will be $535,000, and the probable total expenditure will be about $735,000 in order to equip this new plant.

Now, as to the necessity for it. The officers appearing before the subcommittee assured us that with the very greatly increased appropriations we have made for the coming fiscal year for ammunition in order to secure a reserve every pound of it, every dollar's worth of it, can be and will be manufactured in the Government factories already in existence and already running.

At the rate of the appropriations for the coming fiscal year it will take only four years for us to assemble the reserve which is considered necessary. If we do not increase our appropriations above the present large sum, which we should not do, at the end of four years our reserves will have been accumulated, and then this is what the situation will be as per my questions of Col. Babbitt:

Mr. MONDELL. To what capacity would it be necessary to run the present plants at the expiration of the time when the reserve supply is accumulated in order to keep up with your current needs in time of peace? Your current needs would be for target practice and whatever is necessary to supply deterioration, if there is any, I presume?

Col. BABBITT. Yes. At a rough estimate I should say about $500,000 would cover the funds that we would need per year.
Mr. MONDELL. After the accumulation of the surplus?
Col. BABBITT. Yes.
Mr. MONDELL. How much of the capacity of your present plant would be required to provide the $500,000 worth?
Col. BABBITT. Roughly, working on an eight-hour basis, about one-third, I think, of the time.
Mr. MONDELL. It would occupy one eight-hour shift about one-third of the time?
Col. BABBITT. Yes.
Mr. MONDELL. Then the full capacity of the present plants on a three-shift basis would be utilized one-ninth of the time after the surplus was accumulated?
Col. BABBITT. Not quite as much as that, because the three shifts do not make quite three times one shift. We usually count it about two and one-half times. We must allow something for the interval in changing shifts.
Mr. MONDELL. Then one-seventh or one-eighth of the time?
Col. BABBITT. Yes.

So, this is the situation: Without any addition to our plants, we can and we will manufacture all of the ammunition we are willing to appropriate for, and at the end of four years, without any addition to our present plants, we will have nine times as much plant capacity as we can utilize, and yet gentlemen want to spend well nigh on to a million dollars to build another plant that is not needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNOLLY].

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] as a good business proposition. I think that the arsenal at Rock Island offers more in the matter of economies than most any of the other Government arsenals. They have the acreage, they have the buildings, and they have the surplus of power; and as far as constructing any additional building in order to take the stores from these buildings which it is now contemplated to utilize for this purpose is concerned, I am advised that there are aisles and attics in the buildings there now sufficient to take care of all those stores, and that in addition to what this amendment contemplates all that would be required would be a matter of about $10,000 for a magazine. Rock Island Arsenal is ideally situated from a manufacturing standpoint. It is within a stone's throw of the coal fields of Illinois. They have the power there, they have the facilities for getting the labor that is necessary, and they have proper conditions surrounding the labor.

I believe the Government can do no better thing if they are going to expand the manufacturing part of arsenal work with the idea of producing our own ammunition, of which I am heartily in favor, than to expand the Rock Island Arsenal and to utilize what it now offers. With the buildings they have the surplus power. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee I was particularly interested in the incorporation of the new policy of the manufacture by the Government of its own equipment and munitions, and thus effecting a very substantial saving.

The hearings before our committee established the fact that it is good business policy to utilize the Government arsenals for the manufacture of these materials and cut off the very substantial profits heretofore paid to corporations that have exacted heavy toll from the Government. At Rock Island Arsenal, the strategic position in case of war, the splendid transportation facilities, the accessibility to fuel, the labor market, the ample area, and other favorable conditions commend it as the proper place for extensive operations by the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to say anything further about this proposed appropriation, but I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is an appropriation for a military purpose. We have already appropriated or we are going to appropriate in this Congress $250,000,000 for military purposes. The Army bill carried over $101,000,000, the Navy bill carries $140,000,000, the fortification bill carries about $6,000,000, and two different deficiency bills carry about $8,000,000 more, and then I am informed the sundry civil appropriation bill carries about $12,000,000 more, making instead of $250,000,000, as I just stated, $275,000,000 to be appropriated for military purposes out of the $1,000,000 that we appropriate for all of the different activities of the Government. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is not for the purpose of expanding a plant which the Government wants expanded. The War Department does not ask for this. The War Department does not say that it is necessary to have this plant expanded in order that it may manufacture and have facilities to manufacture the necessary ammunition for the use of the Government, but the gentleman from Illinois, representing that district, wants to have expended there $225,000. That is the whole of it. I do not quarrel with the gentleman from Illinois because he wants to spend that money in his district.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. HARDY. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the Government, under the bill as it is, will manufacture all of the ammunition, or will the Government buy it if this amendment is not adopted?
Mr. HAY. It has been repeated here again and again that all of the ammunition provided for under the Army bill and under the fortification bill, except 10 per cent of that in the fortification bill, is to be manufactured in Government plants.
Mr. HARDY. And the same with the Navy bill?
Mr. HAY. I do not know anything about the Navy bill. This has nothing to do with the Navy. This arsenal does not manufacture ammunition for the Navy, but for the Army.
Mr. HARDY. I am asking for information.
Mr. HAY. I do not know, but I understand that that is not true of the Navy bill. The War Department does not hesitate to ask for these things whenever they think it is necessary. They would not hesitate a moment to ask for this appropriation if they thought the appropriation was necessary in order that they should have it to properly manufacture this ammunition. It was the insistence of the Government that made it necessary for us to make so large an appropriation for ammunition in this bill.
Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. O'HAIR. Did not the hearings before the Military Committee develop the fact that the Government did not have sufficient facilities to make all of the ammunition that we appropriated money to purchase?
Mr. HAY. No. The hearings developed this fact. Gen. Crozier stated that he could use $1,500,000 doing the work that is now being done, but the evidence before the Committee on Appropriations is that by working three shifts—and they are not working three shifts now, as I understand it—in all of these arsenals they will have all the facilities which they require to spend the money which has been appropriated or will be appropriated in these bills for the next fiscal year.
Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?
Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. O'HAIR. And that is whether Gen. Crozier and other witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs did not develop this fact, that the Government has not sufficient facilities to make all of its own ammunition? And did they not advocate, Gen. Crozier particularly, that we appropriate money to purchase some of this ammunition from private concerns, because he thought it advisable to encourage private concerns to manufacture our ammunition, so that in case of war or sudden strike they would be equipped to help the Government out? Was not that the fact?
Mr. HAY. That was the reason given by him for advocating the purchase of this ammunition; but he did not testify that the Government could not manufacture all the ammunition which was needed for the Army.
Mr. O'HAIR. I thought the hearings showed that we did not have the facilities.
Mr. HAY. And he also gave another reason why he thought the Government should purchase some of this ammunition, that it would enable the Government to keep abreast of the times and be able to compare our methods of manufacture with the methods of manufacture of private manufacturers.
Mr. KAHN. And the cost.
Mr. HAY. And the cost; but the Committee on Military Affairs of this House and Congress passed a law that all this ammunition should be made and manufactured in Government plants, and the Government itself, through its officers, testified that we have facilities enough to manufacture this without this additional $225,000; and if there is any argument needed to persuade any man within the sound of my voice, it does seem to me that the statement of the gentleman from New York, taken from the statement of Col. Babbitt, the ordnance officer, that at the end of four years we must diminish our manufacture of ammunition, ought to defeat this amendment if nothing else, because you would be equipping a plant which in four years you will have to dismantle, and you will be absolutely throwing the money away. Now, if that is true, I do not see how any man can justify himself in voting for this amendment. I fully sympathize with the gentleman from Illinois. I sympathize with him throughout his fight to have all these things manufactured in Government plants, and he deserves credit for it, and as a result of it the arsenal in his district is now equipped and is being further equipped to manufacture, as I understand it, gun carriages and the matériel for artillery at the arsenal, and that was done and is being done, and it does seem to me the gentleman ought to be satisfied. There is the Watervliet Arsenal, the Watertown Arsenal, the Frankford Arsenal, the Springfield Arsenal—all these arsenals are now in operation, and there is no more reason for selecting the Rock Island Arsenal for the expenditure of unnecessary money than there is to select any of these other arsenals, and I hope, under these circumstances, the House will not see fit to add to the already enormous military expenses of this Government by appropriating this sum of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has three minutes remaining and the gentleman from Illinois two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, so that there may not be any misunderstanding of the extent of the facilities possessed by the Government, I desire to read a further extract from the testimony taken by the committee on the 28th of May. The committee desired to ascertain if the Government had the facilities to manufacture this ammunition, with a view to making recommendations to the House. Here is the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. How much money can be utilized a year in the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition with the facilities you now have?

Col. BABBITT. We estimate that we can expend all the funds that have been appropriated in the Army bill, $3,000,000, and the $1,200,000 now carried in the fortifications bill, if that bill becomes a law, with our existing plants by working three shifts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Army bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 and the fortifications bill an appropriation of $1,200,000, and by working your plants on a three-shift basis you think you can utilize that sum of money?

Col. BABBITT. Yes; by increasing the machinery to some extent. We contemplate using $100,000 of the $1,200,000 appropriation in adding to the machinery necessary for the increased work.

The CHAIRMAN. You will then have sufficient capacity to manufacture all the field-artillery ammunition for which provision has been made next year?

Col. BABBITT. Yes, sir; that is, working on a three-shift basis.

There can not be any question, Mr. Chairman, but that we have these facilities and that additional facilities will not be of any particular benefit to the Government. I made a statement relative to the authority to use 10 per cent of the appropriations that might be available for manufacture for the purchase of ammunition. That provision was put in because of this language, which was contained in the fortifications bill, "After the contract obligations are disposed of 10 per cent of the balance may be used for purchase." In a communication addressed to Mr. SHERLEY, in charge of the fortifications bill, by Gen. Crozier, he stated:

Referring further to the subject of the proposed limitation in the fortifications act requiring arsenals to manufacture about everything within their capacity under appropriations made, I wish to call your attention to the fact that in the case of some component articles the amount which we would manufacture, although we have the plant for doing it, might be so small as to cause the Government manufacture to be more expensive than the purchase price.

There are certain stock articles manufactured and used other than by the Government. These things, not very great, can be purchased cheaper than manufactured by the Government. The Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Chairman, have worked in cooperation. They have worked in consultation—the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], in charge of the fortifications bill, and myself—have continually conferred and have worked with our respective committees for the purpose of utilizing to the fullest extent the Government plants. In view of the showings that have been made from time to time, in view of the information which has been set forth by the gentleman from Illinois, to compel the expenditure of money appropriated for these munitions of war in Government establishments, and if there were not facilities or additional facilities required, I should do what I did last year, recommend to this House, and have it passed, as I did last year, $250,000 to equip the Rock Island Arsenal for the manufacture of field artillery matériel to prevent any dissemination of the force there employed, and authority to provide the required facilities. The item which I have just mentioned was recommended for the two purposes of having a Government plant itself and to prevent any slackening off of the employees. In view of necessity, according to the statement of responsible officials, of the expenditure of a half a million dollars at Rock Island to furnish the required facilities for manufacturing the field artillery ammunition, which at the end of five years could not be utilized at all, to adopt the pending amendment would be an unjustifiable expenditure of public funds which I could not justify. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, the reason I disagreed with the chairman's statement as to the amount of ammunition a few moments ago was that he was talking about field-artillery ammunition alone and I was talking about ammunition. The fortifications bill and the Army bill together carry $5,500,000 for ammunition, whereas the amount for field-artillery ammunition is only $4,200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are three kinds of ammunition—field-artillery ammunition, small-arms ammunition, and seacoast-artillery ammunition—and the effort of the gentleman from Illinois before the committee was to equip the Rock Island Arsenal for the manufacture of field-artillery ammunition. In the last moment of the debate to claim that he is talking about something else is a little too much for this committee to tolerate.

Mr. TAVENNER. The bill that I discussed before the Appropriations Committee and the amendment I have offered here are two entirely different propositions. Before the Appropriations Committee concerned only field-artillery ammunition, while this amendment embraces all kinds of ammunition. Now, some gentlemen have said here to-day that Gen. Crozier contends one thing and some that he contends another. In a letter signed by him, which, I submit, is the best evidence as to the capacity of the arsenals, he says:

The Ordnance Department now has facilities at its arsenals for the manufacture annually of field-artillery ammunition to the value of about $1,500,000. * * * If the sum appropriated should amount to not more than $3,000,000, it would be necessary for the department to procure ammunition exceeding in value by about $1,500,000 the capacity of the present plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the date of the communication?

Mr. TAVENNER. September 18.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of last year. Since that time an investigation has been made by the Ordnance Department and determination made of what they can do, and, under date of May 28, Col. Babbitt testified as to what their facilities were, nearly a year, or eight months, after the statement the gentleman refers to.

Mr. TAVENNER. I assume that Gen. Crozier was giving us the facts in this letter, and if that is true, we have capacity to manufacture $1,500,000 worth of field-artillery ammunition, and we have an appropriation of $4,200,000 for field-artillery ammunition.

The passage of this amendment would be a step toward the taking of profit out of war and preparation for war, a policy that is sure to be adopted ultimately, and I hope this amendment may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] withdraw the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a vote. I think the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAVENNER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). On this vote the ayes are 41, the noes 40.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-four gentlemen are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. McKELLAR, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called; whereupon 210 Members had answered to their names, and he presented therewith a list of the absentees.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Are we in the committee or in the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are in the House now. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 210 Members were ascertained to be present—a quorum—and he reports the names of the absentees, to be recorded in the Journal.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I desire to present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No other business is permissible. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Thereupon the committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAVENNER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 82.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. TAVENNER to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union and Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906; also for continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906; also for furnishing headstones for the unmarked graves of Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national cemeteries, $50,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 57, line 7, the figures "$50,000" and make it "$52,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 57, line 7, by striking out the figures "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$52,000."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, there are carried in this paragraph and in the paragraphs further on, on page 59, for the Confederate mound, Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago, and on page 60, for Confederate burial plats in various cemeteries in the country, appropriations for the care of the graves of Confederate soldiers and the marking of the headstones and the preservation of the graves of the Confederate soldiers who died in prison.

The fact, Mr. Chairman, that there are provided in this bill, and have been provided in the sundry civil bill for several years, these appropriations from the National Treasury to preserve and mark the graves of the Confederate soldiers is evidence far surpassing all else that could be offered that this great country of ours is now, and has been for years, and in the providence of God will be in all the years to come, united forevermore. [Applause.]

There was enacted, Mr. Chairman, on the 4th day of June, this year, at the Arlington Cemetery, across the river, opposite the city of Washington, a scene which is not comparable to any other in the history of the world. There was unveiled on that day at the National Cemetery at Arlington the most magnificent monument to the heroism and valor of the Confederate soldiers that has been erected in the country—a more magnificent monument than any other that has been erected in this Capital City. And as I stood on that sacred spot and listened to the speeches that were delivered by the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic and the commander of the United Confederate Veterans, and saw the President of these reunited United States receive this monument at the hands of a Southern woman, the representative of the Daughters of the Confederacy, who had erected it to mark the resting place of the Confederate soldiers who had followed the cross of the Southern Confederacy and died in its defense, I realize that no other country in the history of the world could have presented such a spectacle, and I knew that this Republic would be perpetual. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, that great and noble President—for he was a great President—the noble, golden-hearted gentleman and gallant soldier, William McKinley [applause], is probably more responsible than anybody else for the existence of this privilege, honor, and right that has by act of the Congress been granted to have our Confederate dead buried in Arlington Cemetery and their graves preserved and suitably marked, and that this magnificent monument, erected by the contributions of the Daughters of the Confederacy, now stands upon that sacred soil to tell the world and posterity of the deeds of heroism and devotion to duty of the men whose memory it commemorates, for he said at Atlanta, Ga., on a visit there in 1900, "that the time had now arrived, in the providence of God, when it was the duty of the National Government to aid the southern people in taking care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers"; and it was then that the remains of the Confederate dead were gathered and intered in this national cemetery at Arlington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more. I may not use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. This monument is a grand one, a magnificent monument of bronze, executed and designed by the hand of an ex-Confederate soldier. Round about it lie buried 284 of those who followed the fiery cross of the Confederate battle flag and who died for the cause it represented and who were buried around and near this Capital from the effects of wounds or disease while in prison. The depot quartermaster of the Army in this city reported on January 13, 1914, that there was then a total number of 282 Confederate burials in Arlington; known, 271, and unknown, 11. Since that report was made there have been two burials, making a total of 284 to date. This is the inscription, Mr. Chairman, on this monument, which in plain and simple words tells the story of their heroism in war and their virtues in peace:

To our Dead Heroes
by
The United Daughters of the Confederacy.
"They have beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks."
Victrix causa Diis placuit, sed victa Catoni.
"Not for fame; not for place, or for rank;
not lured by ambition or goaded by necessity; but in simple obedience to duty as they understood it, these men suffered all, sacrificed all, dared all—and died."

Mr. Chairman, I heard those eloquent orations, one delivered by a former Member of this House, Hon. Washington Gardner, of Michigan, now the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the other by Gen. Benedict Young, of Kentucky, now the commander of the United Confederate Veterans. Neither apologized for what either side had done, and both asserted that their comrades in arms, dead and living, had maintained the right as they believed it to be in that great struggle on every battle field, in a contest in which the valor and heroism of both amazed the world and challenged comparison in history with all the great wars and battles of the world, and the sentiments of both were cheered to the echo.

So it marks a day in the history of our country when, within sight of this Capitol, with the Stars and Stripes and the Confederate flag both flying above the heads of that great throng, everybody gladly united in honoring the memory of men who had, as was stated in the inscription upon the monument that marked their resting place to perpetuate their heroism, their patriotism, and bravery, "in simple obedience to duty as they understood it, suffered all, sacrificed all, dared all—and died." [Applause.]

The world may go on in its cycles for thousands of years. This Republic may live, as I hope and believe it will, until the cycles of the earth are ended, because I believe it will be perpetuated forever, under the providence of God, to maintain and establish liberty and free institutions; and nothing will tend to perpetuate it so much as the recollection that the memory of the Confederate soldier is honored and revered, as it was on the 4th of June at Arlington Cemetery, the former home of that great chieftain of the Confederate forces who led them to unparalleled victories and submitted to defeat only when all but honor was lost. [Applause.]

I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that with the unexpended balance the amount appropriated in this paragraph for this purpose is all that is necessary. More would have been given if it was necessary, but the committee gave all that was asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Burial of deceased indigent patients: For expenses of burying in the Little Rock (Ark.) National Cemetery, including transportation thereto, indigent ex-soldiers, ex-sailors, or ex-marines of the United States service, either regular or volunteer, who have been honorably discharged or retired and who die while patients at the Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., to be disbursed by the Secretary of War, at a cost not exceeding $35 for such burial expenses in each case, exclusive of cost of grave, $200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman from New York [Mr FITZGERALD] would be seeking recognition by this time. We have already run five minutes overtime, and have gone as far as the gentleman said he wanted to go.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have made very little progress on the bill to-day, and at this hour we are more likely to go more rapidly than at any other time in the day.

Mr. MANN. A moment ago the gentleman implored me to allow him to go on down to this item. I was going to make a point of order on one of the items but did not do it out of consideration for the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us go on a little while.

Mr. MANN. This is Saturday night. I have to take a bath to-night. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is no longer fashionable on Saturday. The gentleman can do that some other day.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14189. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City; and

H. R. 14385. An act to amend section 5 of an act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, approved August 24, 1912.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 14385. An act to amend section 5 of an act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, approved August 24, 1912.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WINGO, for the remainder of this day, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TUESDAY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. DONOVAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut objects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is too bad. I thought the Democrats wanted to expedite business. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 15, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for new roof, plastering, repairs and painting, etc., rendered necessary through damage by fire to the post office and courthouse at Binghamton, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 1035); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proposed clause of legislation to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to settle and allow accounts for pay of the chiefs of divisions of chemistry, pharmacology, and zoology in the Hygienic Laboratory, etc. (H. Doc. No. 1037); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Acting Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation to carry out the provisions of public act No. 79, to erect a suitable monument on the battle grounds at Horse Shoe, on the Tallapoosa River, Ala. (H. Doc. No. 1036); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the limitations of our lives are in Thy hands, so that when we are weak then we are strong. Our very ignorance brings us into closer relationship and greater dependence upon Thee, and our weakness drives us back to the almighty arm of God for support. We thank Thee that Thou hast thus conditioned us in this life as to bring us by all the tokens of life, by all the motives Thou hast put into the human heart, back to God for protection and guidance and blessing. We look to Thee this day to open our hearts for Thy blessing upon us.

We remember before Thy throne one honored in the years past, one of the leaders in our national life, a former Vice President of the United States and President of this body, who has passed beyond. We pray Thy blessing upon those remaining who mourn his loss, and that the praise of the people may ever go up to Thee for giving to us leaders equipped with knowledge, high patriotism, and with devotion to the country.

We pray now Thy blessing upon all the leaders of this day. Protect them in life and health and strength. Give them wisdom from on high to do Thy will and bring to pass Thy mighty purposes in us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. BRANDEGEE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LEGISLATION OF THE CONGRESS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have here what I regard as being in the nature of a petition for the relief of the country, which I will read:

A naive ignorance of Washington traditions is manifested in the top pressure at which President Wilson has kept Congress working since April, 1913. Those who know Washington know that if from a political point of view a little legislation is a dangerous thing, a good deal of legislation is much more dangerous. The Congress which strains itself legislating on all the subjects mentioned in a party platform digs its own grave. The more it works, the more voters it alienates, and its record-breaking list of things accomplished is generally paralleled by a record-breaking casualty list at the next election.

The Evening Post's Washington correspondent points with pride to the 13 acts of general importance which this Congress has already passed, and mentions 15 more acts of nearly equal importance which it is expected to pass. Under the snap of the President's whip Congress has made a downward revision of the tariff, reformed the Federal banking and currency system, repealed the tolls-exemption clause of the Panama Canal law, and passed a militia reorganization act, and an act providing for the construction of a Government-owned railway in Alaska. It intends to pass—if Mr. Wilson's vigilance does not relax—three antitrust acts, containing among other things the Clayton-Gompers "gold-brick" concessions to labor, five conservation acts, an immigration act, an act regulating dealings in cotton futures, an act giving American citizenship to the Porto Ricans, and possibly an act extending autonomy in the Philippines and vaguely promising the Filipinos independence.

It is a record to make a Representative or Senator seeking reelection shudder. The only other Congress in recent times which can challenge the Sixty-third's mania for legislation was the Fifty-first, which came into power with the Harrison administration. It broke all records then known. It revised the tariff schedules, passed an administrative tariff act, a silver purchase and coinage act, the Sherman antitrust act, the dependent pension act, an international copyright act, a merchant marine postal subvention act, and came within an ace of passing the celebrated Lodge-Spooner force bill for the regulation of elections in the Southern States. In the House of Representatives the Reed rules were also applied in order to put an end to old-fashioned filibustering. It was a prodigious record of activity, considering that the Fifty-first Congress did not meet until December, while the Sixty-third Congress met in April.

But what was the political result of all that expenditure of legislative energy? There were 166 Republicans in the House in the Fifty-first Congress. When the Fifty-second Congress assembled there were only 88. Every other Republican had been defeated at the polls. It looks as if the present Congress is going to bring upon itself a similar fate. The country is tired of it and of all its works. The public resents the feverish hurry with which half-baked legislation is being rushed upon the statute books. The people want a rest. Even Congress wants to go home, but quails before the piercing eye of the fierce taskmaster in the White House. There will be a reckoning next November. Then, unless all signs fail, history will repeat itself in the slaughter of busybody lawmakers who didn't know enough to quit when it was time to quit.

That is an editorial in the New York Sunday Tribune of yesterday.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chicago and Bloomington, in the State of Illinois; of Fargo, N. Dak.; of Bloomington, Ind.; of Decorah, Iowa; of St. Paul, Minn.; of Ebensburg, Pa.; of Los Angeles, Cal.; of St. Louis, Mo.; and of the Chautauqua Assembly of Greenwood, S. C., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions of the City Council of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the sale of the marine hospital property at Cleveland to the Lakeside Hospital or authorizing the transfer or sale of the property to anyone save to the city of Cleveland, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of C. F. Comstock Lodge, No. 332, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Danbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Waterbury, Conn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of inoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Corbin, Kans., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, we have no more than a dozen Members present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chilton	Johnson	Martine, N. J.
Borah	Clapp	Jones	Nelson
Brady	Clarke, Ark.	Kenyon	O'Gorman

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is still in order.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Vermont, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seeley, Cal., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lathrop, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of Local Union No. 67, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Grand Haven, Mich., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against war between the United States and Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against any change being made in the American flag, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions adopted by the Florida Bankers' Association, at Jacksonville, Fla., favoring an amendment to the currency law to provide that any State bank which has complied with the requirements of the national-bank act shall not be required to increase its capital to become a member of a regional reserve bank, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented the petition of J. C. Luning, State treasurer, at Tallahassee, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the use of the mails to certain classes of insurance companies, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of the Somerset County Sunday School Association, of Bingham, Me., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ludlow, Vt., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of the Maine State Association of Letter Carriers, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 5858) granting an increase of pension to George A. Joyner;

A bill (S. 5859) granting a pension to Mathew Whitfield; and

A bill (S. 5860) granting an increase of pension to C. F. Prange; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 5861) to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 5862) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. C. Freeman (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5863) granting an increase of pension to Orville Choate; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 5864) to define corrupt practices in connection with campaigns for the nomination and election of United States Senators and Congressmen, and to provide punishment therefor; and

A bill (S. 5865) to provide a direct, truthful, and inexpensive means of communication between the voters and candidates for nomination and election to certain Federal offices, and to provide publicity for amendments to the Federal Constitution submitted by Congress, and the reasons for and against their adoption; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 5866) for the relief of the heirs of George W. Croft; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5867) granting an increase of pension to Frederick W. Schaeffer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) authorizing the revision, reindexing, and reprinting of Treasury Document No. 2499; to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for the construction of a building to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CANNON.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5495) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS BY HON. W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. OWEN. I have a copy of an address by Hon. W. J. Bryan on the People's Law, delivered at Columbus, Ohio, March 12, 1912, upon the invitation of the constitutional convention at that place. I desire to have the address printed as a public document, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing with the view to its publication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF ARTICLE BY HON. GEORGE SUTHERLAND (S. DOC. NO. 505).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have printed an article which appeared in the March number of the Independent, 1909, on the necessity of greater care in making laws, by Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND, junior Senator from the State of Utah.

Any subject with which Senator SUTHERLAND deals would, as we all know, be worthy of thoughtful consideration. The subject treated in this article is a very important one, and his paper is a valuable contribution to the literature upon the reformation of our present loose system of lawmaking. The article is only four or five pages, and I desire to have it printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE TELEPOST.

Mr. OWEN. On November 17, 1913, because of my long acquaintance and great respect for Hon. H. Lee Sellers and R. H. Sellers, who were developing the telepost system of telegraphy, and the belief that it might prove of public use, I submitted Senate resolution 216, authorizing the appointment of a committee to investigate and report upon the telepost system as to word-carrying capacity, accuracy, economy, and efficiency. The resolution is now on the calendar, being Order of Business 440. As the mover of the resolution, I ask unanimous consent that it be taken from the calendar and postponed indefinitely for the reason that I may become interested in it, and am unwilling to be responsible in any degree for any action the Senate may or may not take in relation thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma will be taken from the calendar and postponed indefinitely.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, which was submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on Saturday last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 14, 15, 16, 42, 43, 44, 50, 54, 66, 70, 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 39, 41, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, and 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "only," insert the following: "and officers of the Construction Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment, after the word "officers," insert the following: "not exceeding five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert the following: "June 30, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Under authority of the House granted to change totals not in conference, the committee on conference amended the bill as follows: Page 20 of the bill, line 21, strike out "$170,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md.: Toward extension of powder factory (cost not to exceed $500,000), $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "for fuel-oil storage, at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Line 7 of said amendment strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "men," insert the following: "of the Navy and Marine Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to upkeep and to industrial work at navy yards and stations. The total sum so charged shall be distributed in accordance with the work done in the various yards and stations in order that the cost of work may be determined."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"A committee is hereby appointed, to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, and one naval officer to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy, at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant. Said report shall contain the estimated cost of a plant and site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons, and also a plant having an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee, payable upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 33, 34, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, and 71 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if this is a complete agreement?

Mr. SWANSON. It is not a complete agreement. We report on many items in agreement, and then report on others in disagreement.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senator from Virginia what has been done with the amendment relating to the increase of chaplains in the Navy?

Mr. SWANSON. The House receded from its disagreement to that amendment.

Mr. JONES. That amendment is agreed to?

Mr. SWANSON. It is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I understand there can be no separate vote by the Senate on that amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. There can not be.

Mr. JONES. In order to reject that we would have to reject the entire report?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not suppose the Senate would reject its own amendment.

Mr. JONES. We could reject the conference report, of course?

Mr. SWANSON. We could reject the conference report. Then the whole matter would be opened up, as it was when the bill was passed.

Mr. JONES. That is the only way it can be reached? I desire to say, then, that I shall vote against the acceptance of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia how many items are in disagreement?

Mr. SWANSON. The conferees have been unable to agree on amendments numbered 28, 29, 33, 34, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, and 71.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has a copy of the report there?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; it has been printed. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PERKINS conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, be taken up for consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. LEE of Maryland is to strike out the paragraph beginning on page 105, line 11, which reads as follows:

During the fiscal year 1915 not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions herein above provided for shall be filled except by promotion or demotion from among those in the classified service in said bureau. And the salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. The portion of the bill which the Senator from Maryland moves to strike out was carried in the appropriation act of last year. It is designed to provide that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies in the Pension Bureau shall be filled, except by promotion or demotion. The Senator from Maryland read from the House hearings and from a statement made by the Commissioner of Pensions, but the Senator omitted to read two questions and answers, which undoubtedly determined the action of the House committee and of the House itself. The Commissioner of Pensions did ask the House committee to modify the amendment by adopting a suggestion which he made, and in arguing his suggestion he said:

It is going to be pretty hard to turn off 100 and upward of our people, and it has been suggested to me that there be added to the estimates 50 positions at $900 each, $900 being the lowest salary upon which it is supposed that one would be able to subsist in Washington. That is proposed in order that we may be able to take care of many who are old and who have rendered faithful service, instead of turning them absolutely out. Now, I offer that suggestion to the committee for your consideration. I really am in favor of it myself.

Now comes a question by Representatives BYRNS of Tennessee, which undoubtedly determined the action of the committee:

Mr. BYRNS. Do I understand that your suggestion is based upon the fact that you need 50 clerks, at $900, or is it more particularly based on the fact that you wish to give them pensions, so to speak?

Mr. SALTZGABER. In effect, it might be so considered, instead of turning them absolutely out without anything. These clerks would receive small salaries, and their duties would be largely perfunctory. The suggestion is not made because we need them.

The provision as the House inserted it therefore can not fairly be said to deprive any of these clerks of the positions they now hold, but the Commissioner of Pensions admits that he does not need them. It is a liberal provision, it seems to me, to allow those who now have positions to remain, although they are not needed; but this provision in the House bill is intended to require that when vacancies occur by death or resignation—in case any should resign—those places should not again be filled for the reason that the clerks are not needed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida if the House provision of which he speaks is not, as a matter of fact, in the interest of the old soldiers, instead of against them, as was alleged here on Saturday?

Mr. BRYAN. I think it can be said to be so, because the Commissioner of Pensions comes before a committee of Congress and says that there are some of these clerks whom he does not need; but this provision in the bill does not take their positions away from them; it simply provides that when they drop out of the rolls by death or resignation, not more than 25 per cent of such positions shall be filled.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is what I thought.

Mr BRYAN. That is exactly what it does.

Mr. BRISTOW. So that it leaves the old soldiers just as they are, but if there is a vacancy, if the place is not needed, the place will not be filled, and, of course, it ought not to be filled.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to a conversation which I had this morning with the Pension Bureau. I asked the same question which the Senator from Kansas has asked, and asked them to let me know what effect it would have upon the old soldiers, and this is the answer that I got. I was told the effect of the amendment would be that if, for instance, there was a clerk at $1,440 who resigned or died, if this language is left in the bill there could be no promotion to fill the vacancy in that particular place; that there would be no chance for a soldier below that or in another grade to be advanced to that particular position; but that it will be entirely abolished. In that way it would affect the promotion of an old soldier.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that can not be, I do not care what the Pension Bureau says, because the law says "excepting by promotion or demotion."

Mr. SMOOT. I am only stating what the effect of it will be as it was explained to me by the Pension Department.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just wait a moment, I desire to say that the reason they stated that there would be no advancement of the old soldiers was that in the promotions they would not take the old soldiers, but would take younger people, and the old soldiers would remain where they are.

Mr. BRISTOW. What difference would that make if the House provision be stricken out? You can not fill those places and promote old soldiers unless it is thought they ought to be promoted.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose that is true; but the rule has been in the past that they get their regular promotions. That is all there is in the provision, at least I am so told at the Pension Bureau, to which I telephoned this morning, with the exception that they say that on July 1 there will be some 60 clerks of the bureau dropped; that some of them are very efficient clerks, and under this language whenever a vacancy occurs they can take of those 60 clerks but 25 per cent; in other words, they can only take 1 out of 4 of the clerks that would be dropped on the 1st day of July to fill any vacancy that may occur.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, is not that because under the system which is now being used in adjusting pensions, instead of having an application for every increase to which the pensioner may be entitled, as was formerly the case, adjustments are automatically made on the records, thus requiring less clerical force? It seems to me this is a provision which protects the old soldiers from being discharged; but when there is a vacancy that vacancy is not to be filled at all. There is no incentive to discharge a man if you can not put anybody else in his place. It seems to me that the provision is in the interest of the soldiers instead of against them. I can not see it in any other way. If I thought the provision was against the interests of the soldiers, I should be in favor of striking it out.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that I would take the same view; and yet when the language of the provision was considered in the committee it was stated that it was a protection to the old soldiers; but, as I say, since the statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] last Saturday night, I have inquired at the Pension Office particularly as to whether it was for or against the old soldiers, and I have stated to the Senator from Florida just what they told me this morning in that interview.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can not help what the head of the bureau may have said; the law is too plain for disagreement. It protects those who are now employed, and when places become vacant it provides that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies shall be filled, because even the Commissioner of Pensions admits that he does not need them.

In the letter which the Senator from Maryland put into the RECORD the only argument made by the commissioner to change his attitude is that the positions had better be retained and when vacancies occur be filled with new appointees, because legislation is likely to be enacted which may increase the pension roll and the Mexican situation may result in bringing forth more pension applications; but it has been argued here for two years that so many employees are not needed, because the act of 1912 operates automatically—that is, when the name of a pensioner once goes upon the rolls his status is fixed.

It seems to me, Mr. President, the committee is liberal enough, in the face of the fact that all the 1,259 employees are not needed in this one building, when it says, "Well, you have been there a long time and we will let you stay until you die, but we do not propose to fill the roll up again with useless employees." One hundred employees of the lowest class means $90,000 a year.

I can not understand how anybody can defend the position to keep 100 or more employees upon the rolls when everybody admits that they are not needed, or, rather, how the argument can be made that after the useless employees now there die we should fill up the useless positions with more employees at the expense of about $100,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is right about it. As I read the provision promotions can be made just the same. Undoubtedly, if we take the evidence of the Pension Bureau earlier in the session, they have got more help than they need. I have more confidence in the statements made by the commissioner and those representing the bureau when they were examined before the House committee early in the consideration of this matter than I have in the afterthought, when there is a claim for more employees and they conclude that possibly they can use more. I hope that the paragraph may stand as it is in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the bill is reported to the Senate I desire to reserve the right in the Senate to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 132, line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on page 65, line 5, I move to strike out "$1,000,000," in figures, and insert "$1,500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000," so as to read:

Collecting the income tax: For expenses of assessing and collecting the income tax as provided in paragraph N, section 2, of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, including the employment in the District of Columbia of necessary clerical and other personal services, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $1,500,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that amendment is very considerable in amount, and if it carries it of course adds a half million dollars to this appropriation bill. I would not think of offering such an amendment if the service did not, in my judgment, absolutely and imperatively demand it. The income-tax law is a new piece of legislation. It was estimated that it would produce somewhere in the neighborhood of $70,000,000 per annum, an amount needed for the general expenses of the Government. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of that law the Commissioner of Internal Revenue informs me that the amount which has been placed at his disposal is utterly inadequate.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. WEST. Why was there such a variance between the amount desired by the department and the amount inserted in the House bill?

Mr. THOMAS. The House put the present amount in the bill and the Senate committee is inclined to accept it.

Mr. WEST. Without any sort of knowledge of what was required?

Mr. THOMAS. They had this information before them, but they deliberately cut down the amount—at least that is my information.

I merely wish to add, Mr. President, that I think this amendment is in the interest of sound economy. There are two sorts of economy—one which deals with the general subject without any systematic notion about it, and one which distinguishes between things that are absolutely necessary and things which are either useless or inexpedient at the particular time. For the purpose of getting the revenue which the income-tax law was designed and to secure the machinery which is to be used for that purpose, that which is being used now being insufficient, this amount of money is absolutely needed. That is all I care to say.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am satisfied that $1,500,000 is necessary for this purpose, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in en gross?

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is done I desire to offer an amendment. The bill is in the Senate, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I understood the question was on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment on page 132.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments agreed to as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought those amendments had been concurred in.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] intended to reserve the amendment on page 2, relating to the mileage of Senators. I want to reserve that amendment and to have a separate vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Iowa will be reserved.

Mr. KENYON. I also desire to reserve the amendment on page 80, with reference to the mileage of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates in Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I desire to offer an amendment, on page 132, line 20, by striking out of the committee amendment the words "without examination under the civil-service rules."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Utah if he has any objection to having the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole concurred in, with the exception of those amendments which have been reserved?

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendment to which I desire to offer an amendment is reserved, I have no objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment for the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I have no interest in the amendment myself. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of that Senator, who had to go away, and asked me to submit it for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a new amendment, which can be submitted after the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are concurred in. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except as to those reserved.

The amendments, except those reserved, were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, in the committee amendment already agreed to, on line 20, the Senator from Utah moves to strike out the words "without examination under the civil-service rules" and the comma.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the bill still in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate now. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. JAMES's name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair formerly announced to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire whether the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has voted.

Mr. FLETCHER. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 27—as follows:

YEAS—30.

Ashurst	Clapp	Nelson	Sterling
Borah	Cummins	Norris	Sutherland
Brady	Dillingham	Owen	Thomas
Brandegee	Jones	Page	Townsend

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the committee amendment on page 15, beginning at line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been concurred in.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which it was concurred in.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am afraid Senators may not understand that this is the item authorizing the purchase of an automobile for the Vice President. We have been over it twice, and I hope it will not be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment indicated by him was concurred in.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on page 2, which was passed over, will be next stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to strike out all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 and to insert:

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to this matter. I reserved this amendment, as he was absent from the Chamber, and I understood that he had a point of order which he desired to make against it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to make the point of order against the first amendment, that it is unauthorized by law and contrary to law. I base my point of order on the following facts:

The law authorizing mileage was passed during the Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, and reads as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives: And provided further, That the pay of the Speaker shall be $8,000 per annum.

That remained the law until February 26, 1907, when the compensation of Senators and Representatives was changed as follows:

Section 4 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, reads:

SEC. 4. That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President of the United States, and the heads of executive departments who are members of the President's Cabinet shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each.

SEC. 5. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Consequently the only compensation authorized by law to-day is the salary of $7,500.

Section 4 of the legislative appropriation bill of 1907, which I have read, makes no provision for mileage. It says that the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and so forth, shall be $7,500 per annum each, and repeals all laws and parts of laws in conflict therewith. It repeals the law enacted by the Thirty-ninth Congress, which authorizes mileage. It makes no provision for mileage or any additional compensation whatever. Consequently the provision here providing for mileage is contrary to law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the law is very plain:

The compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $7,500 per annum, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Following that the later law says:

Mileage for two sessions only, to be paid in the following manner, to wit: On the first day of each regular session each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for one session, and at the beginning of the second regular session of the Congress each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage for such second session.

And still later:

On the first day of the first session of each Congress, or as soon thereafter as he may be in attendance and apply, each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage as now allowed by law, and on the first day of the second or any subsequent session he shall receive his mileage as now allowed.

That is the standing law of to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was that law repealed by the act of Congress increasing the salaries to $7,500?

Mr. WARREN. It was not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the date of the law to which the Senator refers?

Mr. WARREN. I am reading from the law as it is quoted here in the Rules and Manual of the Senate. Those statements, of course, can be looked up by the Senator. I have here a list of 16 different statutes, one after the other, all in nearly the same line, and I have read the law as it now stands.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The authority for mileage cited in the laws to which the Senator refers was given in the act passed by the Thirty-ninth Congress.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The trouble with the position of the Senator from Texas is this: While the statute he recited repeals all laws relating to compensation and salary of Senators, yet the Court of Claims decided in a case that was cited here the other day that mileage is not a part of the compensation of Senators. I think it was the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] who called attention to the decision of the court in that case, holding that the matter of mileage is not a part of a Senator's salary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The court in that case held it was not the same form of compensation as salary, but it held nevertheless that it was a form of compensation. The act of 1907 in effect forbids any other compensation besides the salary. If there is to be any mileage paid, it must be authorized by a law yet to be enacted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this statute——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this is not a debatable proposition. It has been ruled on once in Committee of the Whole. The same point of order was made. I ask that the rule be enforced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was a like point of order made in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Exactly the same.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No, Mr. President; a point of order was not raised in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My recollection is that the point of order was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order ought to have been made in Committee of the Whole, and, owing to the failure to do so, it is not in order to make the point of order in the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make the point of order that the Senate is considering this amendment de novo. This is the first chance the Senate, as such, has had to consider the amendment. Heretofore the Senate as in Committee of the Whole has considered the amendment. The Committee of the Whole has reported the amendment to the Senate, and the Senate, as such, is now considering it for the first time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is mistaken about that. It was held by Mr. Ferry, President pro tempore of the Senate, that when a point of order was not made in Committee of the Whole it is too late to make it when the bill gets into the Senate. The Chair thinks that whatever rights might have attached to the point of order it was waived by failing to make it in Committee of the Whole, and it is now too late to entertain it. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order, and the question is on the reserved amendment.

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate concur in the amendment? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole is to strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, on page 2, and in lieu to insert:

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 32, noes 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Fletcher	Owen	Stephenson
Borah	James	Page	Sterling
Brady	Johnson	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Bristow	Kenyon	Robinson	Thomas
Bryan	Kern	Root	Thompson
Burleigh	La Follette	Saulsbury	Thornton
Burton	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Catron	McCumber	Sheppard	Townsend
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shively	Vardaman
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Warren
Clapp	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	West
Crawford	Norris	Smith, Ga.	White
Cummins	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Overman	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WEST. I did not understand the junior Senator from Texas in reference to the mileage clause. I wish to ask him if it is his view that the $2,500 that was added to the salary was to take the place of mileage?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is impossible for me to say what the intention was in reference to mileage, but the law which provided for a salary of $7,500 did not go further and provide for any additional compensation.

Mr. WEST. Have Senators and Representatives been receiving mileage since the law was passed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18 strike out lines 5 to 12, inclusive, and insert:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we have had such good luck in getting a yea-and-nay vote on this mileage proposition that I think we will try it once more at least. It would seem that this amendment ought to be disagreed to, and for this very simple reason: Regardless of the vote as to the question of mileage for Senators, this is a proposition for mileage of Members of the House, and they have provided a method which they deemed fair for the payment of the actual traveling expenses for Members of Congress and the immediate and dependent members of their families. The House having adopted that, it certainly would not be right or fair to compel them to take any more. The Senate would be going far beyond courtesy, it seems to me, to the other body after they have decided that the traveling expenses are all that should be properly paid them to insist that the appropriation be doubled. I hope that we at least may have a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition, and in order to have a full attendance I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Fletcher	Owen	Stephenson
Borah	James	Page	Sterling
Brady	Johnson	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Bristow	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Kern	Robinson	Thompson
Burleigh	La Follette	Root	Thornton
Burton	Lane	Saulsbury	Tillman
Catron	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Chamberlain	McCumber	Shively	Vardaman
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Warren
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	West
Crawford	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	White
Cummins	Norris	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Overman	Smoot

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state his point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. The amendment has already been agreed to in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not this amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course it has. All amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This was a reserved amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Was this a reserved amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a reserved amendment. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 18 strike out lines 5 to 12 and insert:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say just one word before the vote. I do not like the House provision and I do not like the Senate provision. I would be perfectly willing to vote for the actual expense of a Member and his wife coming once each session. Beyond that I would not be willing to go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I understand that he would vote as I am about to vote, and therefore I consider myself released from the pair. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. JAMES's name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and the transfer of that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). I desire to announce a pair with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] on this question.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). I announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on official business, and also that he is paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by public business. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Bankhead	Fletcher	Perkins	Smoot
Brady	Johnson	Pittman	Stephenson
Brandegee	Jones	Reed	Sterling
Bristow	Kern	Robinson	Sutherland
Bryan	McCumber	Root	Thomas
Burleigh	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Thornton

Chilton	Overman	Simmons	White
Clarke, Ark.	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Dillingham	Page	Smith, Md.

NAYS—17.

Borah	La Follette	Smith, Ga.	Townsend
Burton	Lane	Smith, Mich.	Vardaman
Clapp	Norris	Swanson
Cummins	Pomerene	Thompson
Kenyon	Sheppard	Tillman

NOT VOTING—36.

Ashurst	Gore	Lippitt	Ransdell
Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	Lodge	Sherman
Colt	Hitchcock	McLean	Shields
Crawford	Hollis	Myers	Smith, S. C.

du Pont	James	O'Gorman	Walsh
Fall	Lea, Tenn.	Oliver	Weeks
Gallinger	Lee, Md.	Penrose	Williams
Goff	Lewis	Poindexter	Works

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KERN. I offer an amendment to the amendment on page 132, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, line 20——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Indiana that that amendment has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. KERN. But it has just been amended a few minutes ago by striking out certain words in line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KERN. I move to amend that section in the Senate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator from Indiana will understand that the amendment as amended was concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Indiana, also, that I reserved the right while the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole to offer an amendment to that amendment in the Senate. Afterwards that amendment to the amendment was agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. KERN. There is only one way to reach it, then, and that is by a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I desire to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that he can reach the question by moving to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I did not vote on the prevailing side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, line 17, before the words "of class 4," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and to insert "eleven," so as to read:

Chief Division of Supplies, $2,100; clerks, 11 of class 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. My reason, Mr. President, for offering this amendment is that the department advises me that heretofore there has been one stenographer from the Bureau of Corporations detailed to the Secretary of Commerce to act as a confidential stenographer. They have eliminated one stenographer from the Bureau of Corporations, and that will necessitate the dropping of one from the Department of Commerce, which, as I am advised by the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary, is going to seriously embarrass the work of the department. For that reason I ask for this increase of one clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I raise the point of order against the amendment that it has never been estimated for by the department, and therefore is not in order. If everyone who desires it is permitted to have an additional employee put on the roll, we could never get through with the bill and could never have any systematic arrangement of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to state, in answer to the Senator from Colorado, as I have been informed, or perhaps have inferred from a statement which was made to me a little while ago, that while it is true that this clerk was not included as one of the employees of the Secretary himself, he was included in the estimates made for the Bureau of Corporations. The stenographer for some time has been in the employ of the Secretary himself, or at least has been performing duties under the direction of the Secretary. I hope that the Senator from Colorado will not insist upon his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order will have to be sustained if the Senator from Colorado insists upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I insist upon it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OWEN. For the purpose of submitting an amendment, I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in regard to the item with relation to commercial attachés, Department of Commerce, on page 132, beginning in line 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 132 was agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he voted for the amendment when it was offered?

Mr. OWEN. I voted with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, the Senator from Oklahoma has a perfect right to make the motion.

Mr. REED. I raise the question of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Pittman	Sutherland
Bankhead	James	Pomerene	Swanson
Borah	Johnson	Reed	Thomas
Brady	Jones	Root	Thompson
Brandegee	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Thornton
Bristow	Kern	Shafroth	Tillman
Bryan	La Follette	Sheppard	Townsend
Burleigh	Lee, Md.	Shively	Vardaman
Burton	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Warren
Catron	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	West
Chamberlain	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	White
Chilton	Norris	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Crawford	Owen	Smoot
Cummins	Page	Stephenson
Dillingham	Perkins	Sterling

Mr. THORNTON. I announce the absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on departmental business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee on page 132 as amended was concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and transferring that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], I vote "yea."

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). I announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I announce the transfer of my pair as on the last vote and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when the name of Mr. JAMES was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). Since voting I observe that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bankhead	Kern	Saulsbury	Swanson
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Thompson
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Thornton
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Tillman
Fletcher	Overman	Simmons	West
Gore	Pittman	Smith, Ariz.	White
James	Reed	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Johnson	Robinson	Smith, Md.

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	Clapp	Nelson	Sterling
Borah	Crawford	Norris	Sutherland
Brady	Cummins	Page	Thomas
Brandegee	Dillingham	Perkins	Townsend
Bristow	Jones	Root	Vardaman
Burleigh	Kenyon	Smith, Mich.	Warren
Burton	La Follette	Smoot
Catron	Lane	Stephenson

NOT VOTING—34.

Clark, Wyo.	Hitchcock	Myers	Sherman
Clarke, Ark.	Hollis	Newlands	Shields
Colt	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Oliver	Stone
du Pont	Lewis	Owen	Walsh
Fall	Lippitt	Penrose	Weeks
Gallinger	Lodge	Poindexter	Works
Goff	McCumber	Pomerene
Gronna	McLean	Ransdell

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, line 20, after the word "Commerce," it is proposed to insert "after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency," so that, if amended, it will read:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, etc.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] suggests, this is confession. It is confession and avoidance. It is confession that these officers ought to be selected upon examination, and it is confession with an attempt to avoid any real, genuine, effective examination.

Mr. President, we all know what a sham and a delusion the old department examinations were. It was because they were a mere pretense that the machinery of the Civil Service Bureau was created, that examinations by an independent body of public officers were substituted for department examinations.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not true that the consuls who are appointed now are appointed under rules and regulations prescribed by the Senator from New York when he was Secretary of State, rather than under civil-service rules?

Mr. ROOT. No, Mr. President; they are appointed under rules prescribed by the President, signed by the President, under the authority of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. What President?

Mr. ROOT. President Roosevelt; the same authority under which the civil-service rules are prescribed affecting all the other departments of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who prescribed these rules?

Mr. ROOT. The President of the United States prescribed these rules, just as he prescribes all civil-service rules.

Mr. OVERMAN. The point I am getting at is this: These persons do not stand what is known as the civil-service examination?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, they do stand what is known, or ought to be known, as the civil-service examination. It is an examination conducted by a board the head of which is the chief examiner of the civil service.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the Civil Service Commission has nothing in the world to do with the matter.

Mr. ROOT. The Civil Service Commission appoints the head of the board, the chief examiner under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator knows, I think, that he prescribed these rules and regulations himself and had President Taft indorse them, and it was under them that these men were appointed. This really is not the regular, ordinary civil-service examination. Is not that true?

Mr. ROOT. It is true that it is not the ordinary civil-service examination. It was President Roosevelt and not President Taft.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. But, Mr. President, those regulations brought into operation an examining board which is under the direction and control of the chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission, because it was found that the old department examination was absolutely useless; that the very kind of examination to which it is now proposed to subject these men was useless.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Secretary of State, together with the President, could frame rules and have these examinations held by order of the President under the chief examiner of the civil service, why should not the Secretary of Commerce do exactly like the Senator from New York did when he was Secretary of State—prescribe rules and have the President sign them and have the chief examiner hold examinations, just as they were held for the consulships? Is there any reason why that should not be done?

Mr. ROOT. It ought to be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under this amendment it could be done.

Mr. ROOT. Does the Senator think it is going to be done?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I think if this amendment passes it will be done under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, just as the Senator from New York when Secretary of State prescribed the rules under which the consuls were examined.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, a great many things might be done; but I will undertake to say that the Senator from North Carolina will not tell us that it is the intention or the expectation that the Secretary of Commerce will put these appointees under a civil-service examination to be conducted outside of the department.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not answer for the Secretary of Commerce any more than the Senator from New York can. If this amendment is agreed to, saying that he shall prescribe certain rules and regulations, I think probably he will prescribe rules precisely like the Senator from New York did when he was Secretary of State.

Mr. ROOT. I do not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not vouch for him, and the Senator can not. The Senator knows not what he will do.

Mr. ROOT. I do not know what he will do. I do know that this legislation is plainly designed to indicate the purpose of Congress that he shall not do that very thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator, who was once a distinguished Secretary of State, whether it was not the custom of the State Department in examining consuls, after they were through with the written examination, to have what was called a personal examination to determine about aptitude, and whether on the aptitude examination they did not add minus and plus marks to the ratings the men had received upon the written examination?

Mr. ROOT. Doubtless.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And whether that was not a very convenient way of raising one's mark and lowering another's?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not believe it was ever availed of as a way to raise or lower one's mark. I never have known any impeachment of the good faith of the boards which carried on those examinations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have seen in the hands of the Senator from Alabama, Mr. Johnston, who is now dead, and I will try to get it at some time, what purported to be an original, in which one man was marked—now, I am not accurate about the figures—say, 85 and another one marked 75 and another 65, and the 65 had a plus mark after it and the 85 had a minus mark after it, and the man with the rating of 65 was appointed consul, and the man with the rating of 85 was not.

Mr. ROOT. I do not know as to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, frequently the aptitude examination changed the result of the written examination.

Mr. ROOT. Frequently it ought to change the result of the written examination.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator one more question before he answers the other; and I ask it purely for information. By whom and how was the examination that I have called the aptitude examination conducted?

Mr. ROOT. By the same board.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it in writing, or was it orally?

Mr. ROOT. Orally, by the same board.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought. It was largely just a conversation with the applicant, was it not?

Mr. ROOT. That I can not tell the Senator.

I assume that the Senator from Mississippi would not expect a civil-service board appointed by a Democratic President under a Democratic administration, and the majority of whom are Democrats, to discriminate unfairly against the candidates who would be favored by the Commissioner of Commerce. The whole effect of the proposed amendment is to take these candidates away from an impartial board and put them under an examination which is nothing at all but the selection of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. President, the advantage of civil-service rules is not so much in the selection of individuals as it is in the exclusion of individuals.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROOT. I will ask the Senator to excuse me for just a moment.

It is not so much that a civil-service examination is a perfect method of finding out who is the best man for a place as it is that the necessity of a civil-service examination bars out from consideration a great army of idle, lazy, worthless fellows who want to live on the Treasury of the Government, and who depend upon political and personal and social interest to be appointed to places where they will render no valuable service, but will draw their salaries. It is the barring out of that great crowd of parasites who seek to live upon the substance of the country under guise of holding office that is the great benefit of the civil-service system. If this legislation passes in such a form as to take away the barrier and protection of the civil-service examination from the appointment of these men, that great army will march forward and take possession of these offices.

Mr. President, we in the Senate will not be able to resist the pressure; Senators will not be able to resist the pressure coming from their own States, from their own political and personal friends, to try to get this man and that man and another man appointed to one of these places, which will enable him to travel about Europe at the public expense. The Secretary of Commerce will not be able to resist the pressure brought to bear upon him by Senators and Representatives to appoint men whose appointment will be useful to the Senators and Representatives who pass upon the appropriations for the Department of Commerce and who make this appropriation. It is taking a step back into the most injurious and reprehensible methods of government under which Senators and Representatives bargain votes. I do not mean to say that they make a vulgar trade, out and out, but I mean to say they use the influence that their power to vote gives them in order to get appointments, and the heads of executive departments make appointments because they want the votes. You are going back to the old logrolling and bargaining methods which we ought every day more and more to exclude from the operations of our Government.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, it was desired by the Secretary, as I understand—at any rate it is desired by the proponents of this amendment—that the Secretary of Commerce shall be permitted to choose these commercial attachés with reference to their special fitness for this particular work, and that he should not be required to accept the services of a lot of miscellaneous gentlemen whose names are turned out of the sausage mill of the Civil Service Commission.

The same question came up in regard to the appointment of the members of the Federal Reserve Board and the employees of that board. We looked forward and saw that they would require the services of the best-skilled men in America for the particular work that was to be required of them, and when we were taunted from the other side with the proposition that we were opening up again the great field of the spoils system, we replied—and we have made our words good—that no senatorial influence would ever be exerted, none would be attempted, to control the appointment of members of the Federal Reserve Board or the appointments under that board.

It was very refreshing to some of us the other afternoon to listen to the indignant protests of Senators on the other side against this infringement upon the civil-service system. I imagine there is no one on this side who is not in favor of the merit system. I think we may be credited with a desire to have faithful and efficient appointees rendering service to the Government under this administration. We are not entirely destitute of the kind of patriotism that desires good service, but when we looked back at the net result of the civil-service law as administered by the Republican Party during 30 years, with the exception of two Democratic administrations, and noticed the fact that 90 per cent of all the officeholders of the country were not only Republicans, but Republican politicians, some of us doubted the sincerity of some of these earnest protestations against any infringement of the civil-service law.

Mr. President, under this civil-service law the spoils system ran mad during two or three administrations. In my own State, when Grover Cleveland went out of office the first time and when Theodore Roosevelt was a member of the Civil Service Commission, Democratic appointees under civil service were turned out of office by the score; they were turned out without trial, in utter disregard of every provision of the civil-service law, and I then heard no indignant expressions from the Senator from New York or the Senator from Massachusetts or any of the men now championing the cause of civil-service reform.

During the past five years it was known of all men that under the ordinary examinations held by the Civil Service Commission no Democrat could be appointed to office. Referring to the administration of the law in my State, I speak advisedly on that proposition. Under a partisan system, under a legalized spoils system, the civil-service officers would, on requisition being made, certify three names for appointment, and if there were two Democrats and one Republican out of the three, no matter what the grade, the Republican was appointed. There was only one way that a Democrat could get office under that administration of the civil-service law, and it was when it happened that all three of the names were Democrats. It was the only way.

During the administration of President Taft he found 30,000 fourth-class postmasters in office, nine-tenths of whom were appointed as a reward for political service. The postmaster in every town in the country practically was a Republican, and had been appointed as a reward for local political work. The greatest outrage ever perpetrated on the merit system was when President Taft issued an Executive order which said to these men: "We appointed you to these offices as a reward for a political service rendered the Republican Party, and now, as a still further reward for that political service, we undertake to give you the places for life."

The rural mail carriers were not under the civil service at first. They were appointed on the recommendation of Republican Congressmen. Four-fifths, five-sixths, aye, nine-tenths, were Republicans, and in my State local Republicans, ward workers, and township workers. They carried on their work for the Government with the additional labor imposed on them of circulating Republican literature along their routes and insulting Democrats who lived along the roads they traveled. They were appointed as a reward for political service. Mr. Taft issued an order making them life appointments, not because of merit, but as a still further reward for political service. When that outrage was being perpetrated upon the merit system the Senator from New York and the great civil reformers of the country were mute. I would have thought they would have protested then if they were friendly to the merit system, but they were as silent as the grave.

We propose in the case in hand to permit the Secretary of Commerce to make these appointments after an examination to determine the fitness of the men. My friend from New York says that we want a genuine examination. Does the Senator from New York mean to intimate that there is less patriotism, that there is less of desire for honest Government service, on the part of Secretary Redfield than there is on the part of the gentlemen who constitute the civil-service board? Does the Senator from New York believe that he would be less painstaking in selecting men for this delicate service than the men who constitute the Civil Service Commission or the inspectors or examiners that they might designate?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, under former administrations, notedly the Taft administration, diplomatic officials subordinate to ambassadors and ministers were appointed without taking the civil-service examination required for appointment to the departmental service. Secretaries to embassies and legations, as well as consuls, were given a special examination prescribed by the Secretary of State and promulgated by the President. This examination for these appointments was entirely outside of the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. This examination was controlled entirely by the State Department, both as to the subjects upon which the applicants were examined and as to the examiners themselves. The Secretary of State reserved and exercised the right to revise and alter the ratings given to persons by his examining board in all cases with respect to consular and secretarial appointments. As the Senator from Mississippi stated in his remarks a few moments ago, the Secretary of State or one of his subordinates designated for that purpose took the ratings given in each individual case by the examiners and then summoned before him the applicants in person to be examined individually, as occasion required, to determine as to the personal fitness or aptitude of the candidates for the position sought. He took the ratings given the candidates by the examiners in the first instance, and then added to or subtracted from those ratings according to the estimate he placed upon the personal qualifications or aptitude of the applicant.

The examiners may have given a particular candidate a rating, for example, of 85, and given another applicant a rating of 75. On the personal examination for aptitude the applicant having 85 on the original rating might be reduced 10 points, while the applicant having 75 on the first examination might be advanced 10 points, thus reversing the position of the two. That was the course pursued in the State Department while the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was at the head of that department. He approved of and followed that practice, if, in fact, he did not originate it. But now, when it is proposed to allow the Secretary of Commerce to do the same thing, or substantially the same thing, and in the same way, the Senator from New York rises here to make indignant protest, declaring that if the Secretary of Commerce, in appointing commercial attachés, is permitted to do what the Senator did as Secretary of State, we would be taking a step backward in the path of honest and efficient administration. With the Senator it seems to make a vast difference whether the Secretary is a Democrat or Republican. When he was exercising the power he now appears to dread it was all right, commendable, and in every way proper, but to allow a Democratic Secretary of a great department to follow in his footsteps and do what he did would amount to a covert assault on the civil-service law and be violative of the civil-service policy. Such an argument as that made by the Senator from New York, which has been repeated by others on that side, is deeply colored with hypocrisy, or at least is a vain assumption by Republicans of superior wisdom, virtue, and devotion to public duty and to the enforcement of the spirit of the law. I resent any assumption of that character. With all due respect to the Senator from New York, I assert that Secretary Redfield, of the Department of Commerce, is fully as capable, just as sincere, and just as devoted to public duty and the public welfare as the Senator from New York is now or was when he presided over the Department of State. Very cogent reasons have been given why the Secretary of Commerce should be permitted to select these attachés in the way provided for in the bill. The reason that justified the course pursued, as I have stated it, with respect to consuls, applies with equal force to the appointment of commercial attachés, who are an important part of the consular establishments. There is utterly no reason why the same rules should not govern in both cases. All this, however, has been gone over and thrashed out by the Senators who have just preceded me, and I will not go further into this particular subject.

But, apropos this subject, I wish at this juncture to refer to another matter of the same general nature.

A short time since a few people in Washington, led by a Mr. Gordon and Dr. Gleeson, began a furious attack on the Post Office Department, charging that department with dismissing and demoting old soldiers in violation of the law. Here I will say that Dr. Gleeson is the local commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of the District of Columbia, but he is also an intense and rather violent Republican partisan. These attacks were so pronounced, specific, and continuous, and were so widely exploited through the newspapers of Washington, every one of which is hostile to this administration, that a Republican Senator [Mr. JONES] introduced a resolution calling upon the Postmaster General to advise the Senate respecting the truth of the assertions that had been made in the press at the instigation of Dr. Gleeson and Mr. Gordon. The resolution called upon the Postmaster General to advise the Senate, among other things, as to the number of men dismissed or demoted in his department. The Postmaster General replied to the resolution and stated that during this administration only one man who had ever served in the Army of the United States in any war had been demoted, and that not a single one had been dismissed; and he said that the one demoted was a colored soldier who had had service in the War with Spain and who held a laborer's position in the department at a salary of $720 per annum. He was demoted to $600 per annum as a punishment for inebriety while on duty, but with the promise that if he would reform his habits in this behalf he would be restored to his former salary, and he was given two months of trial. At the end of two months the department restored him to $720 per year. Instead of there being a large number of dismissals and demotions of old soldiers, as Dr. Gleeson claimed, the Postmaster General stated, as I have said, that there had been only one demotion and no dismissals in the Post Office Department since he had been in charge of that department.

When this report of the Postmaster General was laid before the Senate there was considerable discussion about it. I took part in that discussion and stated what I have repeated today—that only one soldier had been demoted and none dismissed in the department—and called Dr. Gleeson and Mr. Gordon to sharp account for their effort to mislead the public at large, and especially to mislead the old soldiers of the country. Dr. Gleeson undertook to answer my speech through the Washington Times. I can have no controversy with the valiant doctor, but I am going now to show that he has been imposed upon or else has deliberately made misstatements of facts. It is all right for Dr. Gleeson in his official capacity as commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in this District to look after the welfare and seek to preserve the just and lawful rights of all soldiers residing in this city. Anything he might do in that behalf, if done in a fair, proper, and nonpartisan way, would merit and receive my hearty commendation. In his first attack on the Post Office Department he confines himself to a discussion of what he denominated "bad treatment of old soldiers," but when he was cornered on his statement of facts, with respect to that assault, he veered away from the old soldier in this last effusion printed in the Washington Times and has indicted the department for mistreatment of employees who never served in the Army. In this effusion he makes a general assault all along the line.

In the Times he gives the names of 12 persons whom he declares have been ruthlessly dismissed or transferred or demoted. I will read what he said of these 12 people presently. I clipped his statement from the Times and sent it to the Postmaster General, requesting him to have the records of the department examined with respect to each case mentioned by Dr. Gleeson and to advise me as to the facts. Now, I am going to take up these cases separately, and in each case I will quote Dr. Gleeson's assertion and then quote what the Postmaster General says the records of the department show.

(1) The first case is that of Joseph Burroughs. Here is what Dr. Gleeson said of him:

Joseph Burroughs, New Jersey Volunteers, wounded. Died of a broken heart over his humiliation.

This is what the Postmaster General says in this letter I hold in my hand:

Joseph Burroughs: Alleged that he died of a broken heart over his humiliation. The records show that on October 1, 1910, Mr. Burroughs was reduced from $1,800 to $1,400 per annum; again reduced on March 16, 1911, from $1,400 to $1,200 per annum during the last administration; and on July 1, 1913, reduced from $1,200 to $1,000 per annum. After notice was given him of the reorganization of his division, arrangements were made to retain him in the department and he was cognizant of this fact. He died, after an illness of three days, over two months after he was informed that he would be retained in the department. He was not reduced in salary after July 1, 1913. It will be seen that the previous administration reduced Mr. Burroughs twice; at one time skipping a grade.

It will be observed that under the last administration Mr. Burroughs was twice reduced, once from $1,800 to $1,400 per annum and then from $1,400 to $1,200 per annum. Since this administration began he has been reduced from $1,200 to $1,000 per annum. It appears to have been all right in Dr. Gleeson's estimation for this soldier to be reduced by a Republican Postmaster General; at least he made no outcry about it; but if a Democratic Postmaster General, even conditionally, reduces his rank and salary it becomes a heinous offense.

(2) The next case mentioned by Dr. Gleeson is that of Annie M. Eckbert. Here is what the doctor says about this lady:

Annie M. Eckbert, of Pennsylvania, threw herself in front of a railway train over her humiliation.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator who is this Dr. Gleeson?

Mr. STONE. He resides in the city of Washington.

Mr. WARREN. Is he connected with some of the departments?

Mr. STONE. No. He is commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of the District of Columbia at this time. That is all I know of him, and I know that only by reason of what I have read in the newspapers.

It will be observed that Dr. Gleeson champions Miss Eckbert, who was never, so far as we are informed, in any wise connected with any war. He says that she committed suicide over her humiliation. He does not give any facts, but leaves the reader to make his own inferences.

Here is what the Postmaster General says in this letter:

Miss Annie M. Eckbert: Miss Eckbert was reduced from $1,400 to $1,200 per annum on March 16, 1911, during the last administration, on account of not being able to perform duties which would warrant a salary of $1,400. Endeavor had been made to place her on work which she was capable of performing. At the time she was accidentally killed while visiting her brother in Pennsylvania, on December 12, 1913, her transfer was pending to the Reading, Pa., post office, which she had selected, and which was to be without reduction in salary. Miss Eckbert had been in poor health for many years, as is instanced by the fact that since 1898, in addition to her annual leave, she had taken 493 days of sick leave, or an average of 33 days each year. In reporting Miss Eckbert's death to the department, her brother stated that she had been spending some time at his home recuperating, and that she had wandered from the house and was hit by a passing train.

If the doctor is not ashamed of this performance, he ought, at least for his own reputation, to be more careful with his assertions.

(3) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson as follows:

Beverly Randolph De Keim, of Pennsylvania: War correspondent from 1861 to 1865, inclusive, transferred to Reading, Pa., where he died.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Randolph De B. Keim: Mr. Keim was transferred from the War Department to the Post Office Department August 3, 1909, during the last administration, at which time he accepted a reduction in salary from $1,600 to $900 per annum. He was transferred on October 24, 1913, to the post office at Reading, Pa., his home city, at the same salary he was receiving in the department. Mr. Keim was 73 years old, and it is inconceivable that transferring a man to his home city would cause his death, especially as he had previously been reduced in salary from $1,600 to $900.

According to Dr. Gleeson it seemed to have been all right for a Republican Postmaster General to reduce this employee from $1,600 to $900, but it was odious for this Democratic Postmaster General to transfer him to his home city post office at the same salary he was receiving in the department. Shame on you, Dr. Gleeson.

(4) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson as follows:

Mr. Stalley, transferred to Cleveland, Ohio, on the day he was to celebrate his golden wedding anniversary.

That was an awful thing to do, and I could not help but shudder when I read this pathetic story, as reported by Dr. Gleeson.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Charles B. P. Stalley: Mr. Stalley was transferred to the Cleveland (Ohio) post office on May 1, 1914, at the same salary he was receiving in the department. The work on which he had been assigned had been eliminated and there is no other position which he could satisfactorily fill. He selected Cleveland, stating that his only child was married and living in that city.

(5) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson as follows:

Mrs. L. A. Overacker, Union soldier's widow. Transferred.

And here is what the Postmaster General says:

Mrs. L. A. Overacker: Mrs. Overacker was offered a position in any first-class post office at the same salary which she received in the department, but she preferred to stay in Washington, as her son is a $1,600 clerk in the Post Office Department. She therefore tendered her resignation on November 15, 1913, and was not transferred to any post office.

I repeat that the doctor should be more careful with his facts.

(6) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson as follows:

Mr. Wyckoff, transferred to post office in western city.

That certainly was a heartless crime, to transfer this man to a post office in a "western city." But the doctor is again mistaken as to his facts. Mr. Wyckoff has not been sent to a penal colony in the West. Here is what the Postmaster General says:

James S. Wyckoff: Mr. Wyckoff was not transferred to a post office in a western city, but secured a transfer to the Pension Office in this city, where he is now employed.

(7) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson in this way:

Dug Allison, veteran baseball player of the Red Stockings, of Cincinnati, did not leave the city and was dropped.

So it seems this medical philanthropist is not only looking after the veterans of the war, but also the veterans of the diamond, ex-champions of the noble game of baseball. But again the doctor is badly off on his facts. Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Douglas L. Allison: It is stated that Mr. Allison has been dropped. This is not a fact, as he is now employed in the same bureau and is receiving the salary to which he was promoted on December 1, 1905.

Shame on you, Doctor.

(8) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson, as follows:

Samuel R. Stratton, of Pennsylvania, formerly adjutant of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, transferred to Washington City post office, then asked to resign. Now is out of the service.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Samuel R. Stratton: On account of Mr. Stratton's not being able to perform work which would warrant a salary of $1,400 per annum, he was reduced on March 11, 1911, during the last administration, to $1,200 per annum, and on October 8, 1913, transferred to the Washington, D. C., post office without change in salary. He is now serving in the post office, although his resignation is on file to take effect at a future date. It is contemplated upon his resignation becoming effective to abolish the position he now holds.

(9) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson, as follows:

Mrs. Shearer died three weeks after notice to hunt another place. Had seven brothers killed in the Union Army.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Miss Lizzie A. Sheads (Shearer): It is claimed that she died three weeks after notice to hunt another place. Miss Sheads was not reduced nor transferred, but, in accordance with a long-standing order of the department, she was dropped without prejudice on January 31, 1914, after a protracted illness. Miss Sheads was practically an invalid for years, and her services were of little or no value to the department. On account of her physical condition, about which other employees located near her became concerned, fearing that they might contract a similar disease, she was examined months prior to the reorganization by the Director of the Hygienic Laboratory, who reported that she was suffering from chronic bronchitis attended by emphysema.

(10) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson in this way:

Elizabeth Donehoo, of Pennsylvania, soldier's widow; could not comply with transfer orders; was dropped.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Donehoo: It is stated that Mrs. Donehoo could not comply with the transfer order and was consequently dropped. She was not dropped from the rolls, but was transferred, without change in salary, on May 1, 1914, to the Pittsburgh, Pa., post office, in which city she had many friends. Mrs. Donehoo was reduced on March 16, 1911, during the last administration, from $1,000 to $900 per annum.

You should be more careful, Doctor.

(11) The next case is stated by Dr. Gleeson in this way:

Mrs. Armor, of Pennsylvania; husband killed in the Union Army; transferred to Florida among strangers.

Here is what the Postmaster General says:

Mrs. M. M. Armor: Mrs. Armor was transferred to the Kissimmee, Fla., post office on December 8, 1913. She was informed that she could be transferred to any first-class post office she might select at $1,000, the same salary which she received in the department, but she preferred to go to Kissimmee on acount of the climate, and it is understood that her sister is now with her, and that she is very well pleased with the assignment. On account of the size of the Kissimmee post office, it was impossible to give her the same salary as she got in the department, and her salary was therefore fixed at $800.

(12) The next and last case mentioned by Dr. Gleeson is described by him in this way:

But perhaps the most flagrant case was that of James R. Young, gallant soldier, former Member of Congress from Philadelphia, whose position as Chief of the Dead Letter Office was taken from him and given to a Texas man.

It seems to grind the doctor to the quick that Mr. Young should be supplanted by a man from Texas; but here is what the Posmaster General says:

James R. Young: Commander Gleeson states that this, perhaps, is the most flagrant case. It also appears to be one of the most flagrant cases from the departmental standpoint. Mr. Young was a retired politician, an ex-Member of Congress from Pennsylvania. He admitted that he was not competent to perform the duties of superintendent, Division of Dead Letters, and was glad to get a transfer to his home town, Philadelphia, Pa. The records show that after considerable political influence by Members of Congress from Pennsylvania the President was prevailed upon to issue an Executive order authorizing the appointment of Mr. Young as Superintendent of the Division of Dead Letters without examination under the civil-service rules. He had had no previous experience in the Postal Service, and the appointment was merely for political reasons; and through this same influence the salary of the office, while he served as superintendent, was increased from $2,500 to $2,750 per annum. Mr. Young, in his sixty-seventh year, was transferred to his home city at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and is very well satisfied with the comfortable circumstances under which he has been located.

Thus, Mr. President, I put the plain facts in these cases in contrast with the wild, misleading statements given to the public through a widely circulated newspaper by Dr. Gleeson. It is hardly worth while for me to make further comment. I have no wish or intention of entering into any controversy with Dr. Gleeson or Mr. Gordon. I simply wish the truth to be known. If the Washington newspapers would print the answers made by the department to these vicious attacks circulated through their columns, those who malign the department would not be so keen about getting into the public press.

At this point I call attention to the fact that when this question was up some days ago I called attention to the fact that numerous old soldiers had been demoted or separated from the Post Office Department during the incumbency of Mr. Hitchcock as President Taft's Postmaster General. I showed that 15 old soldiers had been demoted in one year in that department, and said then, as I say now, that we heard no outcry against the action of this Republican Postmaster General from any source—not even from the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who was one of the official family of President Taft, sitting with Mr. Hitchcock around the same counsel board. And on Saturday last the Senator from Mississippi put into the RECORD the names of 121 old Federal soldiers who had been demoted or dismissed in the first 15 months of Mr. McKinley's first administration in the Pension Office alone, and nothing was said about it at that time. Here is a fine exhibition and a most enlightening illustration of partisanship—the kind of partisanship that is being displayed in the Senate and in this city by Republican orators and partisans. If gentlemen can not find facts upon which to predicate their attacks upon this administration, then they invent facts, or so-called facts, and make these inventions the basis of their misrepresentations.

Things of this kind are indeed well calculated to make honest and self-respecting men who believe in decent methods of waging political warfare exceedingly tired. All this talk we have heard to-day and heard a few days ago from Senators on that side is the purest partisan rot; but, Mr. President, I hope that in spite of it those of us who constitute the Democratic majority of this body will go right on discharging our duty as we see it, with supreme indifference for and contempt of these utterances, no matter from what source they emanate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the amendment of the committee on page 132 as amended.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Overman	Stone
Brady	James	Page	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson	Perkins	Swanson
Bristow	Jones	Pittman	Thomas
Bryan	Kenyon	Shafroth	Thompson
Burleigh	Kern	Sheppard	Thornton
Burton	La Follette	Shively	Tillman
Catron	Lane	Simmons	Townsend
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Chilton	Lewis	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Clapp	McCumber	Smith, Md.	West
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.	White
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smoot	Williams
Dillingham	Nelson	Stephenson
Fletcher	Norris	Sterling

Mr. THORNTON. I announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN,] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the amendment offered by the committee, on page 132 of the bill, as amended on motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. CUMMINS. In that connection I desire to state my recollection of what has taken place. The Senate adopted a motion to strike out the words in line 20, page 132, "without examination under the civil-service rules." On motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] the Senate reconsidered the vote by which those words were stricken out. It seems to me, therefore, that the question now is upon the original motion to strike them out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no motion now, the Chair will state, to strike out those words; they have already been stricken out. The question reconsidered was the vote by which the amendment of the committee as amended was concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. That is, the whole paragraph was reconsidered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole paragraph as amended.

Mr. BURTON. With the line stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BURTON. And the Senator from Indiana has moved to insert the amendment which has been read. That is the situation, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the status of the matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that the question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have one word to say upon that motion. I do not look upon it as a political question; no one ought to consider it as a political question; and what I have to say is not said from that standpoint.

The distinguishing characteristic of the civil-service system, as we use the words, is that the employees are admitted to the service of the United States upon competitive examination, and that the person who in that competitive examination seems to be best qualified for the office or place receives it without any regard to political influence or personal influence in his behalf. The very moment we depart from the competitive idea we have overriden what we understand to be the merit system of appointment.

I agree that in many cases a judicious man can select an employee who will render quite as good service as though he had been selected after competitive examination; I think that here and there will be found instances in which better men, more completely qualified, may be selected through the individual examination or choice of the appointing power, but in the great majority of instances, I believe, our experience has shown that the employees of a great Government like ours will be more competent, more faithful, and more efficient if they are selected under the competitive system.

The amendment of the Senator from Indiana overthrows the competitive plan and leaves the subject with the Secretary of Commerce wholly unrestricted and unfettered. I do not think it adds anything to the bill. It must be assumed that in some fashion or other the Secretary of Commerce will ascertain the qualifications of the man he is about to appoint; and when you say that he must be subject to an examination by the Secretary of Commerce you say nothing whatever. There is no added security for the public.

As for me, I favor the competitive system. I believe this instance, as well as many that have occurred before, are distinct inroads upon the civil-service system. I think they are intended to be inroads upon the civil-service system. There is no other explanation for this continuous effort to exempt employees of the Government from the operation of that system. I am very sorry to see it.

I have no reason to doubt that those who propose it feel that the Government will be equipped with competent employees. I do not allege that they believe otherwise; but I think they ought to stand up and admit that they are overthrowing the competitive system just as rapidly as they can overthrow it, and that they intend to substitute for it a system which will subject the appointing power to all the pernicious influences that formerly surrounded the appointing power, and from which it was hoped we had escaped.

The Secretary of Commerce, when he comes to make these appointments, must, of course, listen to the wishes of the friends of the applicant. He can not be insensible to the political influences with which an applicant may come into his presence. I assume that he will not appoint an incompetent person. That would be to impeach his honesty and to impeach his desire to make the public service what it ought to be. That is neither here nor there. I may admit all those things; but I simply wish to register my opinion that you are doing a very unwise thing when you are invading the competitive system of examination and the competitive admission of applicants to the Government service, and I believe in the end you will discover that mistake and will regret what you are now about to do.

Look at it. If these men who are about to be appointed were appointed under the competitive system, a system that would give them a certain tenure of office—that is, would insure them the places to which they are appointed until some reason is shown for their removal—then, upon another administration coming in, they would go on and perform their duties in the regular way. On the other hand, you are preparing a system in which, when a Republican President comes in in 1917—as many of us believe a Republican President will come in—you will be inviting him and the Secretary of Commerce he may select to discharge every one of these men, to turn them out in a body, and to bring in for the same work another body of men untrained and inexperienced in the labors they are called upon to perform.

Unless you are against the competitive system, I can not understand why you do not desire that these men, when so appointed, shall be secure in the places to which they go. Why is it that we are returning to the old plan, under which, as soon as a change occurred in the political views of the administration, all these employees would at once share the fate of the retiring President, and the new President would bring in another corps of assistants?

I am opposed to that. I am opposed to it, no matter whether a Republican administration is in power or a Democratic administration is in power; and I rose simply to point out what I regarded as the total failure of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to fulfill the standard of a civil-service system.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KERN. When the last Republican administration came in and, as shown here by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day, in violation of the civil-service rules, demoted and threw out of office Union soldiers by the score, was there any protest on the part of the Senator from Iowa, who at that time, I believe, was a Member of the lower House? Did he hear any protest from Republicans anywhere? When Mr. Taft in the last administration appointed 30,000 fourth-class postmasters, Republican politicians, for life as a further reward for political service, in violation of the underlying principle of the merit system, was there any protest over there?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. KERN. Just one word further. Was there any Republican protest in 1906 when the Taft administration found every consulate in the countries abroad filled with Republican politicians, and no other kind from Indiana, at least, and commenced a civil-service program, then leaving every one of these politicians in office without regard to merit?

Why, in my State the deputy clerk of a court was appointed to a consulate in Europe because he was a political ward worker, and he was put under the civil service, and he is there to-day. Another second or third rate lawyer was given a similar position because he was a Republican ward worker, put under civil service, without regard to merit, and he is there yet. Was there any protest then? Oh, the hypocrisy of it all!

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; it is not hypocrisy so far as I am concerned, anyhow, and I do not think the Senator from Indiana will care to charge that upon me personally.

Mr. KERN. Oh, no; there was nothing personal, any more than the Senator meant to question my motives in introducing the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not question——

Mr. KERN. He did not hesitate to do that. He said my purpose was to strike down the civil-service law. I explicitly explained this morning, in the Senator's absence, why this amendment was offered here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not question the motives of the Senator from Indiana. I assumed that he intended to do exactly what he has done—to substitute in the Department of Commerce a department noncompetitive examination for a competitive civil-service examination. I have no doubt he has done that because he believes that in that way the Government will secure the best service. It is idle for anyone to insist that this method of selecting employees is in harmony with the civil-service system. It is not, for it is neither competitive nor does it furnish the employee with a secure tenure of office.

I do not know what President Taft did about turning out employees who were under the civil service. If he violated the law, his act was just as reprehensible as it would have been had he been a man of different political faith. There is a great distinction, however, between overturning the system and denouncing the imperfect administration of the system. If the Civil Service Commission and if the heads of departments under a former administration violated the law, they ought to be brought to justice; or if the law is inadequate, and on account of its inadequacy it is easily evaded, the law ought to be amended. There is no more justification for departing from the principle of the law than it would be to repeal the antitrust law because many people evade its provisions and many courts fail to administer its provisions with proper efficiency.

We shall have to take a stand, however, upon one thing. Are we in favor of admitting the employees in the departments at Washington, anyhow, through a competitive examination, or are we in favor of admitting them upon such examinations as the heads of the departments may require, without any competition or without any restriction save the judgment of the head of the department or the appointing power?

I am sorry to see the Government leaning away from the competitive plan. I do not believe in the present plan of selecting consuls of the United States to represent us abroad. Some people may think that is a fair exemplification of the civil-service principle. I do not. It was just as bad under a Republican administration as I suppose it is now under a Democratic administration. It is true that there exists there a board for the purpose of examining applicants, but there is no requirement, either in law or in any executive order, that the applicant who stands best under the examination shall have the place.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KERN. Does the Senator understand that that is the law governing the civil service?

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand the law governing the civil service admits only under competitive examination.

Mr. KERN. Yes; and then a certain number of names are certified to the head of the department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just so; three men.

Mr. KERN. Three men.

Mr. CUMMINS. The three men or women who stand highest on the list are certified, and the department must take one of the three or reject them all.

Mr. KERN. And does not the Senator know that that provision was made and was so enforced as to prevent any Democrat, under the Taft administration, from getting office anywhere?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not. I do not know that. It has been asserted many times, but my observation is just to the contrary. I never have seen any proof that the men at the heads of the departments violated their duties or neglected their duties or repudiated their obligations by rejecting the applicants who may have been Democrats. My judgment is that in 9 cases out of 10 the head of the department did not know whether the three men or women certified were Republicans or Democrats, and in more than half the cases the applicants had no identification or affiliation with any political party.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I simply wanted to suggest in reference to the query propounded by the Senator from Indiana that if the law or the rule that provides for the certification of three names was made for the purpose of permitting men or women of any particular political faith to be appointed, if that is the object of it, then it seems to me that if the Senator from Indiana is a friend of the civil service he ought to direct his labors toward the amendment of the law and the correction of that or any other abuse that may exist.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Indiana is a friend of the merit system; the Senator from Indiana is opposed to the administration of the civil-service laws as they have been administered during the past 20 years; the Senator from Indiana intends at the next session of Congress to offer amendments to the civil-service law radically changing it and changing its administration so that men of the highest character and ability may be at the head of it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to hear it. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. Changing the personnel and changing the rules, so that there may be absolute fairness in their administration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall render the Senator from Indiana all the help in my power. It is not great, but he shall have it in unmeasured quantity——

Mr. NORRIS. "Ungrudgingly."

Mr. CUMMINS. Ungrudgingly, for any amendment of the civil-service law that will make the admission of employees impartial, without any respect to their political affiliations, without any regard to personal influences; but why does he seek to take these people from the operation of a law he intends to make perfect in the way he has suggested?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I say again that if the Senator had been in his seat this morning he would have heard the reasons stated with such clearness as I was able to state them.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know just how great the temptation is, I suppose, to either a Republican President or a Democratic President, or a Republican Secretary or a Democratic Secretary. It may be that a Republican President or Secretary has yielded to that temptation in some cases. I do not know of any, but it may be that he has. The Democratic administration, however, has come in upon the assertion of infidelity on the part of the Republican administrations—I suppose this infidelity among other transgressions or failures to do their full duty. Why does not the Senator from Indiana at least set up a standard that must be observed by any administration which succeeds the one of which he is so great an ornament and so distinguished a part? Why does he not help to amend the law so that whoever comes in hereafter must obey the law, and we will have a civil service selected in the approved way of civilized government?

We are here retracing the steps we have heretofore taken. We are doing something that is not done by any other government of any repute in all the world. There is no government that stands well in the opinion of mankind that does not adhere to the civil-service system as I have outlined it. We are taking every opportunity here to march back into the regions of political influence and personal influence. We are doing, as it seems to me, the best we can to give dignity and respectability to the spoils system—an effort which you will find to be unsuccessful; an effort that can do nothing else than bring down upon it the condemnation of all thinking, patriotic men.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it occurs to me that the question presented by this amendment is not so much a political question as one of a business matter.

I have listened with a good deal of interest to the Senators on both sides of the Chamber in their discussion of the questions as to the disposition of the respective political parties to adhere to or depart from the civil-service rules, but it seems to me the question presented by this amendment is not really involved in those matters. These officers are to be appointed for a specific purpose, their duties being to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States.

What class of men or appointees will best discharge these duties? It seems to me that they might stand civil-service examinations in the way such examinations are usually conducted, but still be wholly unfit for this service.

These appointees are not mere clerks, are not engaged in mere detail work, but they are the representatives of the Government, having in charge, each one, as it were, a department to himself, in which judgment, discretion, energy, and information pertaining to the specific duties assigned to him are more essential than the mere knowledge that is necessary to enable him to stand a civil-service examination.

As I understand, these men are to look into the wants of foreign countries and ascertain where the products of this country can find a market. To do that they must know, first, what the products of this country are. They must know what we have that is wanted in foreign markets, and then be able to determine where a market in foreign countries can be found in which to dispose of these products.

It requires a general knowledge of business conditions, as well as a knowledge of the products with which we propose to invade foreign countries. Therefore each of these appointees must first determine what we have to dispose of. If he is to find a market for our products generally, he must have a general knowledge of our productions; or, if he is to be confined to pushing a particular product, he ought to have knowledge of that product, and he ought to have knowledge of the conditions under which it is made and the conditions under which it can be best disposed of.

Take, for instance, the invasion of foreign countries with iron and its products. What would a mere knowledge such as a clerk possesses be worth? He would first have to know what were the products of iron in this country and what they are suited for. He would have to know in addition to that when he went abroad what these products were useful for, in order that he might present them in an intelligent and attractive way in the markets of the country where they are offered. The same thing can be said of the products of our cotton factories, and, in fact, of any products that we have for export. Who could best determine whether a man was suitable for this work? Men who will pass upon his qualifications under civil-service rules, men who know nothing of the man except what they have learned from a civil-service examination, or a man who has had personal contact with them and learned something of their business capacity and personal bearing?

In order to accomplish the objects contemplated by this law a man must possess not only the ordinary knowledge pertaining to the business that he is engaged in but he must be a man of address. He must be able to approach other men; he must be able to interest other men; he must possess the capacity to engage the attention of other men and interest them in his enterprise.

Is it not fair to presume that the Secretary of Commerce, who will meet these men personally and meet the men behind them, the men who have had them in their employment, those who have taught them for years their trades, would be better able to determine who would interest foreigners in the purchase of our products than the men who could simply pass a civil-service examination.

As I said in the beginning, each one of these men practically has within himself a department. He must have a general knowledge as well as a particular knowledge of the subject which he proposes to present. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it would be very much better for us to select men with a knowledge of the business they are to engage in, men who are peculiarly fitted for the business to be transacted, than to select men who could merely stand a civil-service examination.

There are a great many lawyers in this Senate. How many of them could compare favorably in an examination for admission to the bar with some young man fresh from college; and yet who would hesitate for a moment about whether he would select a lawyer who is experienced in the practice and who would not be able to stand an examination as well as a young man fresh from college?

The same thing could be said of physicians, and the same thing can be said of men who are to push the commerce of this country. Men who have succeeded in commercial enterprises have not succeeded by selecting men who simply had knowledge of the English language, but they have selected men who had the energy, the disposition, and the address to push the business that was intrusted to their hands.

So it seems to me this is not so much a question as to whether we are in favor of enforcing the civil-service rules as it is a question as to whether we are in favor of accomplishing the objects of this legislation, namely, to find a market for our products abroad.

I take it for granted that either political party in power will, as far as it can consistently do so, advance the interest of its own political associates. I suppose that the offense of violating civil-service rules might be laid at the feet of both parties. The distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] says that this amendment is a plea of confession and avoidance, and that it confesses, but does not set up matter in avoidance. I take issue with him. I think that, while it does confess, it also completely avoids the matter confessed, because it puts in the place of a civil-service examination conducted under the civil-service rules, which the Senator advocates, the selection of men in a businesslike manner that will best accomplish the purposes for which this legislation is intended.

I think I can say with some propriety that, while the amendment might be characterized as a plea of confession and of avoidance, there is another doctrine well known to lawyers that might be suggested to him and to the Senators on the other side and that is the doctrine of estoppel, as they might by their past conduct now be estopped, in taking the position which they are now insisting upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Overman	Sutherland
Borah	James	Page	Swanson
Brady	Johnson	Perkins	Thomas
Brandegee	Jones	Pittman	Thompson
Bristow	Kern	Root	Thornton
Bryan	La Follette	Saulsbury	Tillman
Burleigh	Lane	Sheppard	Townsend
Burton	Lee, Md.	Shively	Warren
Catron	Lewis	Simmons	West
Chamberlain	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	White
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Stephenson
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Sterling
Dillingham	Norris	Stone

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the amendment on page 132.

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STONE. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absense I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

At this time I also announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WALSH] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. Both Senators are absent, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is unavoidably detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bankhead	Kern	Shafroth	Thompson
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lewis	Shively	Tillman
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Simmons	West
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	White
Fletcher	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gore	Pittman	Smith, Md.
James	Pomerene	Stone
Johnson	Reed	Swanson

NAYS—30.

Borah	Crawford	McCumber	Stephenson
Brady	Cummins	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Dillingham	Norris	Sutherland
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Thomas
Burleigh	Jones	Perkins	Townsend
Burton	Kenyon	Root	Warren
Catron	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Clapp	Lane	Smoot

NOT VOTING—32.

Ashurst	Gronna	Newlands	Saulsbury
Clark, Wyo.	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Sherman
Colt	Hollis	Oliver	Shields
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Owen	Smith, S. C.
du Pont	Lippitt	Penrose	Vardaman
Fall	Lodge	Poindexter	Walsh
Gallinger	McLean	Ransdell	Weeks
Goff	Myers	Robinson	Works

So Mr. KERN'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 18, insert:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to prepare such indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use pursuant to the act approved June 30, 1906. $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15762, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, there has been a notice standing on the calendar for weeks, given by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], proposing to move to take up Senate bill 392. The Senator from Iowa is temporarily out of the Chamber, and I want to make that motion now. It would not necessarily delay the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not understand that the Senator from Kansas has the floor for that purpose. There was no objection made. Let us take up the appropriation bill and go on with it.

Mr. BRISTOW. All I want is to have Senate bill 392 made the unfinished business. Then it can be laid aside and the appropriation bill can be taken up.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the appropriation bill is taken up, I think it will be concluded in an hour, and then the Senator can move to take up the bill he has indicated. The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill is a short bill, and it will not take over an hour; probably not that long.

After the appropriation bill has been disposed of the Senator from Kansas can make his motion, and it will then be the unfinished business, if he gets up the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the motion now, and then we can lay the bill aside.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would take a two-thirds majority to make it a special order.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; it does not take a two-thirds majority. We can take up any bill we desire by a majority vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not propose to yield that the Senator may move to take up the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state, if the Senator from Kansas will permit, that the Senator from North Carolina asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill, and the request was submitted to the Senate and unanimous consent was given.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the Chair's pardon; I was on my feet before the announcement and sought recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator states that he was on his feet, the Chair, of course, will hold that it is open.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not my purpose to delay the appropriation bill, but to have Senate bill 392, which relates to the retirement of volunteer officers of the Union Army, made the unfinished business. It has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, it is now on the calendar, and it has been before the Senate time and again.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a question of order. The Senator can not make the motion while the appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the bill is not before the Senate. The question is what bill shall be laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the appropriation bill and the Senator from Kansas states that he was on his feet to make objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object and move——

Mr. OVERMAN. I have the floor. I have not yielded the floor. I understand unanimous consent was given for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent the Chair thought was given.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15762—the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair rule that when I rose and made the objection and then had the floor that I can not move to take up Senate bill 392?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from North Carolina, who asked for unanimous consent. The Senator from Kansas, in the meantime, takes the floor and makes an objection and proceeds to make a motion. The Chair holds that the Senator from North Carolina has the floor. He asks for unanimous consent. The Senator from Kansas objects and——

Mr. BRISTOW. Then I move to substitute for the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate take up Senate bill 392 for immediate consideration.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. It has been ruled by the Vice President that such a motion as that made by the Senator from Kansas is out of order. In addition to that, under the rules of the Senate, a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill has precedence over a motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I submit that the Senator's motion has no precedence whatever. A majority vote of the Senate determines what business shall be laid before it. The Vice President has ruled that a motion to substitute one bill for another is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule IX. It reads as follows:

And in such case—

That is, when the calendar is before the Senate—

the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which if carried shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the calendar.

Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate and shall have precedence in the order above named.

The rule gives to an appropriation bill the preference, and when two motions are made, one being to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill and the other to consider an ordinary bill on the calendar such as the motion of the Senator from Kansas, the motion must be first put whether the Senate will consider the appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I never heard it denied before that a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill has precedence over every other motion to consider a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule IX, which provides that a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill shall have precedence over other motions save as against a motion to adjourn or to proceed to the consideration of executive business or a question of privilege, the Chair holds that the motion of the Senator from North Carolina takes precedence of the motion made by the Senator from Kansas, and that the Senator from Kansas can not move as a substitute to take up some other bill which is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire if this——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that the ruling is right, of course, and I believe it would be bad policy to take the bill up as against an appropriation bill. I favor the bill and shall be glad to support it at any other time, but we must get the appropriation bills into the hands of the conferees or we never shall get through. I hope the bill may be taken up at an early date, but not as against an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the rule forbids the motion and it is out of order, of course I must yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Kansas could cite the Chair to some rule which contravenes the ruling, the Chair should be glad to hear it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the very rule which he is seeking to enforce and to call attention to the fact that the rule relates to the business before 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It is Rule IX, which provides that:

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up.

Then it proceeds to state what motions shall be in order, but the rule applies to motions made before 2 o'clock when the Senate meets at 12 o'clock, or when we meet at 11 o'clock those motions may be made at any time before 1 o'clock in the afternoon. I have had occasion heretofore to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that at least that rule—whether there is another one I will not now state—only applies to those motions which pertain to business before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRISTOW. That has been my understanding. I did not have the rule before me at the time, but this is the first time I ever heard that a motion to take up an appropriation bill had precedence over other motions after 2 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a question of order. The Chair has already ruled, and there is nothing before the Senate but my motion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that immediately upon the passage of the Panama Canal bill the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] moved to proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill before the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] moved to proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, and the Vice President held, only three days ago, that the motion of the Senator from Virginia took precedence, and he held it in accordance with Rule IX of the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I remember the incident well, and it was a joke among many Senators——

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Kansas has just said he had never heard of it before.

Mr. BRISTOW (continuing). That the impetuous protest of the Senator from Virginia had taken the Vice President off his feet and that he had ruled contrary to the rule.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a question of order, that the motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the motion of the Senator from North Carolina is in order; and the question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, which had been reported by the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—GOLD HILL CONSOLIDATED CO.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I now ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments, before we proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill, on a question of personal privilege. I ask the Secretary to read an article that appears in the New York Sun of this morning, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina rises to a question of personal privilege. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NORTH CAROLINA GOLD MINE EXPLOITED ON UNITED STATES SENATE PAPER; SENATORS CHILTON AND OVERMAN AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS—COMMITTEE LETTERHEADS USED IN PROMOTING $5,000,000 GOLD HILL PROPERTY—FEDERAL ASSAYIST IS USED AS INVESTIGATOR—J. SKELTON WILLIAMS CITED AS FRIEND OF PROMOTER WALTER G. NEWMAN—LATTER HAS THE ENTRÉE AT CAPITOL OFFICES—HE IS PRESIDENT OF COMPANY WHOSE STOCK SELLS AT 50 CENTS—ITS PAR IS $5.

WASHINGTON, June 14, 1914.

If you happen to have received a communication on the official letter paper of the Senate Committee on Census, WILLIAM E. CHILTON, of West Virginia, chairman, painting the rosy prospects of a North Carolina gold mine, it is due to a mistake.

Further, if you have been favored with an identical communication on the official letterhead of the Senate Committee on Rules, LEE S. OVERMAN, of North Carolina, chairman, it also is the result of a mistake.

You can take the words of Senator CHILTON and Senator OVERMAN for that. While acknowledging an interest in the mining venture, both disclaim personal responsibility for the extraordinary use of the official stationery of the Senate committee. They say that their clerks were to blame.

But the appearance of these letters among curb brokers in New York has had a somewhat spectacular character and in other quarters has brought to a definite foundation stories which have been circulated in Washington for some time that a section of the Senate and others in Democratic officialdom were in the throes of an incipient gold fever; that dreams were being dreamed of fabulous fortunes to be drawn from the bowels of a North Carolina mountain; that Senators were letting their friends in on the good things; that clerks and pages who were fortunate enough to get an inkling of this short cut to "Easy Street" were withdrawing their money from the banks to buy stock, and that all were basking in the sunshine radiated by one Walter George Newman, a promoter, who has had something of a record in mining ventures.

J. SKELTON WILLIAMS'S PART.

In this Democratic gold movement John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency, has played an humble part.

Mr. Newman says Comptroller Williams is a warm friend of his, having gone to school with him, and Newman has been a frequent visitor at the comptroller's office. That, however, is an unimportant detail. A more interesting fact is that Mr. Williams, when he was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, had the chief expert of the United States assay office go to North Carolina at the Government's expense and investigate the Newman gold mine.

Some of the Democratic Senators availed themselves of the results of that visit, but it should be said that the report made by the experts, though not entirely unfavorable, was hardly as rosy as the representations that had been made.

Officials of the Treasury Department say it is very unusual, but not irregular, for the Government to send a man out at its expense to investigate a privately owned gold mine. Mr. Williams says he was moved to send the expert solely because the question of the reopening of the United States assay office at Charlotte, N. C., had come up and he desired to ascertain whether or not there had been any development in gold production there that would require such an important step. The report of the expert, in Mr. Williams's opinion, did not justify such a move by the Government.

SENATOR OVERMAN'S ACTIVITY.

Senator OVERMAN, as Treasury officials recall the incident, was the man at whose request the reopening of the assay office and the investigation of the mine were taken up. All these incidents would, of course, pass unnoticed were it not for the unfortunate double-headed mistake, which has resulted in the sending out of the letters on the official stationery.

The mining property that has aroused so much Democratic enthusiasm is that of the Gold Hill Consolidated Co., whose mine is at Gold Hill, Rowan County, N. C. This company is the successor of the old Gold Hill Copper Co. of lamented memory. The latter is described in the Copper Handbook, a recognized authority on such matters, as "a notorious promotion that caught many Wall Street operators," but that is merely a matter of history.

A new company has been organized with Walter George Newman as president, and with an authorized capital of $5,000,000, par $5 a share. The letter sent out on the Senate committee's stationery is signed by "J. C. Williams, economic and mining geologist." Mr. Williams is not listed in the American Institute of Mining Engineers, so far as could be ascertained here.

As Mr. Newman, the promoter and owner of a majority interest in the property, understands it, Williams was sent down to Gold Hill at the instance of Senator CHILTON. Thereafter the mining engineer wrote a letter to the Senator, which has been reproduced by mistake on the official stationery of the two Senate committees and fallen into the hands of stock brokers.

LETTER TO THE SENATOR.

The letter to Senator CHILTON reads:

GOLD HILL CONSOLIDATED CO.,
Gold Hill, N. C., May 29, 1914.

Hon. W. E. CHILTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After spending some 30 days on the Gold Hill property and feeling you may be interested in what I may know and believe about the property I write you this condensed information.

I have gone over the property of the Gold Hill Consolidated Co. very carefully, both on the surface and through the mine down to the 800-foot level. After examining seven veins from 2 feet 6 inches to 12 feet in width, sampling and assaying them, I must say I see greater possibilities in the Gold Hill property every day.

My first opinion is fully confirmed and the veins will go to much greater depth than the 800-foot level and carry high values in gold, silver, and copper. The copper veins alone will pay all expenses and show a handsome dividend, leaving the gold and silver clear.

After comparing the Gold Hill property with other mines and mining properties which I have examined both in the United States and Canada, on which valuations have been fixed, I would say I believe that $60,000,000 valuation on the Gold Hill property a conservative estimate.

Yours, very truly,

J. C. WILLIAMS,
Economic and Mining Geologist.

Just how this letter has been reproduced on the official paper of the Senate committees is shown by photographs of the documents themselves. Each is plainly marked "copy" and both Senator CHILTON and Senator OVERMAN believe that that fact alone is sufficient to indicate that the committees as such and the other individuals whose names appear on the letterheads had nothing to do with the mining project.

SOME SENATORS HOT.

Some of the Senators whose names appear on the papers take a different view and are inclined to be hot over it. For instance, in the upper left-hand corner of the Census Committee's letterhead is the name of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, also that of Senator ALBERT B. CUMMINS, of Iowa, who has some decided views on the question of Government supervision of the issuance of the stocks and bonds.

Mr. CUMMINS has been favored beyond any other Senator through the mistakes made in the offices of Senators CHILTON and OVERMAN. His name appears on both letterheads, as he is a member of the Committee on Rules as well as the Committee on Census. He had never heard of the Gold Hill Consolidated Co. until he saw his name on one of the letterheads bearing the engineer's report.

Other Senators whose names appear on the official paper of the Census Committee are HENRY A. DU PONT, of Delaware; GEORGE P. MCLEAN, of Connecticut; CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, of Michigan (Republicans); and ATLEE POMERENE, of Ohio; MORRIS SHEPPARD, of Texas; BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY, of Indiana; JOHN R. THORNTON, of Louisiana; JAMES E. MARTINE, of New Jersey; and WILLIAM H. THOMPSON, of Kansas (Democrats); and Henry Fry, clerk of the committee.

The Senators whose names appear on the letterhead of the Committee on Rules, of which Mr. OVERMAN is chairman, are, besides Mr. OVERMAN and Senator CUMMINS, FRANCIS E. WARREN, of Wyoming; JACOB H. GALLINGER, of New Hampshire; KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota (Republicans); and JOHN W. KERN, of Indiana, JAMES A. O'GORMAN, of New York; JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi; and LUKE LEA, of Tennessee (Democrats); and Charles B. Martin, clerk.

MR. POMERENE SAID TO BE IN IT.

Of these Senators, besides Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. CHILTON, Senator POMERENE, of Ohio, is the only one who is said to have a stock interest in the mine. Senator OVERMAN acknowledges that he is a stockholder and Senator CHILTON says that some friends of his are very much interested in it. At Senator CHILTON'S office the receipt of the letter from the mining engineer Williams was explained on the ground that the Senator was a stockholder.

Senator SWANSON, of Virginia, is another Democrat who is said to have acquired an interest, and the ramifications of stock ownership extend to the House side of the Capitol and out into the highways and byways of Washington.

At Senator CHILTON'S office one of his clerks accepted full responsibility for issuing the mining engineer's letter on the Census Committee paper. He said that Newman had asked to have copies of the mining engineer's letter struck off and that no other paper being handy, he, the clerk, had taken the official stationery of the Senate committee. These copies produced in the Census Committee's office were printed on a multigraph machine. The clerk thought he had struck off perhaps a hundred of them and they had been turned over to Newman.

Senator OVERMAN complained that the very same mistake had been made by one of the employees in his office and that the mining engineer's letter had been struck off on the official paper of the Senate Committee on Rules without his knowledge.

Newman was under the impression that Senator OVERMAN'S office sent these letters to his friends. Newman resented any suggestions that any of these letters had been used in promoting the sale of Gold Hill stock. He declared that he did not have a share to sell and that he was in the market buying the stock. As Newman recalled it, the letters had been sent to men who were already interested in the stock, for their information.

LETTERS TO THE STOCKHOLDERS.

Mr. Newman has been a familiar figure for several months in the corridors of the Capitol. On March 6 last he published in the Washington newspapers a letter to the Gold Hill stockholders, which read:

"I wish to make a statement to you regarding the conduct of your company's mines at Gold Hill. Since August 13, 1913, to March 1, 1914, your mines have been completely rehabilitated and are to-day in a splendid working condition and a large producer of gold, copper, and silver.

"There are 14 large and distinct veins at the 800-foot level in your mines, averaging 2 to 18 feet in width and can be traced the whole length of the property.

"These veins carry large quantities of gold, copper, and silver, some very rich in sulphur. There is one vein in particular, known as the W. G. N. vein, which has been worked and developed more extensively than any of the rest on your property. This vein was first encountered 320 feet from the main working shaft, going west in a crosscut at the 800-foot level, and a rise made in same for 200 feet from the 800-foot level toward the surface, it all being in virgin ground. This vein averages over 3 feet in width and $250 per ton for gold alone, and has been opened up for 3,000 feet on the surface.

"We are now driving cuts from the main working shaft at the present and encounter this vein. It is my desire to pay handsome dividends on your stock before January 1, 1915.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"WALTER GEORGE NEWMAN, President."

Dr. Dewey, of the Government assay office, was the expert who visited the mines at the suggestion of John Skelton Williams. He reported upon his return to Washington that he found conditions which, in his opinion, would warrant the expenditure of money for the purpose of developing the property and ascertaining just what the mine would yield. That is as far as he would go.

He said the only fair test would be a working of the property over a period of six months with stamps from different parts of the mine and thus ascertaining the average yield.

Dr. Dewey made no assays on the ground, but he acknowledged that specimens of ore said to be from the mine had been submitted to him and that his assays ranged from $800 a ton down practically to nothing. In other words, there seemed to be evidence that the mine was spotty, like most North Carolina properties, and the only way of making a fair test would be operation over a period of months. Newman contends that he is now following that course.

MINE WITH A LONG HISTORY.

The Gold Hill, N. C., mine is one with a long history. Before the Civil War, it is said, several millions of dollars were taken from it. Like most North Carolina mining ventures, however, it has had a checkered career. The Copper Handbook describes it as the largest gold producer in 1845 in the United States. The Copper Handbook adds:

"The mine was operating in 1913, crosscutting on the 270-foot level to cut the Newman vein already opened on the 800-foot level. Shipments to the Perth Amboy smelter returned 1.5 per cent copper and about $3 gold per ton, with small silver values."

For a considerable period the mine was involved in litigation and at one time was flooded. Newman contends that after pumping it out and crosscutting it he made discoveries which warrant his present rosy representations. He asserts, also, that he has added materially to the plant recently.

Newman himself is president and the directors, as given in the 1913 reference books, were Edward H. Swan, William P. Woodbury, Woodruff Leeming, Charles F. Stacy, J. C. Kemp, and W. F. Lanigan.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, while, so far as I can see, there is no reflection whatever upon my integrity contained in that article, I desire to introduce a resolution asking the Senate to investigate the matter thoroughly, because otherwise some one may say that there is some reflection contained in the article which has just been read.

So far as the statement concerning letters copied on stationery from my office is concerned, I wish to say that there were just four copies taken by a lady stenographer temporarily employed in my office, who is very much distressed about it. She said that late one evening when I was absent Mr. Newman came to my office and asked her to make copies of the letter from this mining expert to Senator CHILTON, which she did, thinking there was no harm in doing so, as she has frequently done the same thing for other parties. People from my State frequently come there and have letters copied, and she copied the letter in this instance, as I have said, believing there was no harm in it. I knew nothing in the world about it.

I have never advised anybody to buy any stock in this gold mine; I have never in any way attempted to promote the sale of any stock. I know something about the mine because it is situated in my county. Just prior to the discovery of gold in California that county was the famous gold field of the United States, and, because of the immense quantities of gold there and in the surrounding counties, the United States Government located at the city of Charlotte a mint. Subsequently the mint was abolished and there was established what was known as an assay office, which continued there until 1910, when the assay office was also abolished.

Some time ago this man Newman went down there, unwatered this mine, began crosscutting, and claimed that he had found some of the old veins that had been lost. I may say, in passing, that a great geologist, as I will be prepared to show at the proper time, says this is a wonderful gold field. I refer to Prof. Emmons, who speaks of it as a wonderful gold property, and I want to say that the records of the mint in Charlotte show that $5,000,000 were taken out of this mine.

I did not ask for the establishment of the assay office at Charlotte, but some parties in my State did ask for the reestablishment of the assay office there. We have other mines down there. They have not been paying in great quantities, because those working the mines have not gone down deep enough. Mr. Williams was requested by some one in my State to ask for the reestablishment of the assay office at Charlotte. I have never attempted to secure its reestablishment. Although I am on the Appropriations Committee, I have had nothing in the world to do with it, and refused to have anything to do with it. The Director of the Mint sent an expert down there to investigate as to whether this mine would pay enough money to warrant the reestablishment of the assay office. The Government has the building there, it has the machinery and all the equipment; it only needs some one to run the assay office; but I did not think the mine had been sufficiently developed for me to ask the committee to reestablish the assay office. After I saw the very roseate report concerning the mine and after a talk with this man Williams, whom I do not know and with whom I had never talked before, in which he said the mine was worth about $60,000,000 and the stock was selling at 50 cents, I did buy about $2,000 worth of stock. That is all I have in it, and I have done nothing to promote the stock or to assist in its promotion in any way whatever. Down in my office the letter paper of the committee of which I am chairman was used without my knowledge and consent by a poor woman who was in the office temporarily.

Now I submit the resolution which I send to the desk and which I desire to have adopted in order that Senators may investigate the matter and see whether there has been any want of integrity on the part of anybody in connection with this mine. Of course, no one can or could question my integrity or has done so. But it is best to let the truth be known in regard to everybody else's connection with it. I believe there are great possibilities for the development of the mineral resources of my State, and I hope this resolution will have the effect to let the people know what a great State we have in mineral resources, as well as agricultural and manufacturing resources.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, inasmuch as my name is used in connection with this matter, I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment. All of this goes to show what will happen to a Democrat when he gets to fooling with the gold standard. If he would stick to the old 16 to 1, he would never have anyone question his motives. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, some time ago—I am not accurate in remembering dates and time—my attention was called by some one, probably by Mr. Newman, whom I met here, to a wonderful new discovery which had been made in North Carolina. Now, Mr. President, I want to say that I will yield second place to nobody in having money invested in gold mines. I have some in holes in Washington, in California, in Colorado, in Georgia, in South Carolina, in Virginia, in North Carolina, and probably in several other States. All my life I have fostered the idea that possibly I might get out of my habit of not having enough to pay my bills by making a strike in a gold mine. They have always looked attractive to me, and, inasmuch as I have so much money in holes of that kind, I want to go to that kind of a hole to get out the money which I have invested.

I felt interested in the statement made to me, and after consulting with some friends in West Virginia who knew something about these matters I sent Mr. Williams, or, rather, a friend of mine sent Mr. Williams, down there. He came here to Washington to see me, and I gave him a letter of introduction to some one—I believe, to Mr. Montgomery, whom the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] knows very well, and told him that we wanted this man to examine the property. Mr. Williams made a report, which report I have shown to several people, and later, along in the latter part of May, he wrote me a letter.

One day Mr. Newman came to me—I think it was to me—he came to my office and said he wanted that letter. That is all I knew about it. Recently I heard that some one had a copy of that letter of Mr. J. C. Williams, the expert, written upon the paper of the Census Committee. The stenographer in my office told me that Mr. Williams came in with that letter and asked him to make some copies, and the most convenient paper he had being the paper of the Census Committee he made several copies for him upon that paper. He did it in the open; there was no secret about it; there was no concealment of anything. In other words, Mr. President, substantially the truth is told about the matter by the reporter so far as I am concerned. It is true it is told in a rather flippant way that some enemies might take to reflect upon me, but in the main, reading it in cold type, he has told it as it occurred.

If that were all, I would not dignify a thing of this kind any more than I would dignify any other letter that anybody might choose to copy and flare around in improper places, but I realize that there are other Senators on that committee with me and other Senators on the committee of which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is chairman, and I want to ask the Senate to promptly make an investigation of this matter to ascertain the facts. If they are as stated in the article and if it seems that any of us is subject to censure, I am here to take my medicine, but above all I do want the Senate and the country to know the actual facts in the case.

I will say, as Senator OVERMAN has said, that I never authorized anyone to use my Senate paper for any such purpose, and I am sure that everyone having knowledge of it will so testify.

I do want to call attention to the fact that the paper is marked "copy" plainly, and therefore no one could have been deceived.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 394) submitted by Mr. OVERMAN, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President of the Senate, and that said committee is hereby empowered and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation into the use of stationery of the United States Senate Committee on the Census and the United States Senate Committee on Rules in the promotion of the so-called Gold Hill Consolidated Co., and of the sending of an employee of the United States Treasury to make an investigation of and report upon the property of said company, and any other matters touching upon or relating to the use of property of the United States or employees of the United States Government in connection with the promotion or business of said Gold Hill Consolidated Co. Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress; to require, by subpœnas or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from any of the departments or bureaus of the Government; to employ stenographers to take and make a record of all evidence taken by the committee, and to keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed and suitably bound. The chairman of the committee, or any of the members thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee, or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof. All hearings by and before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall be open to the public. The expenses of such investigation shall be paid for out of the fund for contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the statute, of course the resolution would have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to be passed upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the reading of the Diplomatic and Consular bill. I wish to say that this is the first bill ever reported out of the Committee on Appropriations that carried less than the House appropriated.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 2, on page 2.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer a committee amendment at this point to make funds available for the payment of our envoys and ministers to Argentina and Chile.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That of the amount appropriated for salaries of ambassadors to Argentina and Chile so much as may be necessary shall be available for the payment of salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Argentina and Chile at the rate of $12,000 each per annum, and shall continue to be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, until such time as duly accredited ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary shall have been received by the Governments of the Argentine Republic and of Chile, respectively.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to explain the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the bill reads, on the 1st day of July these salaries are made $17,500 each for the payment of ambassadors. The ambassadors are not yet appointed, and while the law provides for ambassadors there, they will have no way of paying the men who are serving. The men who are holding on as ministers will get only $12,000. We wanted to make available of the $17,500 appropriated for ambassadors such part as is necessary to pay the ministers, and the same as to the clerks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, at the end of line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That of the amount appropriated for salaries of secretaries of embassy to Argentina and Chile, so much as may be necessary shall be available for payment of salaries of secretaries of legation to Argentina and Chile at the rate of $2,625 each per annum, and shall continue to be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, until such time as duly accredited secretaries of embassy shall have been received by the Governments of the Argentine Republic and of Chile, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service," on page 9, line 13, after the words "Revised Statutes," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $75,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1914, which is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 11, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL (WATER) BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $10,000.

And insert:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $20,000: Provided, That $10,000 thereof is made immediately available to resume the work relating to the distribution of water, as authorized by and in pursuance to concurrent resolution of April 29, 1890, and the protocol of May 6, 1896, between the United States and Mexico.

The commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State under article 21 of the treaty of 1848, and reaffirmed under article 7 of the treaty of 1853, and article 5 of the treaty of 1884, and article 8 of the treaty of 1889, to carry on this work, is hereby authorized and directed to pay the salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances heretofore authorized or approved by the Secretary of State, and any and all persons employed by or under direction of the commissioner appointed by the Secretary of State to study the questions in connection with the distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, from the date to which such salaries, compensation, wages, and allowances were last paid up to and including the 30th day of June, 1914, or until said employees shall be separated from the service; and the appropriation made by the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act, approved February 28, 1913, "To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905" is hereby made available for the payments herein authorized and directed.

Mr. OVERMAN. On page 11, line 24, I move to strike out the word "and" after the word "hereby." It is incorrect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 24, after the word "hereby", it is proposed to strike out the word "and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this is a joint commission; is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. There is a good deal of difficulty about arriving at what the treaty meant. A treaty was entered into in 1845, and subsequently there was a protocol, and there has been a conflict between the jurisdiction of what was known as the water commission and the boundary commission. The boundary commission has been acting all the time, until the auditor made a ruling that the indebtedness incurred by the water commissioner could not be paid under the former law. We have therefore divided it and appropriated $10,000 for the boundary commission and $10,000 for the water commission, so that they can pay the back indebtedness and also go on with the water matter as provided for in the protocol.

Mr. BURTON. Are our commissioners acting now in concert with commissioners from Mexico?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I think so. I know that Gen. Mills is. I can not say as to the others. I know that the treaty provides for it. I do not know whether the Mexican commissioners are there or not; but the treaty provides for it; and I take it for granted they are there.

Mr. BURTON. What Government, what administration takes up the different claims down in Mexico?

Mr. OVERMAN. Commissioners were appointed under the treaty, named in the treaty itself. Whether those same men are at work or not, or whether they have died or resigned or other commissioners have been appointed in their places, I am unable to inform the Senator, but I understand they are going ahead with the work. They have surveyors down there. Evidently they worked last year, because there is $1,100 of indebtedness due for the people that they have in their employ, and there is no way to pay them under the ruling of the auditor.

Mr. BURTON. In view of the fact that we have recognized no Government in Mexico, what good would result if these commissioners did come to some conclusion?

Mr. OVERMAN. We may later on recognize some Government down there, and we are providing for that.

Mr. BURTON. So the Senator from North Carolina will concede that no conclusion could be reached at present from their labors? It would be necessary to wait?

Mr. OVERMAN. We are living in hope, watching and waiting to see what will happen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada and the United States and Canada," on page 12, line 24, after the word "necessary," to strike out "to reduce field notes"; and on page 13, line 7, after the word "necessary," to strike out "to reduce field notes," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary; and for the more effective demarcation and mapping, pursuant to the treaty of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, of the land and water boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, as established under existing treaties, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary, $100,000, together with the unexpended balance of previous appropriations for these objects.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 19, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL PRISON COMMISSION.

For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550.

Hereafter the United States shall continue as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission and participate in the work of said commission.

That hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized annually to pay the pro rata share of the United States in the administration expenses of the International Prison Commission and the necessary expenses of a commission to represent the United States on said commission at its annual meetings, together with necessary clerical and other expenses, out of any money which shall be appropriated for such purposes from time to time by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 12, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL GEODETIC ASSOCIATION FOR THE MEASUREMENT OF THE EARTH.

To enable the Government of the United States to pay, through the American Embassy at Berlin, its quota as an adhering member of the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pan American Union," on page 14, line 24, after the words "requisitions of the," to strike out "chairman of the governing board of the Union" and insert "Secretary of State," and on page 15, line 1, after the word "Union," to strike out "and of carrying out the orders of said governing board," so as to make the clause read:

Pan American Union, $75,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the Union shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Union: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the Union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, on page 15, after line 16, I should like to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee having accepted it, the amendment is in order. Ordinarily it is the rule to consider only committee amendments first.

Mr. BURTON. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

To the International Commission on Annual Tables of Constants and Numerical Data, Chemical, Physical, and Technological, as established by the Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry in London and as continued by the eighth congress in New York, as a contribution by the United States toward the publication of annual tables of constants, chemical, physical, and technological, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, after line 16, to strike out:

BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to oppose that amendment. The Interparliamentary Union is an organization to which we have been contributing for a number of years. Indeed, the contribution contained in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill for 1914 was $2,500.

The work of the union is very important. In its membership there are included representatives from almost every legislative body in the world, and they maintain a general bureau at Brussels with a secretary. The different countries contribute toward its expenses. Our contribution, I believe, is one of the largest, but nearly all other countries contribute as well. Last year it was $2,500. Now it is proposed to strike out the $2,000 that is included in the House provision. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator that we have adopted this policy: Wherever there was a union or an association or a meeting of any kind abroad that was not provided for in some treaty or in some act of Congress, where it was simply an association of men without any recognition on the part of the Government, either through the Secretary of State or Congress or in some other way, we did not see why the United States should be contributing to an association entirely disconnected from the Government, without any request on the part of Congress and without any agreement in any treaty.

If we do it in one case, I suggest to the Senator that we ought to do it in dozens of cases that we have stricken out here where sometimes men go to Europe. I do not say that there is any provision here to send a delegate to Europe, as in some cases there is.

We have stricken out all of the provisions where there are meetings held abroad that are not authorized by any act of Congress or any resolution or any treaty or any request on the part of the Secretary of State or the President.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it will be accepted as an act of gross discourtesy to these other countries—to Belgium, to the Netherlands, to France, and to Great Britain.

Mr. OVERMAN. How could it be discourteous when there is no governmental act connected with it?

Mr. BURTON. But we have given this amount year by year.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have given it to the association.

Mr. BURTON. We have a very considerable delegation from the Senate and the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have been invited to it, and I believe I am a member of it. It has no governmental authority in any country. We can not treat any government with discourtesy, because no government has ever provided for it anywhere that I have ever heard of; and I do not think the Senator can show me that the union has any authority under any governmental resolution or act or agreement.

Mr. BURTON. In 1904 we invited them to come to this country, and made an appropriation. In pursuance of a resolution by this union President Roosevelt issued the invitation for the Second Hague Conference. Without any disparagement of the other interparliamentary or international organizations specified in the bill, this is the most important, because it includes delegates from every country that has a parliamentary system of government. Even Japan and Russia have sent delegates.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the Senator mean by "delegates"? Does he mean delegates selected by somebody outside—not Government delegates, not representatives of the Government?

Mr. BURTON. They are under the recognition of the Government. They are sent by the different branches of the union in the different States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Just like some temperance society would send a delegate abroad, or some Elks' society, or something of that kind.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, it is altogether different from that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, any society might send a delegate for the same reason, and the expenses might be paid as these are paid.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. OVERMAN. Gladly.

Mr. ROOT. This practice has been running for many years under the system of concurrent legislation—a method of reaching harmonious action on the part of different Governments, which is often quite as effective as the making of formal treaties.

The Interparliamentary Union is a conference between the legislators of the different civilized countries.

No one from the United States takes part in it except by virtue of his election either to the Senate or to the House of Representatives of the United States. At fixed times the represenatives of the legislative bodies of the civilized countries of the world meet to confer regarding those matters which tend toward doing away with barriers, unifying commercial methods, and reducing the obstacles to friendly and profitable intercourse. Their association and conference and better understanding is, I think, a very useful agency toward advancing the purposes we all have in mind as legislators.

We could all go if we saw fit. Every Member of the Senate and every Member of the House is competent to attend these meetings, but, of course, it is not convenient for very many to do so. Year by year for many years Members of the Senate and Members of the House have attended these meetings, under, as I say, a course of concurrent legislation by which the United States has recognized, in sympathy and harmony with the other civilized countries of the world, the advantages and benefits of this system of legislative conferences. I think it would be very unfortunate for the United States to withdraw its approval.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that I frankly agree with him that this is a very important meeting, and I hope it will be carried on. I think it is doing great work. The question with us, however, is whether or not the United States Government can afford not only this but other similar things. If we do it for this association, I presume we will have to go on and do it for a dozen other associations that meet upon their own initiative, go over to Europe, and have a discussion over there.

If the Government had recognized this body in any way by a resolution or by a treaty or by a suggestion upon the part of the President—as was done, as the Senator from Ohio said, some years ago, when the President of the United States, then Mr. Roosevelt, took it up—of course, we ought to appropriate for it.

Mr. ROOT. But, Mr. President, one object of my remarks was to point out that our Government has recognized it. For many years regular appropriations have been made to carry on the work of this union. Somebody has to pay the expenses, you know. These gentlemen do not come together on their own account. They come together only as officers of this and of other Governments. Somebody must pay the expenses, and I think we should pay our share. We should do our part toward the payment of expenses, just as we do toward the International Postal Union and a variety of other joint international undertakings for the common benefit.

Mr. OVERMAN. While I do not say it in reference to this, these things are generally gotten up by some man who wants to go to Europe and have a good time under governmental authority. That does not apply to this case, however.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I must correct that statement.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said it did not apply to this case.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from North Carolina is entirely in error. This is not to pay anyone's expenses.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say so.

Mr. BURTON. There is a bureau in Brussels that maintains a considerable force of clerks. They do a very large amount of printing. The propositions made by committees are submitted to every member of the union. For instance, there is a proposition now for an international court to settle certain controversies arising from subjects about which there are treaties. There are a number of other questions; for instance, the status of navigable canals. There is a proposition pending in regard to rates of postage. A resolution was adopted at the last meeting in regard to the recognition given by governments to loans for purposes of war.

I believe no rental is charged for the halls in which they meet. They met in the historic chamber at The Hague the last time and they met at Geneva preceding that. The secretary receives a salary which is not very large, but he has a considerable number of subordinates. I do not see how the American members of this group could attend this gathering if this Government, after having appropriated for this purpose for years, should now strike out the item.

Mr. OVERMAN. How long has the Government been appropriating for it?

Mr. BURTON. I do not recall the number of years. In looking over the last Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill I notice that it was in that bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it has been carried in the bill for a few years.

Mr. BURTON. I think it has been carried for some five or six years at least.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I am not striking at this item especially. I think it is the best of all the appropriations for unions whose meetings are being held over there. I am a member of it myself, as the Senator knows; but we had to establish some rule or principle to guide us. There are efforts being made every year to get these associations to meet abroad, and then they want to establish a headquarters somewhere and have the Government appropriate to sustain those headquarters in Europe; some of them.

This is not the only one. We are not striking at this organization especially, but we had to establish some rule or some principle to go by. The committee thought they would establish the rule that wherever the Government, by the action of Congress or by some treaty, brings the meeting about, it is our duty to appropriate, but here it is just an organization of men outside of the Government, and I do not see why we should appropriate for it.

Mr. BURTON. They are not outside of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, it is just like any other association.

Mr. BURTON. The prime minister of England belonged to it for many years and delivered the address of welcome at their meeting in 1906.

Passing on here, there is the International Institute of Agriculture. Is that the result of treaty?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; that is the result of treaty.

Mr. BURTON. Is the same true of the International Railway Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Every one of them. We have examined thoroughly as to that.

Mr. BURTON. Is the same thing true in regard to the Committee on Postal Rates?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; every one that is in here that has not been stricken out is provided for either by treaty or by resolution of Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Nevertheless, Mr. President, whether these are provided for by treaty or not, we have given this recognition. We invited them to come to this country so long ago as 1904, and I am not sure but that this appropriation has been made every year since then. It has been made at any rate for a considerable time. I do not like to rely upon my recollection without having the papers at hand, but I think that for 10 years past we have contributed to the expense of this union. It is an object in relation to which foreign Governments might feel a peculiar degree of sensitiveness because the organization includes delegates from all their legislative bodies. We have taken rather a prominent part in the meetings of the union. Our contentions have been listened to with a great deal of respect. I know no place where American influence can be enlarged or recognized in a greater degree than in the meetings of this union.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator with what degree of consistency or pride any American delegate could attend a conference where the American Government refuses to contribute any portion whatever and where all the other Governments represented contribute.

Mr. BURTON. I think the question would arise whether we ought not to stay away if the Congress of the United States refuses to make this appropriation. I think we have not been quite as regardful of the courtesies due to foreign Governments in some of our legislative action as we ought to have been, and I know no slight that would be worse than to omit this appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In regard to this amendment, I will state frankly that I voted for striking out the provision upon the understanding that it was to pay the expenses of the delegates to attend the convention.

Mr. BURTON. Not a dollar.

Mr. SMOOT. That evidently is not the case from what has already been stated. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if that was the understanding of the committee, whether it would not be better to restore it?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not the understanding of the committee. I explained it. I have no special objections to this matter, but we established a rule that we had to be guided by in this matter. Can the Senator assure me that other countries contribute?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; decidedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. What other countries?

Mr. BURTON. Great Britain.

Mr. OVERMAN. All countries?

Mr. BURTON. I could not say that all countries contribute; but there is a list published of the contributions. I think ours is one of the larger ones, and has been for years. It may be the largest.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course we have no way of getting information from the Department of State or anywhere else, except from the Senator. I believe I will agree to let it go in. The Senate may disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Institute of Agriculture," on page 15, line 26, after the date "1915," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$4,800," so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1915, $4,800

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 3, after the date "1915," to strike out "$3,600" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the clause read:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1915, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to line 24 at the bottom of page 11. It seems to me there has been a word left out or an unnecessary word put in.

Mr. OVERMAN. We struck out the word "and" before "authorized" in line 24. We have fixed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The word "and" was stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I beg pardon.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 7, after the word "Rome," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 15, to strike out:

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

Judge of the United States court for China, $8,000; district attorney of the United States for China, $4,000; marshal of the United States court for China, $3,000; clerk of the United States court for China, $3,000; stenographer of the United States court for China, $1,800; for court expenses, including reference law books, $9,000; total, $28,800.

And to insert:

UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

Judge, $8,000; district attorney, $4,000; marshal, $3,000; clerk, $3,000; stenographer, $1,800; court expenses, including reference law books $9,000; in all, $28,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to strike out:

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL FOR THE EXPLORATION OF THE SEA.

For the pro rata share of the United States in the administrative expenses of the Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, in the interest of the commercial fisheries, $5,956; for the necessary expenses of expert official representatives in attendance at the annual meeting of the council and clerical and other expenses connected with the investigations, $1,200; in all, $7,156.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Seismological Association," on page 18, line 16, after the word "commission," to strike out "$1,300" and insert "$800," so as to make the clause read:

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain," on page 18, after line 18, to strike out:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, including office rent in the District of Columbia and the compensation of arbitrator, umpire, agent, counsel, clerical, and other assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $50,000.

And to insert:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows.

Salaries and expenses of the tribunal: For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following, for salaries and expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800; stenographer for arbitrators, for three months, at $100 per month, $300; messenger, for three months, at $60 per month, $180; traveling expenses of arbitrators, $2,000; reporting proceedings, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and for printing, stationery, and supplies, $500; in all, $9,390.

For rent of office for joint secretaries, $360.

Salaries, United States agency: Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $5,000 per annum; counsel, $2,520; two law clerks, at $1,800 per annum each; joint secretary, who shall also act as disbursing clerk, $2,500 per annum; two stenographers, at $1,200 per annum each; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $24,240.

Expenses, United States agency: Necessary expenses of counsel and assistants, $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; printing memorials, replies, evidence, and briefs, $5,000; rent, $2,000; stationery and supplies, $700; miscellaneous expenses, $500; and international reference works and reports, $500; in all, $12,700.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if I understand this amendment, I think it is a very unwise one. The language of the bill as it came from the House is general:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, including office rent in the District of Columbia and the compensation of arbitrator, umpire, agent, counsel, clerical, and other assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $50,000.

In 1910 we entered into an agreement with Great Britain by which we agreed to arbitrate certain claims that were specified in a schedule annexed to that agreement and other claims that might be specified in subsequent schedules. The claims which were enumerated in the first schedule were a very large number, I think 100 or two or three hundred perhaps in number. Of course, they were mostly very small claims and were grouped together so there would be perhaps not more than 40 or 50 groups of different kinds of claims.

Under the treaty there were three arbitrators appointed; rather there were two arbitrators and an umpire, the United States selecting one abitrator, Great Britain another arbitrator, and they two selecting an umpire.

Shortly after this treaty came into operation we appointed our various agents for carrying it into effect on the part of the United States. We originally appointed an agent at a salary, I think, of $15,000. Subsequently he resigned and another agent was appointed at a salary of $7,500, the last agent appointed being Mr. Lansing, who is now counselor for the State Department. We appointed two counselors. When I say we, I do not mean Congress, but I mean the administration. We appointed two counselors. One of them at the time he was appointed was the solicitor for the State Department. His appointment took effect immediately after the 4th of March of last year. Another was a prominent young lawyer, a man of excellent ability, who is a resident of New York. Those two men took up the work on behalf of the United States, and they have carried it forward for more than a year.

These cases are of great importance and of great intricacy. It is impossible for any lawyer to become familiar with them in order to present properly the side of the United States unless he gives to the cases very great and careful attention. A number of these cases have been presented. Mr. Clark, who was the former solicitor of the Department of State and who is the chief counsel, has personally argued, I think, some 16 of the cases. He has devoted necessarily a great deal of time to the preparation of the cases. He has been eminently successful. I think every case that he argued and which has been decided has been decided in favor of our Government.

There are pending before this arbitration board at the present time, unargued and undetermined, some five or six cases, which are the most important of any of those that were submitted. Included in those cases is one which involves the claim of Great Britain against this Government in behalf of the Cayuga Indians of Canada. We have been paying for a great many years annuities to the Cayuga Indians. The British Government has presented a claim in behalf of the Canadian branch of that tribe or nation for back annuities, and it amounts to upward of a million dollars. The claim on the part of the United States, which was prepared with great care by the New York lawyer, Mr. McKinstry, covers some 1,500 or 2,000 pages. A vast volume of testimony has been taken, and that case has not been argued.

Now, it is the purpose of this amendment to turn out these two men, who are familiar—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] shakes his head, but——

Mr. ROOT. The effect of it is that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The effect of it is that, whether it is the purpose or not.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not true that the effect would be to do that at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us see.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me call attention to one matter with which the Senator is probably not familiar. The Senator stated the facts correctly, but I just wanted to see what complaint he has to make against this amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was waiting to see what the Senator's objection is to this amendment. He stated the facts about as they are. The Senator does not know, perhaps, that they have not had an agent there for some time who is getting $7,500. They had one counselor who was getting $7,500. The purpose of this amendment is to make the agent do the general counsel's work and the general counsel do the counsel's work. In other words, we want to make the agent do the work which the general counsel ought to do and the counsel do the work that the general counsel is doing now. We developed the fact that there is a man in New York, named McKinstry, who is not employed one-half his time—probably not one-third of his time. We thought $5,000 was enough for that purpose.

The Senator spoke of Mr. Clark. He is a very good man. I understood they were going to appoint him agent. I have no objection. He will get the same salary he is getting now.

The only trouble we have about the House provision is that it gives a lump sum. I am always opposed to lump-sum appropriations. I think salaries ought to be fixed and be definite and certain. When you give a lump sum a man may have a salary to-day at the rate of $7,500, in 6 months he may have another at the rate of $5,000, and in 12 months it may be at the rate of $10,000 a year. They ought to be made definite, and that is what we propose to do by this amendment. In other words, we have made the amendment fit the House appropriation as near as possible. We found that this secretary does not do anything in the world. He is getting $3,000 and stays here in Washington. He does nothing except when the joint commission meets. I think they meet in Canada. We have made his salary $2,500 and imposed upon him some duties to perform; that is, we have made him a disbursing agent. The secretary, who shall also act as disbursing agent, gets $2,500. That is the change we have made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not objecting to any of these items.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the Senator objecting to?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am objecting to the amendment because the effect of it will be to legislate out of these positions the two lawyers who have had charge of these cases for some years and who ought to be permitted to continue with the work until it is completed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not understand the Senator's reason.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator would not listen to me, but proceeded to make a speech on his own account. I was going to tell the Senator why. The Senator asked me, and then proceeded to make a speech about it.

The provision is:

Salaries, United States agency: Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum.

I do not care anything about that except that I think it is a wholly unnecessary provision. Why, if we are to have him appointed at all, should he be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate? I think it may as well be left as it has been heretofore, that the agent shall be appointed by the President without reference to the Senate. But I do not care very much about that. Then, the next provision is:

Counsel, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $5,000 per annum; counsel, $2,500.

These two men are now doing the work. They have been appointed without reference to the Senate. Their salaries have been fixed at $7,500 and at $5,000. I think I am somewhat familiar with the work they have been doing, and the amount of the salary is very reasonable. It ought not to be cut down a single dollar.

Now, it is proposed that the President shall appoint somebody as counsel at $5,000 in place of Mr. Clark. I do not think Mr. Clark would accept the appointment at $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why could not the President appoint him agent? Then he would get the same salary and do the same work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know, but I simply want to make sure that these men will be appointed and that the Government will be represented by them in these cases. It would be exceedingly unfortunate if these two lawyers, who have become familiar with these cases, who have partly prepared them and are preparing arguments to be made before this arbitration board, should now be turned out and new men be put in their places.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is a lawyer, and he understands that a lawyer who has grown up with a case from the beginning is far better able to present it to the court than some lawyer who may be called in at a later day, even though the new lawyer may be quite as able as the old one.

I think the Senator from North Carolina, from what he has said, agrees with me, and if we intend to continue these two men in this employment we ought to say so. I intend to offer an amendment——

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not say what we intend to do. I said Mr. Clark would be appointed to one of these places. My point is that a man who ought to be doing work as counsel is doing nothing, although $7,500 is appropriated for him. There is no such man filling the place.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You mean the agent?

Mr. OVERMAN. An agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then cut him out.

Mr. OVERMAN. The treaty requires us to appoint an agent or we would have cut him out.

Mr. ROOT. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. The work of an agent in a case of this kind corresponds to the work of an attorney in our courts——

Mr. OVERMAN. Exactly.

Mr. ROOT. As distinguished from counsel. The great bulk of the agent's work is in preparation. He prepares the case where his Government is the complainant. He prepares the counter case where the Government is the defendant. He superintends the preparation of the arguments—that is, the contributions of counsel—the printed arguments, putting them in shape and seeing that they are printed. He has to see that the papers are properly served and distributed in accordance with the practice in such cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, if the Senator will let me interrupt him, that is just what the Senator said Mr. Clark has been doing. He is general counsel, and, although the treaty says that we must have an agent to do that work, as the Senator says now, that is just what Mr. Clark, the general counsel, is doing. We did not see why we should have a general counsel at $7,500 a year doing all the work, and then have an agent at $7,500 a year who does no work.

Mr. ROOT. I suppose that the great bulk of the agency work is done by the general counsel?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; for these cases.

Mr. ROOT. For these cases; that is, those that have come on——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those that are included in the present schedule.

Mr. ROOT. But I believe that the counsel should also act as the agent, if that is permissible under the treaty, or that some person of minor consequence at a moderate salary should act as agent.

Mr. OVERMAN. That could not be done because the Canadian Government has provided for an agent and the United States has an agent. They get the same salary, as I understand, and we must make our law correspond to the law on the part of Great Britain.

Mr. ROOT. Well, some provision should be made under which the two functions could be united, or a smaller amount paid; but I think these provisions would oust Mr. Clark and the other gentlemen from their positions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not necessarily so.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; because there would be no appropriation for their payment. The appropriation would be only for the payment of somebody who had been appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They could not receive that payment.

Mr. OVERMAN. If they are such men as the Senator says they are, as I have no doubt they are from his statement, probably the President may appoint them. I know that Mr. Clark is a very able man, and that he is very highly recommended. I think he is doing work now which is exactly what the agent is expected to do.

Mr. ROOT. Very likely, naturally enough, because Mr. Lansing, who was agent, has been made counselor for the State Department. The injury that would come from ousting these gentlemen from their positions would be very serious. These are cases which have been in the office of the Solicitor of the State Department for many years. Cases are not put in before a claims tribunal like this until all attempts at reaching a conclusion by diplomatic correspondence have been exhausted and have failed. The man representing the United States, who is familiar with the prior history of the cases, who knows what documents there are relating to them, who knows how to meet statements made on the other side, who knows how to send over to the State Department and call for papers, who knows how the issue has grown up, is Mr. Clark. He was Solicitor for the State Department, and before that he was the Assistant Solicitor of the State Department. He has more than the ordinary familiarity of the lawyer with the cases in which he is engaged.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from New York has forgotten that this thing was started only last year. Mr. Clark can only have one year's experience with these cases.

Mr. ROOT. I brought the treaty under which this thing is going on very nearly to the point of being signed nearly seven years ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the court has been held only recently.

Mr. ROOT. But some of these cases have been hanging along for a hundred years.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Clark does not know anything about the cases prior to the time the members of the court were appointed.

Mr. ROOT. He does not remember anything occurring a hundred years ago, I will admit.

Mr. OVERMAN. He can hardly remember anything prior to 1913 regarding them.

Mr. ROOT. Oh, yes; the cases have been continually the subject of diplomatic controversy.

Mr. OVERMAN. These cases were not properly brought before this tribunal, and could not have been so brought, because there was no tribunal before which to bring them until 1913.

Mr. ROOT. These cases are all cases which, I think, one Government or the other has been arguing with the other Government to secure payment, and the argument has been carried on through the office of the solicitor, which is occupied chiefly in dealing with claims by and against the United States.

Let me say one other word, if the Senator from Utah will be good enough to yield to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. How can we provide that these appointments shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate? These are not officers of the United States. If you employ a lawyer in a case, it does not make him an officer of the United States. There is no such office; the Senate can not perform its constitutional function of advising and consenting regarding these appointments.

This question has been up before. I had to re-form and change a treaty, I remember, a number of years ago because the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations would not give their assent to doing just this thing. I put into the treaty a provision that an agent should be appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate. I thought it would reduce opposition in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, but I found, on the other hand, that they were unwilling to permit putting into the treaty any provision which called for the discharge of the constitutional function of the Senate in advising and consenting to an appointment, unless it was of an officer of the United States. We can not create that authority by statute, and I think we should get ourselves into rather a serious difficulty by undertaking to put this provision into a statute. If you cut that out, it would seem to dispose of the difficulty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I see no reason, Mr. President, why we should not provide in this bill to continue these two counsels at the salaries they are now getting, and provide in the bill that the senior counsel or the chief counsel, who receives $7,500 a year, should also act as agent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should we do that when there is no use of this man at a salary of $7,500 a year? We are trying to save money. The Senator seems to think that we are striking at some man. It is evident that it is not necessary to have so many men to do this work. As I have stated, one man has been getting $7,500 a year and has done scarcely anything. He lives here in Washington. We give this agent not only a counselor at $5,000, but we give him an assistant at $3,500, and we give him a law clerk at $2,500 and two law clerks at $1,800. Besides the three law clerks, there is the agent who is doing the very thing that Mr. Clark ought to do but has not been doing. Therefore the agent is the fifth wheel to the coach. He is nothing but a name.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from North Carolina know what the British Government pays its counsel?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know, but I know that they have one of the greatest lawyers in the world.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely; they have one of the greatest lawyers in the world.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I know that. I do not know whether or not Mr. Clark is a great lawyer, but he is a very good man, I think.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is their counsel, and we ought to have opposed to him a man of ability and intellect.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator from Utah about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And we could not ask such a man to represent us in these cases, which involve millions of dollars, which, as I have said, have already involved many intricate questions of international law——

Mr. OVERMAN. This court sits in Canada about six weeks and it sits here about six weeks, and the man who got $7,500 did not do anything else but attend that court. Mr. Clark has a law office in Utah. He has also a law office here and practices law. I am not objecting to that. Our counsel ought to be a first-class lawyer; but considering the cases which he had, according to the statement he made, it seems to me that $7,500 a year is a pretty good salary for him when he is transacting other law business and when these cases are not occupying half of his time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from North Carolina is at least partially in error. Mr. Clark has a law partner in Utah, and I presume his name with his partner's is on the door; but Mr. Clark has not, as I am informed, practiced a day in Utah. He has been in Washington all the time.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And most of the time looking after these cases. Now, the Senator speaks about the arbitration board being in session here six weeks. Does the Senator think that counsel's labor is measured by the number of days the court sits?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The preparation of these cases is the essential thing and the important thing.

Mr. OVERMAN. He has as counsel a good lawyer and two law clerks to help him, and in his idle moments he prepares these cases; there are not very many of them, and $7,500 is what he was getting before.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is all that anybody is asking for him now.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what is provided for in this bill, only it is proposed to call him an agent instead of counsel, as we have no general agent now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator's amendment provides for an agent to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say as to that, that one member of the committee was very insistent as to that; but I care nothing about it. I want the number reduced, because so many are not needed. One agent can do the work with the assistance of counsel at $5,000, another lawyer at $2,520, and two law clerks at $1,800. In the judgment of the committee, that is a sufficient force to do the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me state this amendment to the Senator, and see whether or not he will agree to it. Strike out, beginning in line 19, the words:

> Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $5,000 per annum; counsel, $2,520.

And insert in lieu thereof:

> Two counsel already assigned to the argument in the State succession cases, the Philippine War claims, and the Cayuga Indian case, one, who shall also discharge the duties of agent, at $7,500 per annum, and one at $5,000 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that is agreed to, the Secretary will have to employ all the men now engaged in the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That makes it certain that those men will be continued.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator wants to provide that they shall be employed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think they should be employed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether or not they should be employed. I know Mr. Clark, and I can speak in a very complimentary manner of him; in fact, as highly as can the Senator from Utah, so far as he is concerned, but I am not going to see the hands of the Secretary of State tied and say that he shall employ the same men now employed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then why not simply say this, "Two counsel, one of whom shall also discharge the duties of agent, at $7,500 per annum, and one at $5,000 per annum?"

Mr. OVERMAN. You can not do that, because the treaty says there shall be appointed an agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The treaty does not say that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The treaty says that there shall be an agent, and there is an agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The treaty simply says:

The agents and counsel of the parties are authorized, as provided in article 70, chapter 3—

That refers to The Hague convention, I presume?

Mr. OVERMAN. That provides for an agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does not oblige either Government to appoint an agent, but it says:

The agents and counsel of the parties are authorized, as provided in article 70, chapter 3, to present, orally and in writing, to the tribunal all the arguments they may consider expedient in support or in defense of each claim.

Mr. OVERMAN. Great Britain has an agent, and we ought to have an agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have an agent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Great Britain has counsel, and we ought to have counsel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We will have an agent likewise. The appropriation ought to provide for two counsel. Whatever you do about the agent, counsel are essential—one at $7,500 per annum and the other at $5,000 per annum. Of course, I do not know what Sir Charles Tupper is paid, but I would venture to say that he is getting a salary far in excess of what we are paying to our counsel. Great Britain is in the habit of employing the very best counsel she can get, and they are in the habit of getting reasonably good fees. Would the Senator object to an amendment of that character?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I would. The committee, after having gone into it thoroughly, fixed it in this way, without regard to turning anybody out, but to save some $20,000 to the Government. We found men connected with this work sitting around here in Washington getting big salaries and doing nothing. Now, the Senator would have us put those men back.

The committee found that Mr. Clark was doing able work and that he was doing the work that the agent could do at a salary of $7,500; so we provided for one agent, at $7,500, with the idea of imposing upon him the work of general counsel. Then we provided counsel, at $5,000, to aid the agent, as he has been aiding the general counsel, and then we provided for a lawyer, at $2,500 a year, to aid him, and $1,800 each to two law clerks to aid them, and then furnished them an ample force of stenographers, secretaries, and clerks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If this amendment provides for the appointment of an agent at $7,500, that agent is not required to do the work of counsel?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the point; he ought to do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is nothing in this bill that will compel him to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. He will have to do it. The reason he has not heretofore done it is because the general counsel has done it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the agent is not supposed to do the work of counsel.

Mr. OVERMAN. According to the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] it is the duty of the agent to present these cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He does not present the cases; he prepares the cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. He should do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He prepares the cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. The man who prepares them ought to present them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Counsel argue the cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why can not the agent argue them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He could, probably, if he were a lawyer.

Mr. OVERMAN. He ought to be a lawyer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the point I am making is that there is no requirement for him to do it; he may simply go ahead performing the functions of agent, and leave it for the counsel to do the work of counsel.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no requirement here for the agent to do it, there is no requirement for the general counsel to do it, and there is no general authority here for the law clerk to do it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have just suggested an amendment to the Senator from Utah, which I think meets the purpose expressed by the Senator from North Carolina, if the Senator will permit the suggestion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall be pleased to hear the amendment.

Mr. ROOT. In place of the words:

Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500 per annum; counsel, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $5,000 per annum.

Insert:

Agent, who shall act as counsel, $7,500; counsel, $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would be agreeable to me, Mr. President; but I want to say that there is a member of the committee who insisted upon this amendment. The committee adopted it, and I can not agree to the proposal to change it. He thought that these officers ought to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. So we have put that provision in the bill. We took a vote on that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator has not any serious objection, we can probably easily overcome it by a vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think I will have to stand by the action of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move as an amendment, Mr. President, to strike out, in line 19, the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and to insert "who shall also act as counsel," and to strike out, in line 21, the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so that it will read:

Agent, who shall also act as counsel, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator read that again?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have it read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and insert "who shall also act as counsel"; and, in lines 21 and 22, to strike out "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so as to read:

Agent, who shall also act as counsel, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I presume the whole object of that is that the Senator wants the President to appoint the same men who are at present occupying these places. I do not know whom he will appoint. This provision was not framed to get rid of anybody or to put anybody in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think we ought to be considering the question of appointments here. I think it ought to be accepted without any question that the men who have been engaged in this work, who have prepared these cases, and who are, therefore, in a much better position to argue them than any new men could possibly be, ought to be continued until the work is completed.

Mr. BURTON. I want to ask the Senator a question. Is there any doubt of the right of the President to remove these men and appoint others in their places if they shall prove inefficient?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is not the slightest doubt about it. He has a right to remove them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can not accept the amendment. It is the action of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is before the Senate for consideration. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

There were, upon a division—ayes 10, noes 12.

Mr. ROOT, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No quorum has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Overman	Smoot
Borah	James	Owen	Sutherland
Brady	Johnson	Page	Swanson
Bristow	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Kenyon	Reed	Thornton
Burleigh	Kern	Robinson	Tillman
Burton	La Follette	Root	Warren
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	West
Chamberlain	Lewis	Sheppard	White
Clapp	McCumber	Shively	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Culberson	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators answering to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to make a slight change in the amendment I suggested. Instead of saying "agent, who shall also act as counsel," I desire to make it read "counsel, who shall also act as agent."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] desires to submit some resolutions. If there is no objection, I ask to have the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator asks to have the bill go over until to-morrow?

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill and the amendment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF FORMER VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to make the announcement set forth in the first of the resolutions which I send to the desk, and I ask for the adoption of it and the accompanying resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Senator from Illinois submits resolutions, which will be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 395.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound regret of the death of Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, former Vice President of the United States and former presiding officer of the United States Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the distinguished official, whose life has been filled with honorable and distinguished service to his Nation, the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate thereupon, in accordance with the second resolution (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 16, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 15, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we recognize that Thou art the giver of every good and perfect gift. We thank Thee for our country and for the flag that symbolizes liberty and equality. We thank Thee, our Father, that it flies to-day over a united people. We pray Thee that we may live up to the highest ideals of our fathers and to the best of the knowledge of to-day, and so do Thy holy will. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 13, 1914, was read and approved.

THE FLAG.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, while Sunday, June 14, 1914, was flag day, the general observance of it takes place to-day. I take this occasion to put into the RECORD a brief but beautiful and touching tribute to the Stars and Stripes.

In response to some requests, I recently sent out copies of Wilbur D. Nesbit's poem, entitled "Your Flag and My Flag," which I recited during the debate on the Mexican question on April 20, after the President had read his message.

In acknowledgment of the receipt of those verses comes to me a letter from an old soldier and constituent of mine in New Haven, Conn., which I deem worthy of a permanent place among the patriotic gems dedicated to the flag. May the simple, fervid words touch a responsive chord in every true American heart. The letter is written by George A. Hubbard, and is as follows:

179 DWIGHT STREET, NEW HAVEN, CONN.,
June 10, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS L. REILLY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Thank you for the copy of "Your Flag and My Flag," which came on the afternoon mail. I have read the verses—yes, I have read them over again; in fact, I have read them several times, and I hope to keep on reading them for many times to come. The poem appears to possess qualities which do not tire one. I love the flag.

My great-grandsire gave his life to help create the flag. My paternal grandsire fought from Bunker Hill to Yorktown, and my maternal grandsire, after his father's death, took his place in the ranks and held it until the close of the war.

I stood by my regimental colors when first unfurled in 1862 and never left them, but after the battle of Fort Fisher, N. C., in 1865, my regiment closed its ranks and left me out. Most of the time since then "our flag" has hung on the bedpost above my head, where in the dusk of evening I have kissed the flag and in the bright sunlight of morning I have saluted the flag. I have caressed the flag, I have hugged the flag, I have counted its bars and counted its stars over and over again, for I love our flag.

Very truly, yours, GEORGE A. HUBBARD.

[Applause.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last I submitted a conference report upon the naval appropriation bill, accompanied by a statement of the conferees, for printing in the RECORD under the rules. By some inadvertence the statement was not printed in the RECORD, although it is printed as a separate document in connection with the conference report. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be printed in the RECORD of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the matter was sent to the Printing Office, and by some slip down there it was left out. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have the statement printed in the RECORD, under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the conference report and the statement be printed together in the RECORD.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well. I will ask that the statement and the conference report be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the conference report and the statement be printed together in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. To-day is unanimous-consent day, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT NEWCASTLE, IND.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11317) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind., be, and the same is hereby, increased $15,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet the additional cost of construction of said building by the substitution of stone instead of brick with stone trimmings, as specified in the existing specification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAYMENT UNDER RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4628) extending the period of payment under reclamation projects and for other purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I call attention of the House to the fact that this bill was read on last unanimous-consent day, and I now ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person whose lands hereafter become subject to the terms and conditions of the act approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, hereafter to be referred to as the reclamation law, and any person who hereafter makes entry thereunder shall at the time of making water-right application or entry, as the case may be, pay into the reclamation fund 2 per cent of the construction charge fixed for his land as an initial installment, and shall pay the balance of said charge in 15 annual installments, the first 5 of which shall be 5 per cent of the construction charge and the remainder 7 per cent until the whole amount shall have been paid. The first of the annual installments shall become due and payable on December 1 of the fifth calendar year after the initial installment: Provided, That any water-right applicant or entryman may, if he so elects, pay the whole or any part of the construction charges owing by him within any shorter period: Provided further, That entry may be made whenever water is available, and the initial payment be made when the charge per acre is established.

ACT SHALL APPLY TO EXISTING PROJECTS.

SEC. 2. That any person whose land or entry has heretofore become subject to the terms and conditions of the reclamation law shall pay the construction charge, or the portion of the construction charge remaining unpaid, in 20 annual installments, the first of which shall become due and payable on December 1 of the year in which the public notice affecting his land is issued under this act and subsequent installments on December 1 of each year thereafter. The first 4 of such installments shall each be 2 per cent, the next 2 installments shall each be 4 per cent, and the next 14 each 6 per cent of the total construction charge.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 3. That if any water-right applicant or entryman shall fail to pay any installment of his construction charges when due, there shall be added to the amount unpaid a penalty of 1 per cent thereof, and there shall be added a like penalty of 1 per cent of the amount unpaid on the first day of each month thereafter so long as such default shall continue. If any such applicant or entryman shall be one year in default in the payment of any installment of the construction charges and penalties, or any part thereof, his water-right application, and if he be a homestead entryman his entry also, shall be subject to cancellation, and all payments made by him forfeited to the reclamation fund, but no homestead entry shall be subject to contest because of such default: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall so elect, he may cause suit or action to be brought for the recovery of the amount in default and penalties; but if suit or action be brought, the right to declare a cancellation and forfeiture shall be suspended pending such suit or action.

INCREASE OF CHARGES.

SEC. 4. That no increase in the construction charges shall hereafter be made, after the same have been fixed by public notice, except by agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and a majority of the water-right applicants and entrymen to be affected by such increase, whereupon all water-right applicants and entrymen in the area proposed to be affected by the increased charge shall become subject thereto. Such increased charge shall be added to the construction charge and payment thereof distributed over the remaining unpaid installments of construction charges: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may agree that such increased construction charge shall be paid in additional annual installments, each of which shall be at least equal to the amount of the largest installment as fixed for the project by the public notice theretofore issued. And such additional installments of the increased construction charge, as so agreed upon, shall become due and payable on December 1 of each year subsequent to the year when the final installment of the construction charge under such public notice is due and payable: Provided further, That all such increased construction charges shall be subject to the same conditions, penalties, and suit or action as provided in section 3 of this act.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE.

SEC. 5. That in addition to the construction charge, every water-right applicant, entryman, or landowner under or upon a reclamation project shall also pay, whenever water service is available for the irrigation of his land, an operation and maintenance charge based upon the total cost of operation and maintenance of the project, or each separate unit thereof, and such charge shall be made for each acre-foot of water delivered; but each acre of irrigable land, whether irrigated or not, shall be charged with a minimum maintenance and operation charge based upon the charge for delivery of not less than one acre-foot of water: Provided, That, whenever any legally organized water users' association or irrigation district shall so request, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer to such water users' association or irrigation district the care, operation, and maintenance of all or any part of the project works, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. If the total amount of operation and maintenance charges and penalties collected for any one irrigation season on any project shall exceed the cost of operation and maintenance of the project during that irrigation season, the balance shall be applied to a reduction of the charge on the project for the next irrigation season, and any deficit incurred may likewise be added to the charge for the next irrigation season.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 6. That all operation and maintenance charges shall become due and payable on the date fixed for each project by the Secreary of the Interior, and if such charge is paid on or before the date when due there shall be a discount of 5 per cent of such charge; but if such charge is unpaid on the first day of the third calendar month thereafter, a penalty of 1 per cent of the amount unpaid shall be added thereto, and thereafter an additional penalty of 1 per cent of the amount unpaid shall be added on the first day of each calendar month if such charge and penalties shall remain unpaid, and no water shall be delivered to the lands of any water-right applicant or entryman who shall be in arrears for more than one calendar year for the payment of any charge for operation and maintenance, or any annual construction charge and penalties. If any water-right applicant or entryman shall be one year in default in the payment of any charge for operation and maintenance and penalties, or any part thereof, his water-right application, and if he be a homestead entryman his entry also, shall be subject to cancellation, and all payments made by him forfeited to the reclamation fund. In the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior suit or action may be brought for the amounts in default and penalties in like manner as provided in section 3 of this act.

FISCAL AGENT.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to designate and appoint, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the legally organized water users' association or irrigation district, under any reclamation project, as the fiscal agent of the United States to collect the annual payments on the construction charge of the project and the annual charges for operation and maintenance and all penalties: Provided, That no water-right applicant or entryman shall be entitled to credit for any payment thus made until the same shall have been paid over to an officer designated by the Secretary of the Interior to receive the same.

RECLAMATION REQUIREMENTS.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations governing the irrigation of the lands within any project, and may require the reclamation for agricultural purposes and the cultivation of one-fourth the irrigable area under each water-right application or entry within three full irrigation seasons after the filing of water-right application or entry, and the reclamation for agricultural purposes and the cultivation of one-half the irrigable area within five full irrigation seasons after the filing of the water-right application or entry, and shall provide for continued compliance with such requirements. Failure on the part of any water-right applicant or entryman to comply with such requirements shall render his application or entry subject to cancellation.

LANDS NOT SUBJECT TO RECLAMATION ACT.

SEC. 9. That in all cases where application for water right for lands in private ownership or lands held under entries not subject to the reclamation law shall not be made within one year after the passage of this act, or within one year after notice issued in pursuance of section 4 of the reclamation act, in cases where such notice has not heretofore been issued, the construction charges for such land shall be increased 5 per cent each year until such application is made and an initial installment is paid.

WITHDRAWN LANDS SUBJECT TO ENTRY.

SEC. 10. That the act of Congress approved February 18, 1911, entitled "An act to amend section 5 of the act of Congress of June 25, 1910, entitled 'An act to authorize advances to the reclamation fund and for the issuance and disposal of certificates of indebtedness in reimbursement therefor, and for other purposes,'" be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That no entry shall be hereafter made and no entryman shall be permitted to go upon lands reserved for irrigation purposes until the Secretary of the Interior shall have established the unit of acreage per entry, and water is ready to be delivered for the land in such unit or some part thereof and such fact has been announced by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That where entries made prior to June 25, 1910, have been or may be relinquished, in whole or in part, the lands so relinquished shall be subject to settlement and entry under the reclamation law."

WATER SERVICE.

SEC. 11. That whenever water is available and it is impracticable to apportion operation and maintenance charges as provided in section 5 of this act, the Secretary of the Interior may, prior to giving public notice of the construction charge per acre upon land under any project, furnish water to any entryman or private landowner thereunder until such notice is given, making a reasonable charge therefor, and such charges shall be subject to the same penalties and to the provisions for cancellation and collection as herein provided for other operation and maintenance charges.

ADMISSION OF PRIVATE LANDOWNERS TO NEW PROJECTS.

SEC. 12. That before any contract is let or work begun for the construction of any reclamation project hereafter adopted the Secretary of the Interior shall require the owners of private lands thereunder to agree to dispose of all lands in excess of the area which he shall deem sufficient for the support of a family upon the land in question, upon such terms and at not to exceed such price as the Secretary of the Interior may designate; and if any landowner shall refuse to agree to the requirements fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, his land shall not be included within the project if adopted for construction.

DISPOSITION OF EXCESS FARM UNITS.

SEC. 13. That all entries under reclamation projects containing more than one farm unit shall be reduced in area and conformed to a single farm unit within two years after making proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation, or within two years after the issuance of a farm-unit plat for the project, if the same issues subsequent to the making of such proof: Provided, That such proof is made within four years from the date as announced by the Secretary of the Interior that water is available for delivery to the land. Any entryman failing within the period herein provided to dispose of the excess of his entry above one farm unit, in the manner provided by law, and to conform his entry to a single farm unit shall render his entry subject to cancellation as to the excess above one farm unit: Provided, That upon compliance with the provisions of law such entryman shall be entitled to receive a patent for that part of his entry which conforms to one farm unit as established for the project: Provided further, That no person shall hold by assignment more than one farm unit prior to final payment of all charges for all the land held by him subject to the reclamation law, except operation and maintenance charges not then due.

ACCEPTANCE OF THIS ACT.

SEC. 14. That any person whose land or entry has heretofore become subject to the reclamation law, who desires to secure the benefits of the extension of the period of payments provided by this act, shall, within six months after the issuance of the first public notice hereunder affecting his land or entry, notify the Secretary of the Interior in the manner to be prescribed by said Secretary, of his acceptance of all of the terms and conditions of this act, and thereafter his lands or entry shall be subject to all of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

SEC. 16. That the district court of the United States for the district where the lands or some portion of the lands included within any reclamation project are situated shall have jurisdiction of all suits brought by the United States or the Secretary of the Interior for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and jurisdiction of all suits now pending or which may be hereafter instituted by any legally organized water users' association or irrigation district in behalf of the water users and settlers thereon for the enforcement of the provisions of this act and of the provisions of the reclamation law as referred to and defined in section 1 of this act.

On page 7, in line 16, strike out the words "one-fourth" and insert the words "one-half," and in line 20 strike out the words "one-half" and insert the words "three-fourths."

On page 10, in line 14, after the word "delivery," strike out the word "to" and insert the word "for."

On pages 11 and 12, strike out all of section 16.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is now before the Committee on Rules, and that committee is preparing a rule to give consideration to the bill as it should be given. It is a very important measure. It has a good many good things in it, but there are some matters that need modification. The bill should not be considered by unanimous consent, because no opportunity is given for the modification of the bill as it ought to be modified, and therefore I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment until I can make a statement in respect to the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my objection temporarily, but I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement, which I believe should be made in justice to a number of Members of this House from the arid-land States. Recently a number of Members from States in which Federal reclamation projects are located received letters and telegrams from water users' associations and settlers on the projects urging them to greater activity in behalf of the reclamation extension bill. Many of these letters and telegrams were of such a character as to impugn the good faith, the industry, and watchfulness of the Members to whom they were sent, and all of them were evidently inspired by the same person. The insinuations which they contained were so grossly unfair and unjust that I have undertaken to ascertain, if possible, their source, in order that I might expose the despicable methods used to discredit among their constituents at least a score of men on both sides of this Chamber.

I have secured a copy of a letter which discloses the reason why Members have received these letters and telegrams. Unfortunately the bushwhacker who made this attack has succeeded in having his name concealed on the plea that the information given was confidential in its nature. The letter was addressed to the secretary of the Sunnyside Water Users' Association, in the State of Washington. It is not necessary for me to read the letter in full, but I shall quote from it in part:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1914.

Mr. G. E. RODMAN,
Sunnyside Water Users' Association, Sunnyside, Wash.

DEAR MR. RODMAN: I wired you, night rate, to-day, in accordance with the inclosed confirmation. I am sending you also, by separate wrapper, a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the matters of interest being found on pages 9524–9527.

* * * * * * *

Somebody needs stirring up badly. Every Representative from the 17 reclamation States should have been there and should have been active in the support of this measure. If the Representatives whose constituents are interested will insist upon immediate hearing, I believe that the opposition will fall away. You can see, however, for yourself that the condition is one of apathy, even on the part of men within the 17 States interested. * * *

What you need is, as stated in my wire, somebody on the ground who can push this matter actively. A fund should be raised for the purpose of supporting a man to represent the interests of the water users at Washington until the bill shall become a law or until the matter is beyond hope. Unless there is a general shaking of dry bones, this measure has no chance of success. * * *

I wish you would have 500 telegrams properly distributed signed by actual water users as well as by organizations.

* * * * * * *

Then the man who goes on should be armed with letters from associations wanting him to find out why their Representatives are going to sleep on the job. He should be supported by wires direct to the Congressmen like this: "Were you in the House of Representatives on May 18 supporting reclamation relief measure? Don't see your picture in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Wire, our expense." Wake somebody up. Or, "We are keeping a line on the Representatives who do not seem to care whether the reclamation relief bill passes. What can you do to insist upon its coming to a vote?"

* * * * * * *

If 30 projects can't muster sufficient energy and cohesiveness to raise, say, $1,000 for expenses, travel, postage, correspondence, dispatches, etc., they don't deserve a great deal of sympathy.

At the mention of this sum of money some Members have been unkind enough to wonder whether if in this secretive adviser might not be found another Col. Mulhall, who, for a suitable consideration, would consent to adopt this poor, orphaned measure and who would promise that under his lobbying care it would eventually reach the place where all good bills hope to go and become a law. It is said there are men who would stoop to deceive unsuspecting settlers in order to obtain the price of a meal ticket.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand this letter was sent out anonymously or was signed?

Mr. HAYDEN. The letter was signed, but on the plea it was confidential in its nature the signature was not printed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman from Arizona know the name of the writer?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not aware of the name of the writer. He says:

Please excuse the possibly dictatorial style of this letter. I feel strongly that the bill is needed, and only want results. You asked for my advice. You have it, anyhow. You will of course, as before, treat the source of the information I am giving you as confidential. Hastily.

And then it is signed in blank.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the gentleman will conclude that the gentleman who wrote that was interested in a reclamation project?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is evident that he has not a very intimate knowledge of the situation here.

Mr. MONDELL. Or would the gentleman conclude he was interested in getting a job?

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, we might suspect as much.

Mr. MANN. Did the telegrams come?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. I shall read you one in a moment.

Mr. MANN. Ought not that to be investigated? Do these people have any right to send telegrams to Members of Congress?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no doubt about water users having the right to send telegrams to Members of Congress, but they ought not to be deceived into sending them by any such false information.

Mr. MANN. I wonder that the gentleman does not have a resolution introduced for another investigation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I suppose those of us from the Western States who did not receive the telegrams were here so constantly that our pictures would appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman consider this an insidious lobby?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not an authority on insidious lobbies.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understand the gentleman is stating that somebody is writing here because we have not been able to pass this bill by unanimous consent, and therefore the western Members are not doing their duty here. That is about the inference to be placed upon it.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think there is any doubt about the western Members doing their duty. I think I can certify to that, and I have not been very favorable to this bill myself, but the question is more far-reaching than that. This same proposition and scheme goes on in our State all the time, somebody trying to frame up an attorney's fee by stirring up a back fire at home. I think the gentleman from Arizona ought to try to find out who it was and haul him over the coals. This is just exactly what is going on all the time.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think it wise to postpone this until we can find out about this?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman has decided that by his objection. By way of explanation, I would state that May 18 was the day upon which an effort was made to secure consideration of the reclamation-extension bill on the Calendar of Unanimous Consent. I was present in the House during the entire day, and to my personal knowledge practically all of the Members of Congress who represent districts containing reclamation projects were in attendance during the discussion on this bill. Every western member of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands was present except our chairman, Hon. W. R. SMITH, of Texas, who was compelled to be absent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, the acting chairman, and Mr. RAKER, of California, both spoke briefly on the bill, and their remarks appear in the RECORD.

Mr. STOUT, of Montana, was present and later addressed the House in behalf of a bill granting leaves of absence to homestead settlers.

Personally I addressed the Chair on a bill to authorize the consolidation of Indian funds, and my name appears on the same page in the RECORD on which the reclamation-extension bill is printed. And while I am speaking of myself, permit me to say that the activities of this modest marplot who shoots from ambush have been of no annoyance to me. I have received but one telegram, which was an inquiry as to whether it was necessary for the Arizona water users to send a representative here, and to which I replied that to do so would be a useless expense.

Mr. KINKAID, of Nebraska; Mr. ROBERTS, of Nevada; Mr. SMITH, of Idaho; Mr. JOHNSON, of Utah; and Mr. SINNOTT, of Oregon, the minority members of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, were all present in the House and were doing everything that they could on the other side of the big aisle to secure consideration for the bill.

Mr. FERGUSSON, of New Mexico, sat near me while the bill was under discussion, and, as always, stood ready and willing to render any service within his power.

The mere fact that the names of these gentlemen and the names of other Members from the public-land States do not appear in the RECORD gave this "confidential" correspondent an apportunity to insinuate that they were absent from the House and neglecting their duties.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman will remember the regular order was called for, and that precluded further debate.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called for the regular order no one could speak——

Mr. SINNOTT. A committee was formed on this side of the Chamber to interview various Members who it was thought might possibly object to the consideration of the bill. This committee consisted of Congressmen KINKAID of Nebraska, LA FOLLETTE, and myself, and in addition to that my colleague, Mr. HAWLEY, was similarly active when the bill was up for consideration.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Oregon say to the House he understands they formed a combination, so that no Member of the House would object to giving opportunity for the consideration of this bill? That is worse than an insidious lobby.

Mr. SINNOTT. It was merely a committee of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and Mr. LA FOLLETTE, of Washington.

Mr. HAYDEN. In my brief service in the House I find that its membership can be roughly divided into two classes, those who talk and those who work. There are a few geniuses among us of such transcendent ability that they can perform both of these functions successfully at all times. The great majority of us, however, find that service in this House consists principally of hard work, and therefore have but little time to indulge in speech making. Anyone in the slightest degree acquainted with the parliamentary procedure on unanimous-consent days knows that it would not only have been useless, but impossible, for all of the Members from the States containing reclamation projects to speak on the bill at that time. Each and every one of them could have torn a passion to tatters with perfervid oratory without in the least changing the result. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called for the regular order on the reclamation-extension bill no further debate was possible. The man who sent out this letter stating that mere talk on the part of the western Members could have affected the result is either a knave or an ignoramus, and, whichever he is, his conduct is equally reprehensible.

On receipt of this letter Mr. Rodman, without any attempt to verify the statements contained in it, immediately rushed to a printing office and had copies made for distribution among the water users of the entire West. With it he sent out the following letter:

SUNNYSIDE, WASH., May 26, 1914.

To the water users' associations:

More information as to the opposition to the reclamation-extension bill impels us to urge the various associations to take prompt and vigorous action in favor of the bill, if they have not done so. Below are copies of the latest advices; as they are confidential, the name of the author is withheld. They come from a western man who has been in Washington, D. C., now for some weeks and is thoroughly in touch with the situation, and we have full confidence that he is representing the condition as it actually exists.

Thoroughly in touch with the situation, forsooth! And yet there is not a particle of truth in his letter that any water user could not have obtained by reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD when it reached him on his own farm, 2,000 miles away from Washington. All that this evil-minded individual did was to read the RECORD here in Washington and then write a letter about it, in which he warped and twisted the facts to suit his own base purposes. It is evident that he was not present in the gallery when this bill was under consideration, nor did he take the trouble to inquire of any member of the committee as to the actual situation.

But, to go on with Mr. Rodman's epistle to the water users:

This bill came up in the House on the 18th instant on unanimous consent. From a perusal of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day it appears that of all the Representatives from the 17 reclamation States only 4 supported the bill—Mr. RAKER, California; Mr. TAYLOR, Colorado; Mr. GARNER, Texas; and Mr. MONDELL, Wyoming. What were the others doing, and why did they not speak up in favor of the bill? The associations should make it their business to find out. The Sunnyside Water Users' Association has already sent a telegram to three of our Representatives asking them to state what they did in favor of the bill. A copy of the message appears below. * * *

The message is as follows:

SUNNYSIDE, WASH., May 25, 1914.

Two thousand water users on Sunnyside project want to know what you did on May 18 in support of reclamation-extension bill in House. Are depending on you to bring it to a vote. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day does not show what you did. Telegraph our expense.

G. E. RODMAN.

It is amazing to me that Mr. Rodman would be willing to accept as gospel truth the vaporings of a man who is ashamed of his identity and to scatter broadcast a mess of misinformation that could result in nothing but unwarranted uneasiness among thousands of settlers whose future prosperity is bound up in the success of the reclamation-extension act. God knows the lot of the pioneer is hard enough without adding unnecessary worry. Mr. Rodman must have a very sad view of life if he is willing to believe on anybody's statement that a majority of the western Congressmen are utterly unmindful of the welfare of those who sent them here. He should make a sincere effort to cultivate a more Christian spirit.

I deny that there has been the least apathy on the part of the Representatives from the 17 States affected by the reclamation-extension bill. Every one of them has exerted his best efforts to bring the bill to a vote. The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands directed that a subcommittee be appointed to call upon the Speaker, and I am glad to say that we found him most willing to assist us. The majority and minority leaders have both been interviewed. Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. MANN are agreed that this bill should be considered at this session of Congress. We have talked with the President, and he has publicly stated that it ought to pass. And, lastly, we have circulated petitions among the membership of this House requesting the Rules Committee to report a special rule making the consideration of this bill in order along with four other measures that vitally affect the prosperity of the entire West. On these petitions we have secured the signatures of a clear majority of the membership of this House, and last Wednesday the Committee on Rules ordered a favorable report on such a rule.

As soon as the pending sundry civil appropriation bill is out of the way and the water-power bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has been made the unfinished business of the House, is passed, our special rule will be reported to the House.

We believe in this bill and we have faith that when an opportunity is given us to explain its merits a large majority of the membership of this House will be glad to vote for it. At no time has anyone from the West sought to avoid the issue, and through our combined efforts a vote on the bill is in sight. We will pass the reclamation-extension bill through the House before the 15th of next July, and the President will approve it before this Congress adjourns. If this is apathy the anonymous westerner who is so "thoroughly in touch with the situation" can make the most of it. I only regret that Mr. Rodman has not seen fit to make known his correspondent's name, since it would afford me vast pleasure to denounce him in the terms that his infamy merits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF LANDOWNERS ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13581) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and in the parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. QUIN. On the calendar, I mean.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the object of that?

Mr. QUIN. It is to retain my place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed on the calendar without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object to find out why the gentleman wishes it passed without prejudice.

Mr. QUIN. They had this matter up in the Senate, the same proposition, and I would like it to remain on this calendar until it is determined. The Senate rivers and harbors bill has a partial amendment, and I do not know what will be the result of the consideration in the Senate proper.

Mr. MANN. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15222) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries or occupational diseases in the course of their employment, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter specified for the disability or death of an employee resulting from a personal injury sustained in the course of his employment, and for the disability, death, or suspension from work of an employee resulting from an occupational disease contracted in the course of his employment; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury, death, or occupational disease is caused by the employee's intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another.

SEC. 2. That during the first three days of disability the employee shall not be entitled to compensation except as provided in section 10. No compensation shall at any time be paid for such period.

SEC. 3. That if the disability is total the United States shall pay to the disabled employee during such disability a monthly compensation equal to 66⅔ per cent of his monthly pay.

SEC. 4. That if the disability is partial the United States shall pay to the disabled employee during such disability a monthly compensation equal to 66⅔ per cent of the difference between his monthly pay and his monthly wage-earning capacity after the beginning of such partial disability. The commission may, from time to time, require a partially disabled employee to make an affidavit as to the wages which he is then receiving. In such affidavit the employee shall include a statement of the value of housing, board, lodging, and other advantages which are received from the employer as a part of his remuneration and which can be estimated in money. If the employee, when required, fails to make such affidavit, he shall not be entitled to any compensation while such failure continues, and the period of such failure shall be deducted from the period during which compensation is payable to him.

SEC. 5. That if a partially disabled employee refuses to work after suitable work is furnished to or secured for him by the United States he shall not be entitled to any compensation while such refusal continues, and the period of such refusal shall be deducted from the period during which compensation is payable to him.

SEC. 6. That if, as a result of any examination authorized by section 23, any employee is found to have contracted any occupational disease he may, in the discretion of the commission, although not disabled, be suspended from work, or, if practicable, given other work which he may be physically able to do until such time as, in the opinion of the commission, it is safe for him to return to his regular work. During such suspension or substitute employment the United States, if he has contracted the disease in the course of his employment, shall pay to him a monthly compensation as for total or partial disability, as the case may be.

SEC. 7. That the monthly compensation for total disability or for suspension from work shall not be more than $66.67 nor less than $33.33, unless the employee's monthly pay is less than $33.33, in which case his monthly compensation shall be the full amount of his monthly pay. The monthly compensation for partial disability shall not be more than $66.67. In the case of persons who at the time of the injury or of the beginning of disability or suspension from work resulting from an occupational disease were minors or employed in a learner's capacity and who were not physically or mentally defective, the commission shall, on any review after the time when the monthly wage-earning capacity of such persons would probably, but for the injury or disease, have increased, award compensation based on such probable monthly wage-earning capacity. The commission may, on any review after the time when the monthly wage-earning capacity of the disabled employee would probably, irrespective of the injury or disease, have decreased on account of old age, award compensation based on such probable monthly wage-earning capacity.

SEC. 8. That as long as the employee is in receipt of compensation under this act, or, if he has been paid a lump sum in commutation of installment payments, until the expiration of the period during which such installment payments would have continued, he shall not receive from the United States any salary, pay, or remuneration whatsoever except in return for services actually performed, and except pensions.

SEC. 9. That if at the time the disability or suspension from work begins the employee has annual or sick leave to his credit he may, subject to the approval of the head of the department, use such leave until it is exhausted, in which case his compensation shall, in the case of suspension from work, begin immediately after the annual or sick leave has ceased, and, in the case of disability, begin on the fourth day of disability after the annual or sick leave has ceased.

SEC. 10. That immediately after an injury sustained by an employee in the course of his employment, whether or not disability has arisen, and for a reasonable time thereafter, and immediately after the beginning of disability or of suspension from work due to an occupational disease contracted by an employee in the course of his employment, and for a reasonable time thereafter, the United States shall furnish to such employee reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies unless he refuses to accept them. Such services and supplies shall be furnished by United States medical officers and hospitals, but where this is not practicable shall be furnished by private physicians and hospitals designated or approved by the commission and paid for from the employees' compensation fund. If necessary for the securing of proper medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, the employee, in the discretion of the commission, may be furnished transportation at the expense of the employees' compensation fund.

SEC. 11. That if death results from the injury or from the occupational disease within six years after the injury or the beginning of disability or suspension from work due to such disease the United States shall pay to the following persons for the following periods a monthly compensation equal to the following percentages of the deceased employee's monthly pay, subject to the modification that no compensation shall be paid where the death takes place more than one year after the cessation of disability resulting from such injury, or of disability or suspension from work resulting from such disease, or, if there has been no disability preceding death, more than one year after the injury:

(A) To the widow, if there is no child, 35 per cent. This compensation shall be paid until her death or marriage. In case of marriage, there shall be paid to her a lump sum equal to 36 months' compensation.

(B) To the widower, if there is no child, 35 per cent if wholly dependent for support upon the deceased employee at the time of her death, and such proportionate amount as the commission deems proper if partly dependent. This compensation shall be paid until his death or marriage.

(C) To the widow or widower, if there is a child, the compensation payable under clause (A) or clause (B) and in addition thereto 10 per cent for each child, not to exceed a total of 66⅔ per cent for such widow or widower and children. The compensation payable on account of any child shall cease when he dies, marries, or reaches the age of 18, or, if over 18, and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support.

(D) To the children, if there is no widow or widower, 25 per cent for one child and 10 per cent additional for each additional child, not to exceed a total of 66⅔ per cent, divided among such children share and share alike. The compensation of each child shall be paid until he dies, marries, or reaches the age of 18, or if over 18 and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support. The compensation of a child under legal age shall be paid to its guardian.

(E) To the parents, if one is wholly dependent for support upon the deceased employee at the time of his death and the other is not dependent to any extent, 25 per cent; if both are wholly dependent, 20 per cent to each; if one is or both are partly dependent, a proportionate amount in the discretion of the commission.

The above percentages shall be paid if there is no widow, widower, or child. If there is a widow, widower, or child, there shall be paid so much of the above percentages as, when added to the total percentages payable to the widow, widower, and children, will not exceed a total of 66⅔ per cent.

(F) To the brothers, sisters, grandparents, and grandchildren, if one is wholly dependent upon the deceased employee for support at the time of his death, 20 per cent; if more than one are wholly dependent, 30 per cent, divided among them share and share alike; if there is no one of them wholly dependent, but one or more partly dependent, 10 per cent divided among them share and share alike.

The above percentages shall be paid if there is no widow, widower, child, or dependent parent. If there is a widow widower, child, or dependent parent, there shall be paid so much of the above percentages as, when added to the total percentage payable to the widow, widower, children, and dependent parents, will not exceed a total of 66⅔ per cent.

(G) The compensation of each beneficiary under clauses (E) and (F) shall be paid for a period of eight years from the time of the death, unless before that time he, if a parent or grandparent, dies, marries, or ceases to be dependent, or, if a brother, sister, or grandchild, dies, marries, or reaches the age of 18, or, if over 18 and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support. The compensation of a brother, sister, or grandchild under legal age shall be paid to his or her guardian.

(H) As used in this section, the term "child" includes stepchildren, adopted children, and posthumous children, but does not include married children. The terms "brother" and "sister" include stepbrothers and stepsisters, half brothers and half sisters, and brothers and sisters by adoption, but do not include married brothers or married sisters. All of the above terms and the term "grandchild" include only persons who at the time of the death of the deceased employee are under 18 years of age or over that age and incapable of self-support. The term "parent" includes step-parents and parents by adoption. The term "widow" includes only the decedent's wife living with or dependent for support upon him at the time of his death. The term "widower" includes only the decedent's husband dependent for support upon her at the time of her death.

(I) Upon the cessation of compensation under this section to or on account of any person, the compensation of the remaining persons entitled to compensation for the unexpired part of the period during which their compensation is payable shall be that which such persons would have received if they had been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the decedent's death.

(J) In case there are two or more classes of persons entitled to compensation under this section and the apportionment of such compensation, above provided, would result in injustice, the commission may, in its discretion, modify the apportionment to meet the requirements of the case.

(K) In computing compensation under this section the monthly pay shall be considered not to be more than $100 nor less than $50, but the total monthly compensation shall not exceed the monthly pay computed as provided in section 13.

SEC. 12. That if death results from the injury or from the occupational disease within six years after the injury or the beginning of disability or suspension from work due to such disease, the United States shall pay to the personal representative of the deceased employee burial expenses not to exceed $100, in the discretion of the commission. In the case of an employee whose home is within the United States, if his death occurs away from his home office or outside of the United States, and if so desired by his relatives, the body shall, in the discretion of the commission, be embalmed and transported in a hermetically sealed casket to the home of the employee. Such burial expenses shall not be paid and such transportation shall not be furnished where the death takes place more than one year after the cessation of disability resulting from such injury, or of disability or suspension from work resulting from such disease, or if there has been no disability preceding death, more than one year after the injury.

SEC. 13. That in computing the monthly pay the usual practice of the service in which the employee was employed shall be followed. Subsistence and the value of quarters furnished an employee shall be included as part of the pay, but overtime pay shall not be taken into account.

SEC. 14. That in the determination of the employee's monthly wage-earning capacity after the beginning of partial disability, the value of housing, board, lodging, and other advantages which are received from his employer as a part of his remuneration and which can be estimated in money shall be taken into account.

SEC. 15. That in cases of death or of permanent total or permanent partial disability, if the monthly payment to the beneficiary is less than $5 a month, or if the beneficiary is or is about to become a nonresident of the United States, or if the commission determines that it is for the best interests of the beneficiary, the liability of the United States for compensation to such beneficiary may be discharged by the payment of a lump sum equal to the present value of all future payments of compensation computed at 4 per cent true discount compounded annually. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the National Fraternal Congress table; but in case of compensation to the widow or widower of the deceased employee, such lump sum shall not exceed 60 months' compensation. The probability of the happening of any other contingency affecting the amount or duration of the compensation shall be disregarded.

SEC. 16. That every employee injured in the course of his employment, or some one on his behalf, shall, within 48 hours after the injury give written notice thereof to the immediate superior of the employee. Such notice shall be given by delivering it personally or by depositing it properly stamped and addressed in the mail.

SEC. 17. That the notice shall state the name and address of the employee, the year, month, day, and hour when and the particular locality where the injury occurred, and the cause and nature of the injury, and shall be signed by and contain the address of the person giving the notice.

SEC. 18. That unless notice is given within the time specified or unless the immediate superior has actual knowledge of the injury, no compensation shall be allowed, but for any reasonable cause shown the commission may allow compensation if the notice is filed within one year after the injury.

SEC. 19. That no compensation under this act shall be allowed to any person, except as provided in section 41, unless he or some one on his behalf shall, within the time specified in section 21, make a written claim therefor. Such claim shall be made by delivering it at the office of the commission or to any commissioner or to any person whom the commission may by regulation designate, or by depositing it in the mail properly stamped and addressed to the commission or to any person whom the commission may by regulation designate.

SEC. 20. That every claim shall be made on forms to be furnished by the commission and shall contain all the information required by the commission. Each claim shall be sworn to by the person entitled to compensation or by the person acting on his behalf, and, except in case of death, shall be accompanied by a certificate of the employee's physician stating the nature of the injury or disease and the nature and probable extent of the disability. For any reasonable cause shown the commission may waive the provisions of this section.

SEC. 21. That all original claims for compensation for disability resulting from injury shall be made within 60 days after the injury. All original claims for compensation for disability or suspension from work resulting from occupational disease shall be made within 60 days after the beginning of the disability or suspension. All original claims for compensation for death shall be made within one year after the death. For any reasonable cause shown the commission may allow original claims for compensation for disability resulting from injury or occupational disease to be made at any time within one year.

SEC. 22. That any person seeking to enter the service of the United States shall, if so requested by the commission, submit himself, at a reasonable time and place, to examination by a medical officer of the United States, or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the commission. If, in the opinion of the examining physician, such person exhibits symptoms of an occupational disease, or by reason of his condition is peculiarly likely to sustain an injury or to contract an occupational disease, the physician shall so certify to the appointing officer, and such person shall not be appointed to any position for which he is adjudged on the basis of such examination to be unfitted.

SEC. 23. That any employee employed in or about any work or process in which he is subject to the risk of contracting an occupational disease shall from time to time, if so ordered by the commission, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the commission for the purpose of determining whether or not he has contracted such disease.

SEC. 24. That after the injury or after disability or suspension from work on account of an occupational disease the employee shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the commission. The employee may have a duly qualified physician designated and paid by him present to participate in such examination. For all examinations after the first the employee shall, in the discretion of the commission, be paid his reasonable traveling and other expenses and loss of wages incurred in order to submit to such examination. If the employee refuses to submit himself for or in any way obstructs any examination, his right to claim compensation under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases. No compensation shall be payable while such refusal or obstruction continues, and the period of such refusal or obstruction shall be deducted from the period for which compensation is payable to him.

SEC. 25. That in case of any disagreement between the physician making an examination on the part of the United States and the employee's physician, the commission shall appoint a third physician, duly qualified, who shall make an examination.

SEC. 26. That fees for examinations made on the part of the United States under sections 22, 23, 24, and 25 by physicians who are not already in the service of the United States shall be fixed by the commission. Such fees, and any sum payable to the employee under section 24, shall be paid out of the appropriation for the work of the commission.

SEC. 27. That immediately after an injury to an employee resulting in his death or in his probable disability, his immediate superior shall make a report to the commission containing such information as the commission may require, and shall thereafter make such supplementary reports as the commission may require.

SEC. 28. That no claims for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

SEC. 29. That no claim for legal services in connection with any claim arising under this act shall be enforceable unless approved by the commission.

SEC. 30. That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this act is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability in some person other than the United States to pay damages therefor, and a beneficiary entitled to compensation from the United States for such injury or death receives, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other person, such beneficiary shall, after deducting the costs of suit and a reasonable attorney's fee, apply the money or other property so received in the following manner:

(A) If his compensation has been paid in whole or in part, he shall refund to the United States the amount of compensation which has been paid by the United States and credit any surplus upon future payments of compensation payable to him. Any amount so refunded to the United States shall be placed to the credit of the employees' compensation fund.

(B) If no compensation has been paid to him by the United States, he shall credit the money or other property so received upon any compensation payable to him by the United States.

SEC. 31. That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the United States employees' compensation commission, and to be composed of three commissioners appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, one of whom shall be designated by the President as chairman. No commissioner shall hold any other office or position under the United States. Each commissioner shall hold office until his successor is appointed and has qualified. Any vacancy occurring shall be filled in the same manner as an original appointment. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year.

SEC. 32. That the commission, or any commissioner by authority of the commission, shall have power to issue subpœnas for and compel the attendance of witnesses, to require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses.

SEC. 33. That the commission shall have such assistants, clerks, and other employees as may be from time to time provided by Congress. They shall be appointed by the commission in the same manner as appointments to the competitive classified civil-service positions.

SEC. 34. That the commission shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary for the work of the commission.

SEC. 35. That the commission is authorized to make necessary rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act, and shall decide all questions arising under this act.

SEC. 36. That the commission shall study the causes of accidents and occupational diseases among the employees covered by this act, and shall from time to time make such recommendations as it may deem proper to the various departments as to the best means of preventing such accidents and occupational diseases.

SEC. 37. That the commission shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report of its work for the preceding fiscal year, including a detailed statement of appropriations and expenditures, a detailed statement showing receipts of and expenditures from the employees' compensation fund, and its recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 38. That for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the work of the commission, including salaries of the commissioners and of such assistants, clerks, and other employees as the commission may deem necessary, and for traveling expenses, expenses of medical examinations under sections 22 to 25, inclusive, reasonable traveling and other expenses and loss of wages payable to employees under section 24, rent and equipment of offices, purchase of books, stationery, and other supplies, printing and binding, to be done at the Government Printing Office, and other necessary expenses.

SEC. 39. That there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be set aside as a separate fund in the Treasury, to be known as the employees' compensation fund. To this fund there shall be added such sums as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the purpose. Such fund, including all additions that may be made to it, is hereby permanently appropriated for the payment of the compensation provided by this act, including the medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies provided by section 10 and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 10 and 12. The commission shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary for the maintenance of the fund.

SEC. 40. That compensation provided by this act may be awarded in such manner as the commission may by regulation determine upon the claim presented by the beneficiary and the report furnished by the immediate superior of the employee and upon such investigation as the commission may deem necessary to discover the facts. Compensation when awarded shall be paid from the employees' compensation fund.

SEC. 41. That if the original claim for compensation has been made within the time specified in section 21, the commission may, at any time, on its own motion or on application, review the award, and, in accordance with the facts found on such review, may end, diminish, or increase the compensation previously awarded, or, if compensation has been refused or discontinued, award compensation.

SEC. 42. That if any compensation is paid under a mistake of law or of fact, the commission shall immediately cancel any award under which such compensation has been paid and shall recover, as far as practicable, any amount which has been so paid. Any amount so recovered shall be placed to the credit of the employees' compensation fund.

SEC. 43. That whoever makes, in any affidavit required under section 4 or in any claim for compensation, any statement, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of perjury and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 44. That wherever used in this act—

The singular includes the plural and the masculine includes the feminine.

The term "employee" includes all civilian officers and employees of the United States and of the Panama Railroad, but includes no others.

The term "commission" shall be taken to refer to the United States employees' compensation commission provided for in section 31.

The term "department" includes the executive departments whose heads are members of the President's Cabinet, and all independent offices, bureaus, boards, or commissions.

The term "physician" includes surgeons.

The term "monthly pay" shall be taken to refer to the monthly pay at the time of the injury or, in case of disability or of suspension from work resulting from an occupational disease, at the time of the beginning of such disability or suspension, unless the employee at the time of the beginning of such disability or suspension is not in the service of the United States, in which case it shall be taken to refer to the monthly pay at the time of his leaving such service.

SEC. 45. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That for injuries occurring prior to July 1, 1914, compensation shall be paid under the law in force at the time of the passage of this act.

SEC. 46. That sections 22, 26, 31 to 38, both inclusive, 44, and 46 of this act shall take effect immediately upon its passage. The remainder of the act shall take effect on July 1, 1914, but shall not apply to disability or death resulting from an injury sustained prior to July 1, 1914, or to disability, suspension from work, or death resulting prior to July 1, 1914, from an occupational disease.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. MANN reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] reserves the right to object.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY], if I may, a question in reference to this bill. First, what differences there are between this bill and the bill that was reported from the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress, I think it was—the Howland bill; second, what differences there are between this bill and the order of the President concerning compensation for injuries on the Canal Zone?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I am not familiar with the bill called the Howland bill. I know this, that the Judiciary Committee have very fully considered this bill. The committee is very well aware that the bill is a lengthy one and that it is important. But in the committee long hearings were held, all parties were heard, and when the committee finally considered the matter it was unanimous, Republicans and Democrats alike reporting this bill to the House. Its provisions have been very carefully considered. It is not experimental. It is not going into some untried field. Twenty-three States of this country have passed legislation similar to this, and this, as a matter of fact, is nothing but the extension of legislation already passed by the Congress. In 1908 you passed a Federal compensation law, and three times since that law has been amended so as to extend it, and it now covers approximately one-quarter of the Government employees. If this bill is not passed so as to cover all the Government employees, it will simply mean that from Congress to Congress an extension will be made from time to time until it is finally accomplished. This bill puts all of the Government employees on a fair and common basis. At present but about one-quarter of the employees are covered by a compensation law. Why should the other three-quarters of the employees be left without any remedy whatever? They are the only class of people in this country or any other advanced commercial country in the world that have no remedy in case of injury from accident or occupational disease contracted or occurring in the public service. An employee in your employment or mine, if injured because of our fault, recovers from us under the common law on grounds of negligence. In other cases he recovers under employers' liability acts and compensation laws that have been passed. All have their remedy in case of injury. But these Government employees to be covered by this bill have no remedy whatever to-day for occupational diseases or accidents incurred in the service. Will the great Government of the United States do less for its faithful employees than private individuals or corporations do for theirs?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Certainly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I may throw some light on the question that was asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to the difference between this bill and the Howland bill, since in the present Congress I introduced the bill that was known in the last Congress as the Howland bill. Without going into details, I may say that the bills are substantially similar, except the schedule of compensation in the McGillicuddy bill is somewhat higher than in the Howland bill, and in addition to accidents, that were the only causes for compensation provided in the Howland bill, there has been added in this measure injuries resulting from occupational diseases.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] to say he was not familiar with the Howland bill. That bill was introduced in the last Congress and was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary. Am I to understand that the Committee on the Judiciary this year, composed largely of the same membership, have reported unanimously another bill without knowing what was in the first bill?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Absolutely, that is not so.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I think my colleague's statement must have been made inadvertently.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I am not prepared at this time to state in detail what was in the Howland bill, it being some two or three years ago since it was considered, but this bill was considered in the Judiciary Committee, and considered carefully after lengthy hearings, and with the hearings in mind that we had on the Howland bill also. And this is the final and complete judgment of the entire committee covering the subject.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman prepared to tell the House how the rates of compensation, and so forth, in this bill compare with the rates of compensation fixed by the President in his recent order for the payment of compensation for injuries incurred upon the Canal Zone?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. They are somewhat increased in this bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. If I may be permitted, I wish to state to the gentleman from Illinois that in connection with the hearings held there was a document prepared under the supervision of the Department of Labor, which shows the comparison between the Howland-Dupré bill, if I may so call it, and the McGillicuddy bill, as reported, and the data can be produced and given to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Where is that information to be obtained?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is in the Judiciary Committee. The hearings of the committee will disclose the fact that such a comparison was made.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. In further reply, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. It is not included in the report on this bill, I take it?

Mr. DUPRÉ. No.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is included in the hearings, however. I will say further to the gentleman from Illinois that the Bureau of Labor Statistics is heartily in favor of this bill, and prepared that schedule comparing this bill with all the the other bills before it.

Mr. MANN. I assume that the Bureau of Labor Statistics was heartily in favor of the bill in the last Congress, and that they also helped to prepare the schedule which the President fixed for the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. That may be true.

Mr. MANN. And I may say that I am in favor of the compensation bill.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. If you are, why not support us in this bill?

Mr. MANN. I put through the Panama Canal compensation bill, and without help from the gentleman.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I do.

Mr. McCOY. In connection with the inquiries propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to this bill I would say that I was acting chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which committee the bill was referred. I took the so-called Howland bill, which is now the Dupré bill, and I took the bill known as the Kern-McGillicuddy bill, introduced simultaneously in the Senate and House, and went over to the Department of Labor and saw the head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and talked over these bills with the officials there thoroughly.

Now, as I understand the situation, the Kern-McGillicuddy bill, so called, was drafted by the Federation of Labor legislation committee. I do not remember just the name of the organization, but, at any rate, they had prepared that bill that passed under the two names, Kern-McGillicuddy. The Bureau of Labor Statistics did not approve that bill, nor did they approve altogether the Howland bill, which is now the Dupré bill, and they undertook to go over the entire matter and drafted another bill. This association for labor legislation found that that was done, and they sent their secretary down here, and the secretary went to the Bureau of Labor Statistics and there conferred with the head of that bureau, and they also took into their confidence a man whose business it is professionally, I believe, in connection with the federation, to see to the proper framing of a bill, so that a bill shall not be drawn in a slipshod manner, and so that when the bill is presented in a legislative body it may be well drawn and consistent, and not contradictory in any of its parts. Now, the result of that work in this particular bill is that it is the best drawn bill I have ever read.

I want to say to the Members of the House that, being engaged in other matters, I did not have time to-day to look into the hearings upon this bill, but I can say that we had full hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary on two different occasions. We also had a hearing before the subcommittee on another occasion, and the whole matter has been gone into with the utmost thoroughness. I believe that anybody who will examine the bill will find that it is a well-prepared bill. The Committee on the Judiciary does not take any credit for that because, as I say, it was drafted, as it was, by a man whose business it is to do that kind of work.

Mr. MANN. Who is that man whose business it is to draft bills for Congress?

Mr. McCOY. He is connected with the organization which is known as the Association for Labor Legislation. Dr. Andrews is the secretary of it, and I have no doubt that every Member of Congress from time to time has had some word from that organization.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one minute?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. McCOY. Surely.

Mr. SISSON. Did the committee make any examination as to what this bill will probably cost the Government?

Mr. McCOY. Yes; I believe they did.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that the bill carries a $500,000 appropriation.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. That is for the first year.

Mr. SISSON. That does not answer the question. What does the bill finally cost?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Not to exceed a million dollars a year.

Mr. SISSON. Do these occupational diseases referred to in this bill cover the diseases that might happen to a man while engaged in a certain occupation because the occupation brings about the disease?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is the occupation that causes it.

Mr. SISSON. What department of the Government causes these conditions?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Membership in Congress, for example. [Laughter.]

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I suppose that disease would be covered about as easily under the occupational clause as anything else that would entitle us to a pension, if the language is retained in this bill that is now in it.

Mr. McCOY. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that, for instance, a man engaged in painting is subject to lead poisoning. That is an occupational disease.

Mr. SISSON. How many painters do you have in the employ of the Government? Those that paint the ships?

Mr. McCOY. That I can not say. I hope there are only a few of them that suffer from this disease. But there are some, and it is inherent in the occupation.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] that there are a number of these diseases that are inseparable from certain employments. There are a number of occupational diseases which either partially disable or wholly disable in consequence of that particular kind of work.

Mr. McCOY. There are women over in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who, on account of the work they do, which involves a great deal of use of the wrist, become incapacitated in the right hand or in the left, whichever they use. That, I believe, is treated as an occupational disease. It is something that is inherent in the work they are doing. Now, the committee can not undertake to give a full list of what might be termed occupational diseases, but——

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Is there anything in this bill which gives a Government employee a pension that would give a farmer a pension if he gets a sunstroke or dew poison in his ankle?

Mr. McCOY. I do not know what dew poison is. I presume down in Mississippi it may have something to do with mountain dew; but that would not be covered in this bill.

Mr. QUIN. It is caused by the brushing of the wet grass against the ankles. If there is a cut on the ankle, it may swell up.

Mr. McCOY. I understand that mountain dew is a natural product in some places.

Mr. QUIN. Will this bill give pensions to a special class of people—just the ones who work for the Government?

Mr. McCOY. It gives compensation to Government employees who are injured. The gentleman knows that Government employees who are injured in the course of their employment have no right of action against the Government.

Mr. QUIN. Ought they to have a right of action against the Government because they get sick?

Mr. McCOY. They ought to have a right of action where the injury is due to negligence. If they were working for a private corporation, they would have that right of action; but the gentleman knows that the Government can not be sued without its consent, and in a great many instances we have provided for compensation to injured employees. But there is a large class of Government employees who if they were in private employment might have a cause of action for any injury that they suffered in the course of their employment, who are absolutely excluded by reason of the fact that they work for the Government. Now, this does not create a privileged class. It simply gives to Government employees the right to recover for injuries which they would have the right to recover for if they were working for a private corporation, and who are now barred from the recovery of compensation simply because the Government is their employer.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. Supplementing the inquiry of my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], I understand that the theory upon which this bill is based is that you endeavor to place the Government in the attitude of a corporation or any other employer of labor, because in case of injury to an employee he would have a right of action against the company that employed him.

Mr. McCOY. I was only illustrating the point to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. We do not attempt to give an employee any right of action against the Government.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that he has no right of action. I think I can make myself clear. A man injured in a powder mill or injured on a railroad by virtue of the negligence of his employer would have a right of action.

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Against his employer.

Mr. McCOY. That is right.

Mr. SISSON. A man employed in the Government service only has the right to come to Congress and present a claim against the Government.

Mr. McCOY. As to most Government employees that is so.

Mr. SISSON. This bill enables a man who is injured in the Government service to be put in a position where he gets certain compensation.

Mr. McCOY. That is right.

Mr. SISSON. Now, if he should become sick with what is called an occupational disease while in the service of the Government, that is also provided for in this bill.

Mr. McCOY. No; I do not think the gentleman states it just clearly. A man might contract a disease while he was in the employ of the Government, but that would not give him the right to compensation. It would be only in the case of those diseases which are called occupational.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, I understand that, and I use the term "occupational disease" after the explanation made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] in answer to a question a few minutes ago. I understand that the occupational disease must be caused by the Government service. That is what you mean by an occupational disease.

Mr. McCOY. I was just trying to explain that all diseases occurring while a man is in the employ of the Government are not called occupational diseases.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, I understand that, but a disease that is occasioned by the particular occupation a man is engaged in is an occupational disease.

Mr. McCOY. Well, yes.

Mr. SISSON. If the occupation causes the disease.

Mr. McCOY. No; that is just what I am trying to make clear.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Let me read it.

Mr. McCOY. The gentleman from Maine will read the provision.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the gentleman does that, I do not think there is any real difference between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY].

Mr. McCOY. I do not think there is.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman mentioned, for example, that a painter is subject to lead colic, which is an occupational disease.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And there are certain diseases which are peculiar to the phosphorus industry.

Mr. FOSTER. If a man is doing painting for the Government and he has lead colic, that is an occupational disease, and under this bill the Government would be liable if disabled as a result?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And there are other diseases which are peculiar to certain occupations.

Mr. SISSON. That is exactly what I had in mind. If a man is engaged in a certain kind of work for a certain length of time, and that occupation produces the disease, it is covered by this bill. Is that right?

Mr. McCOY. I think so.

Mr. SISSON. If that is true, I want to ask upon what basis you make the calculation as to what this bill will ultimately cost.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. From what it has already cost where it is applied.

Mr. SISSON. Where else does it apply?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is applied in England, Switzerland, Germany, and in many of the States of this country.

Mr. SISSON. If the pension laws of England, the pension laws of Germany, and the pension laws of France are to be your measure, and if we then measure the war pensions paid in those countries by the war pensions here, you will miss the mark a long, long way.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. This is not a matter of a pension at all.

Mr. SISSON. We will not quibble about terms. It is as broad as it is long, whichever way you take it and by whatever name you call it.

Mr. McCOY. I should like to answer the gentleman in regard to the cost. No estimate was made of what this may cost the Government, and it was frankly stated that no estimate could be made.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true.

Mr. McCOY. But, assuming that these people have a moral right to be taken care of when they are injured, what difference does it make whether it costs the Government a million dollars or five million dollars? If there is a class of people in the employment of the Government suffering under circumstances which would permit them in other cases under compensation laws of the various States to recover in case of private employment, what difference does it make how much it costs the Government to compensate them?

Mr. SISSON. It makes a great deal of difference to me, and it ought to make a great deal of difference with every man who has a regard for good government. It ought to make a difference for this reason, that there is a limit somewhere to taxation. When you shall have levied on the people a certain amount of taxation I am unwilling, after they shall have paid for proper government activities, that you should extend the special privileges to these men who already hold these positions under the Government which can not be obtained by men in private life.

The man working on the farm, the man working for himself in the little store, the little shopkeeper, and the little clerk have to take these risks themselves. I am unwilling that you should place on them the additional burden that makes Government taxation burdensome. There ought to be some consideration for the taxpayers and the people not connected with the Government service. I am one of those men that believe that the Government is intended for the benefit of the people, that it exists for the benefit of the people, and not that the people exist for the benefit of the Government and those working for the Government. Now, if this makes for good government, if it makes for economical government, to pay men for diseases which they may contract in the Government service, of course there is something in it. But I am unwilling, so far as I am concerned, to begin on this course.

You are going to find, if you enter upon this, that you will be in the same attitude that the English people were in when they first pensioned the Government employees, and that is what this is, no more and no less——

Mr. McCOY. I differ with the gentleman entirely; this is not a pension scheme.

Mr. SISSON. Well, we will not quarrel about that; it is as broad as it is long. When you have this you will be compelled to do as they were in England—compelled to extend the pensions all along the line—old-age pension, occupational pension, and everything of that sort that falls under that head, because the people will say, properly, "Those favored ones get it, why not us?"

Mr. McCOY. The gentleman from Mississippi mentions the farmers, and thinks it a pity that we should do anything that discriminates against the farmer or that would give the employees of the Government proper compensation for injuries. I have no doubt the gentleman did as I did, voted for the $500,000 appropriation to look out for hog cholera. I should like to know whether that was for the benefit of the farmer or not. The farmer, I am sure, could pay his own money to find out something about hog cholera, but, nevertheless, when cattle have some disease we appropriate a half a million dollars, and we appropriate for dipping cows some way or other—or is it sheep? I am not a farmer.

Mr. SISSON. I gather from what the gentleman says that he is not a farmer.

Mr. McCOY. And I am glad that I am not, if I have to make the kind of comparison that the gentleman from Mississippi makes. The farmer has nothing to complain of as to the liberality of the Government in such matters. We take care of his hogs, his sheep, his cows, his grain, and his cabbages, and everything else that he has in the world, and still when we want to make an appropriation for the men employed and injured in the Government service, or those who contract diseases which come directly from such service, the farmer is held up as the man that is to pay all the taxes, and the appropriation is opposed.

There is no question of a pension in this matter; it is simply a question of plain, ordinary justice to see that persons injured in the Government employ should be properly compensated.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say in reply, Mr. Speaker, to my friend——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. Under what rule of the House is this debate proceeding?

The SPEAKER. Under a reservation of the right to object.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I used the farmer as an illustration because he is the man that works with his own hands, works on his own farm, and does not have any relation existing between him and his laborer such as great corporations and their labor would have. When you shall make an appropriation for the purpose of enabling the farmers of this country to produce better cattle, better hogs, more corn, more wheat, we are serving the constituents of the gentleman from New Jersey. It is not because of his occupation, it is not because we want to do it to help him as an individual, it is not from a desire to help him because he is a farmer, but to increase the productive capacity of the fields which feed the cities and the people who are not engaged in that industry and for the general good of all the people. The city of the gentleman from New Jersey would be absolutely destroyed except for the productivity of the farms of the country. You contribute to it not because you want alone to benefit the farmer as such, but you contribute to it to increase the productivity of the soil, to increase the proper cultivation of the soil, to eliminate disease from the hogs and cattle, and advance the interest of our great agricultural interest. And that benefits the city more than it benefits the farmer, because you enable him to get cheaper and better food. In fact, if you did not eliminate in some way the hog cholera, you might eliminate the hogs, and thereby eliminate the meat from the great cities.

Mr. McCOY. Then we would live on corn.

Mr. SISSON. But if you did not get the field properly cultivated you would not have any corn. You can not live without the farmer.

He is the basis of the foundation of all wealth. Without him there could be no cities. If he did not produce more than he could consume at home, every man would have to be a farmer. Whatever Congress can do in the way of providing for demonstration work that will enable the farmer to get the best results and produce the greatest amount of agricultural products to the acre will not only increase the wealth of the farmer, but will increase the entire wealth of the Nation. Whatever discoveries the Government can make for the elimination of disease in our cattle and hogs will increase their number, reduce the price, and increase the quantity of meat to feed the city.

I am getting tired of hearing such criticism as this of what Congress is trying to do to develop the agricultural interests every time a pension bill or a bill increasing the salary of Government employees comes up. No man representing the best interests of a city constituency can take the position that the Government has spent too much to help the American farmer. If the American farmer ceased to work the fields, our factories would be smokeless, our cities would be deserted, our ships would rust and rot in the harbor, railway rails would go to ruin, and every man would be compelled to desert the cities and go to hunting for food.

On every occasion I have endeavored to convince Congress that it is their duty to devote more time and attention to building up the agricultural interests of the country. For over a century Congress has fostered, nursed and nourished, and given special privileges to our manufacturing interests, to the utter neglect of the farmer. This is a short-sighted policy. The first evidence of the decay of a nation is the decay of its agricultural interests. Wherever rural life is made attractive, wherever country homes are happy and prosperous, that country is strong and virile and has a glorious future. Wherever the farms are deserted and the fields not properly tilled, that nation is already destroyed. So I say to my friend from New Jersey that I have no apologies to make for having used the farmer to illustrate my reason for opposing this bill. You can place many burdens upon him, but you can do but little for him from the Treasury, except by giving him the benefit of the knowledge acquired by expert agriculturalists in the proper cultivation of his fields, in caring for his cattle and hogs, and in the proper methods of fixing his house, his barns, ditching and draining his lands, and all of these can be done by the Government with the expenditure of but little money, and they can be given to the farmer either through farm-demonstration schools or through the farmers' bulletins which can be sent him. But there is more than this that can be done for him in a Democratic administration, and that is to remove from his shoulders every burden of taxation that is not necessary for the proper conduct of the Government; instead of squandering so many millions for pensions for Government employees, for princely salaries for Army and Navy officers, and the expenditure of millions upon top of millions for useless battleships that soon rot, wreck, or become obsolete, to expend some of this money in the improvement of public roads, where the man who pays the taxes will get some benefit in return.

It is well enough to make light of the farmer on occasions of this kind, but I do not apologize and will never apologize for using him as an illustration in this case. I used him as an illustration not because I wanted to single him out as an object for the particular care of the Government, but because he would be one of a number of classes of people that would have to bear all of the burdens of this bill, and could never get any benefits from it. None but the favored few who hold good jobs in the Government would be benefited by this legislation. The burden would be borne by the millions of laborers and toilers who could get no benefit.

I used him as an illustration of that class of people like the clerk in the store, the little independent merchant, the blacksmith, or the millions of people that labor for themselves, who do not have an opportunity to have a Government job and who have to take all the inclemencies of the weather and all the burdens of occupational diseases. Still, the gentleman from New Jersey wants to saddle on them the special favors extended in this which he would to those who have their names attached to the pay roll of the Federal Government. Everybody is trying to get on the Government pay roll. I do not understand what royalty surrounds a Government job that they should be the object of such solicitude on the part of Congressmen. They are the most favored places in the world, and still you want to make them more burdensome to the masses of the people.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman realize that the farmers' associations and organizations in this country are all in favor of this legislation and are continually passing resolutions in regard to it?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make this explanation, with the gentleman's permission. I do not believe this bill ought to be considered under present circumstances and on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is a very important bill, and for that reason I object.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. SISSON. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement I made just now that the table showing the comparative compensation was obtainable, I will now hand a copy of the hearings to the gentleman from Illinois, and in that connection I want to say that I did not plagiarize the Howland bill. I wrote to Mr. Howland, with whom I was associated on the committee last year, and stated that I was very much interested in this sort of legislation and would like to introduce the bill in this Congress, and he bequeathed it to me with his best wishes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE AT OWEGO, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15320) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to the site at Owego, N. Y.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to disregard that portion of section 33 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, which requires that the Federal building site selected at Owego, N. Y., shall be bounded on at least two sides by streets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MANAGERS FOR NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was (H. J. Res. 241) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved etc., That James Steele Catherwood, of Illinois; John C. Nelson, of Indiana; Frederick J. Close, of Kansas; and Thomas S. Bridgham, of Maine, be, and they are hereby, appointed members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to succeed Oscar M. Gottshall, of Ohio; William Warner, of Missouri; Franklin Murphy, of New Jersey, whose terms of office expired April 21, 1912, and James Barry, whose resignation as a member of the said board has been accepted.

With the following committee amendments:

Lines 3 and 4, page 1, strike out the name "John C. Nelson, of Indiana," and insert "George H. Wood, of Ohio."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentlemen if they will withhold their objection until I can make a statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very well.

Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Speaker, the importance of considering this resolution at this time and of adopting it or some other resolution is this: The soldiers' homes of the United States or the management of the soldiers' homes—and there are 10 of them—find themselves without the ability to muster a quorum of managers. Under the provision of the law heretofore passed there were 11 members of the board of managers. In June, 1913, by a provision put on the sundry civil appropriation bill, the number was cut to five. By operation of law when their term expired the places were not to be filled until there would be only five left. At the present time there are only six members of this board, and three of them are holding over, their time having expired in 1912, those three being named in this resolution. The fourth one named in this resolution resigned in March, 1913. With the three who are holding over at this time, whose terms expired in April, 1912, and with the three whose term of office does not expire until April, 1916, the board as constituted makes six members. The statute provides that seven members shall constitute a quorum to do business. Since the 21st of last April there have been only six members. The next meeting of that board to transact business occurs on the 23d day of this month. It will be manifestly impossible for seven members of that board to appear.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HAIR. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. What would be the objection to placing an amendment on the sundry civil appropriation bill now being considered reducing the number required for a quorum?

Mr. O'HAIR. There are two reasons. One is that an amendment of that character would be subject to a point of order, and the other is that this resolution or some other resolution should be considered at this time because the term of office of the men whose places are being filled here expired over two years ago. They have not been reappointed and no one has been appointed in their place. I presume their acts might be legal, but in the ordinary and orderly way of doing business when their terms expire, of course, there should be some one appointed to serve during the succeeding term, and the gentleman's suggestion that such an amendment be added to the sundry civil appropriation bill would meet with a point of order. I think there should be four men named to fill these four vacancies. I do not know of any reason why they should not be named. Does the gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there would be no objection on the part of anyone to such an amendment as I have suggested, unless the objection was made by some one who desired to increase the number on the board above the number that Congress has determined it shall consist of in the future.

Mr. O'HAIR. How would the gentleman suggest, then, that these four vacancies that now exist, by virtue of one resignation and the term of office of three having expired, be filled if not by this resolution or one like it?

Mr. MONDELL. The vacancies, as they occur within the limit fixed by Congress, should be filled, of course, but they should be filled within the limit fixed by Congress, and we should supplement the legislation we already have relative to the size of the board by supplementary legislation reducing the size of the quorum.

Mr. O'HAIR. I expect to offer an amendment to this resolution, if it is considered, reducing the size of the quorum to four; and what I am getting at is this: Here are four vacancies that should be filled; how does the gentleman propose to fill them?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HAIR. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I thought I had this matter straight in my head, but I do not know that I have. Two years ago, by act of Congress in the form of an amendment on an appropriation bill, we reduced the number to five, as vacancies occurred?

Mr. O'HAIR. Vacancies thereafter occurring.

Mr. MANN. If this resolution were passed, would this be in contradiction with that act of Congress?

Mr. O'HAIR. No, sir. These four vacancies occurred and existed when that bill, or that portion of the sundry civil bill, passed.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the law passed in the sundry civil appropriation bill provided that the number be reduced to five in 1916.

Mr. MANN. I did not catch that.

Mr. HAY. I say the board should be reduced to five in 1916.

Mr. MANN. But it does not yet apply.

Mr. HAY. It only applies to the vacancies which occurred in 1914. Now, vacancies will occur this year, and they will go out, thereby reducing the number to seven.

Mr. MANN. This reduction, then, did not apply to the ones who were then in, whose terms had expired but were held over.

Mr. HAY. It did not apply to vacancies which occurred in 1912, but it does apply to vacancies which occur in 1914.

Mr. MANN. There is no contradiction between this resolution and the act reducing the number?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. MANN. I thought so, but I was not sure after hearing what the gentleman from Illinois had to say.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, may I say, in answering one objection stated, that even though no objection were made to an amendment offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill which would fix a quorum of the board of managers at four or some other workable number, there would be great embarrassment and difficulty confronting the board. As was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HAIR], a board meeting occurs this month. The law of 1867, which was the original law creating the board, positively requires that a quorum shall consist of seven. Now, if the number of a quorum should be reduced in the sundry civil bill to four, or some other number, the chances are the sundry civil bill would not pass the Senate and be approved for some time, and in the meantime the board could not legally transact any business at all. A meeting of the board is scheduled, as I am informed, for the 23d of June, in the State of Maine, at some town—Togus, I think it is called—in that State. There are but six members to attend that meeting. The President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court are ex officio members of the board, but it has been the invariable practice and custom that those officers do not attend. The board would not be in a position to make the necessary contracts and take the necessary steps for the support of the various branches of the soldiers' home for the next fiscal year. I wish to ask gentlemen on the other side not to obstruct the work—the necessary work of taking care of the 25,000 disabled volunteer soldiers in these homes. You say you are willing to have a quorum fixed in the sundry civil bill so the present board can work, but it will require perhaps a month to do that, and we can do it right now. These men will be elected some other day soon, if not to-day. This election takes place some other day under suspension of the rules, either during the last six days of the session or on some other suspension day after to-day. If they are not reached to-day on suspension of the rules, nothing can be accomplished except the embarrassment of the board and an interference with the administration of these branches of the home and an obstruction of the purposes of the Government in taking care of the disabled soldiers by making these objections. Undoubtedly some one will rise and object or will make a point of order against the changing of the existing law, which provides for a quorum of seven, which has been the law for the last 48 years, if the amendment is suggested when the sundry civil bill is again considered.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.

Mr. MANN. Without applying the quorum question seriously myself, as I do not, as I understand the present board—if the gentleman will pardon me for the question I am going to ask, because I believe once in a while it is necessary to get down to what is called brass tacks—the present board is Republican in its organization.

Mr. TAGGART. I am not able to say.

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is quite able to say——

Mr. TAGGART. I should have thought the gentleman from Illinois would have had more information on that subject than I.

Mr. MANN. I do not know, and I just assumed the gentleman to know; I am sure all the Democratic members of the committee here know since the caucus on this subject.

Mr. O'HAIR. Yes; I will answer that question.

Mr. HAY. Of course it has been a Republican board for many, many years, and I will state to the gentleman from Illinois I have never known an objection to be made for the selection of this board while I was on the minority, and invariably while I was on the minority the Committee on Military Affairs elected Republicans to the board.

Mr. MANN. There was objection made at the time in reference to politics, and I want to get at the facts.

Mr. TAGGART. Permit me to say, inasmuch as the question was put to me so pointedly, I do not regret that I am not able to answer it. I think that 50 years after these men have rendered their service to the Government it is a little bit too late to talk about the politics of the board of managers for the branches of the home for disabled volunteer soldiers——

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is too late. Is the gentleman able to say whether the gentlemen named in this resolution are Democrats?

Mr. TAGGART. I am able to say only in reference to one of them. One of them is a citizen of Kansas, who lost his right arm at Resaca.

Mr. MANN. I see the gentleman is not willing to get down to brass tacks; I was. I am willing to admit honestly and frankly, as long as we have a Democratic House, a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic President, as far as I am concerned, I think they are entitled to a Democratic control of all these boards when the terms expire in regular order. But that is the only excuse I would have for supporting the resolution.

Mr. O'HAIR. My colleague understands that the terms of the gentlemen whose places are being filled here expired two years and more ago?

Mr. MANN. I understand. I am not criticizing the gentleman for seeking to put in Democratic members of the board, nor am I objecting to the proposition.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentlemen that the other three members of the board as it will be constituted, if these four men are now selected, are Republicans, so that there will be four Democrats and three Republicans on the board.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me say that the one with whom I have an acquaintance will take the place of Maj. William Warner, one of the most distinguished gentlemen in the whole Middle West, and who served with credit and honor in the Senate of the United States, and who, I am informed, does not desire to continue his services any longer than such time as we are able to replace him with some one else.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the impression to prevail that I am objecting on account of the political faith of these appointees. As a matter of fact, I did not know they were Democrats, although I rather assumed they were, and I think it is entirely proper that they should be. I have certainly no objection on that score. Neither do I want to leave the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] unchallenged, that the business of the soldiers' homes will be in any wise interfered with or jeopardized if these appointments are not made.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not any doubt but that the board will go on and transact its business and that the interest of the homes will be properly cared for and looked after if these appointments are not made at this particular time.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming objects, and that is the end of it. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next one.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10523) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY HARBOR-LINE COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution No. 29, authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor-Line Commission.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to designate an officer of the Corps of Engineers, retired, United States Army, whose assignment of duty relates to harbor work in, or in the neighborhood of, New York Harbor, to act as a member of the said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor-Line Commission: Provided, That no expense shall accrue to the United States by reason of such appointment, and the officer designated may receive such compensation for his services on said commission as may be provided by the States aforesaid.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "whose assignment of duty relates to harbor work in, or in the neighborhood of, New York Harbor.

Strike out the word "said," in line 7, page 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCGILLICUDDY). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TALCOTT] the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. The purpose of the resolution is to have an engineer officer on the retired list appointed to act with the commission appointed by the States of New Jersey and New York to examine into the condition of the harbors of the United States and elsewhere, in order to report upon improvements that are necessary in the waters of the two States. And this is to be without expense to the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman knows that both Houses passed a similar resolution in the last Congress, and that at the request of the Chief of Engineers it was vetoed by the President. I suppose the gentleman is familiar with all that?

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. No; I did not know that.

Mr. MANN. I am surprised that the gentleman would have charge of a resolution of this kind and it would not come to his knowledge that in the last Congress a similar one was vetoed at the request of the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. But this is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I am not going to object. I favored the resolution when it was in Congress before, but I do not want to have another veto proposition. I would like to know whether it would do any good. We have been having so many bites of this cherry that, if we do take this, let us take the whole cherry or none.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Does not the gentleman recognize the necessity of these improvements in New York Harbor?

Mr. MANN. I am familiar with that. I have been over that in the last Congress. This resolution which was introduced in the Senate provided for the designation of an active officer of the Engineer Corps. At the suggestion of the Secretary of War that was changed so as to make it a retired officer of the Engineer Corps. Of course, that destroys in itself the main purpose of the bill, which originally was to have this board over there work in harmony with the Engineer Corps of the Army and to have one of the Engineer Corps of the Army, active in service, working on the commission, so that he would represent the attitude of the Engineer Corps, which, of course, a retired officer will not do. But have they not authority now to hire a retired officer of the Army for this purpose?

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. I think not without the consent of Congress.

Mr. MANN. What is to prevent? Where is our friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY]?

Mr. HAY. I do not know what the proposition is.

Mr. MANN. This is a proposition to authorize the President to designate an officer of the Corps of Engineers, retired, to act as a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission. Would not such a retired officer have permission to accept such work now if they would hire him?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. And he could not be required to take it?

Mr. HAY. He could not be required to do it.

Mr. MANN. And if he wanted to take it, he could take it, anyhow?

Mr. HAY. If he wanted to do it and was detailed to do it by the President, but I do not think that would authorize him to receive compensation.

Mr. MANN. He is not to get compensation from the Government under this resolution. He is to be paid by the commission over there. That is the reason I say that the bill as originally introduced in the Senate provided for an active officer in this work, and when it was changed to a retired officer I really could not see what object there was in it at all.

Mr. HAY. The object of it is to authorize the officer to receive such compensation for his services as may be provided by the State commissioners. He would not have the right as an officer of the Army to receive compensation, even though he is a retired officer, unless Congress gave him the permission to do it.

Mr. MANN. He has the right to receive compensation. A retired officer of the Army is not forbidden to do work?

Mr. HAY. But if he is assigned to duty by the President he thereby gets the pay which he would receive if he were on the active list.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but without being assigned to duty by the President, they could employ any retired officer to go over and do this work?

Mr. HAY. Yes; they could.

Mr. MANN. Then I do not see really what they accomplish by this resolution.

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, a retired officer has the right to engage in any occupation which he may see fit to engage in, and if these States want to employ a man and offer him compensation, he has a right to go and discharge the duties of the place which he accepts.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood to be the case.

While I shall not object to the resolution, I do not see what earthly good it does anybody.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. It authorizes the President to designate a particular officer, and in accordance with the designation of the War Department he would probably recommend the officer best adapted for the service.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. You know that the commission will pick out the officer. If they are going to pay him, they will pick out the officer. But a retired officer is no longer in touch with the purposes of the Corps of Engineers with respect to the improvement of New York Harbor. That was the original purpose of this resolution, and the President in the last Congress vetoed a similar resolution, because, as I recall it, the Corps of Engineers did not desire to be put in that attitude.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Does not the gentleman think that a member of the Corps of Engineers who has heretofore been connected with the harbor work in New York would render valuable service in connection with that work?

Mr. MANN. Any one of them can be employed if you will pay them and give them the work. But it does not amount to anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TALCOTT of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIENS OF JUDGMENT AND DECREES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11624) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens and judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after January 1, 1915.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] in explanation of the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I shall be glad to give it. The object of this bill is to correct a very palpable error that Congress fell into in passing the act approved August 17, 1912. The statute of August 1, 1888, required that judgments rendered by the United States courts, in order to operate as liens or privileges, should be registered in conformity with the laws of the respective States. In section 3, however, of the act of 1888 an exception is made in the county or parish where the court is sitting that renders the judgment; for instance, taking a case in my State, when the court sits in the parish of Orleans and renders a judgment it is not necessary to record that judgment in order to have it operate as a lien; but in order that it should have that effect in the parish of Jefferson, which is just across the river, the judgment would have to be recorded. That is the way the statute read when it passed in 1888. On March 2, 1895, the section which made the exception that I have referred to was amended so as to add the following provision:

That nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court or the filing of a transcript thereof in any State office within the same county or the same parish in the State of Louisiana in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county.

And here is the addition contained in the act of 1895:

If the clerk of the United States court be required by law to have a permanent office and a judgment record open at all times for public inspection in such county or parish.

Now, in the last Congress the gentleman's colleague from Illinois, Mr. Sterling, introduced an act repealing section 3 of the act of 1888; but he overlooked the fact and Congress overlooked the fact that section 3 of the act of 1888 had been superseded by the act of 1895. In other words, we repealed an act which had already been amended by another act and failed to repeal the amending statute.

The object of Mr. Sterling's bill, and the object I am seeking to carry out in this bill, is to require all judgments of the United States courts to be recorded in order to operate as liens or privileges, if the several States require this course for State judgments.

The primary object of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Sterling, I think, was to meet the conditions that resulted from the operation of the Torrens act in that State. In passing a deed of sale in my State—and I think it is the same in other States—we not only have to get a certificate from the recorder of mortgages, where State judgments are recorded, to show that no judgments are standing against the party, but we must go to the United States court and pay for an additional certificate to show that there are no judgments outstanding in the clerk's office of that court, because a judgment of the United States court in the city of New Orleans, or in any place where the court is sitting that renders that judgment, has the effect of a lien or privilege against property in that city without the necessity of registry.

The idea is to simplify transactions of sale. The bill was well debated here in the last Congress. I have the RECORD at hand. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Cannon, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Crumpacker, and Judge Moon, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Sterling, of Illinois, and Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas, and other gentlemen participated in the debate, and the bill went through without any objection. I am simply seeking this remedial legislation to perpetuate what Congress intended to do, but which, through oversight, it failed to do.

Mr. MANN. I think the Sterling bill, which the gentleman refers to, was introduced by Mr. Sterling at my request. In the first place, it was amended some, and there was a good deal of confusion about it when it passed as to what it did; and I do not want to make any mistake again if I can help it. If I recollect aright, the purpose of the Sterling bill was really to protect those places where they had adopted the Torrens title system, and the purpose was to require any judgment of any United States court, before it became a lien upon real estate, to be recorded in the proper recorder's office if the State required the same thing as to State judgments.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman is absolutely correct in that respect.

Mr. MANN. Now, under the law which was sought to be repealed, and which this bill seeks to repeal, a judgment of the Federal court is not required to be recorded if it is in the same county or parish where the Federal courthouse is situated.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And they keep a docket of the judgments. You want to repeal that so that a judgment will not be a lien in any State in a county or parish unless they get a transcript of the judgment and record it in the recorder's office?

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is the object of this legislation, and I will repeat that I am trying to do what Mr. Sterling intended to do; and I was in a sense responsible with him, since I was a member of the committee which reported that bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I understand the error that was made is a natural error, as long as we will not bring our statutes down to date in a codification.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I was not aware that there had been an amending statute in 1895, nor was Mr. Sterling aware of it, nor were the other gentlemen who discussed the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT, ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2548) to create an additional land district in the State of Arizona.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional land district is hereby created for the State of Arizona to embrace the lands contained beginning at the southeast corner of the State of Arizona; thence north along the boundary line between the States of Arizona and New Mexico to the southeast corner of township 5 north, range 31 east of the Gila and Salt River meridian; thence west along the township line to the southwest corner of township 5 north, range 28 east; thence north along the range line to the northeast corner of township 8 north, range 27 east; thence west along the second standard parallel north to the southeast corner of township 9 north, range 25 east; thence north along the range line to the northeast corner of said township; thence west along the township line to the southeast corner of township 10 north, range 21 east; thence north along the range line to the northeast corner of said township; thence west along the township line to the southeast corner of township 11 north, range 18 east; thence north along the range line to the northeast corner of said township; thence west along the surveyed and unsurveyed township line to the southwest corner of township 12 north, range 16 east, when surveyed; thence north along the unsurveyed range line to the northwest corner of said township; thence west along the third standard parallel north to the northeast corner of township 12 north, range 10 east; thence south along the range line to the southeast corner of said township; thence west along the township line to the northwest corner of township 11½ north, range 11 east; thence south along the surveyed and unsurveyed range line, allowing for the proper offsets, to the southwest corner of township 2 north, range 11 east, when surveyed; thence east along the surveyed and unsurveyed township line to the northeast corner of township 1 north, range 15 east; thence south along the range line to the southeast corner of said township; thence east along the base line to the northeast corner of unsurveyed township 1 south, range 15 east; thence south along the surveyed and unsurveyed range line to the northwest corner of township 4 south, range 16 east; thence east along the township line to the northeast corner of township 4 north, range 17 east; thence south along the range line to the southeast corner of said township; thence east along the unsurveyed township line to the northeast corner of unsurveyed township 5 south, range 18 east; thence south along the surveyed and unsurveyed range line to the southeast corner of township 10 south, range 18 east; thence west along the second standard parallel south to the southeast corner of unsurveyed township 10 south, range 1 west; thence north along the Gila and Salt River principal meridian to the northeast corner of said township; thence west along the second standard parallel south to the northwest corner of township 10 south, range 10 west; thence south along the unsurveyed range line to its intersection with the south boundary of Arizona; thence southeasterly and easterly along said boundary to the southeast corner of the State of Arizona, the place of beginning; and the city of Tucson, in the county of Pima, is hereby designated as the site for said land office, and the district shall be known as the Tucson land district.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause all plats, maps, records, and papers in the Phoenix land office which relate to or form a necessary part of the records of the lands embraced in the district hereby created to be transferred to the Tucson land district.

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as I recall, since I have been here we abolished the land office at Tucson in the interest of economy.

Mr. HAYDEN. There was a consolidation, not by act of Congress but by departmental order, abolishing the offices in Prescott and Tucson and removing the office to Phoenix.

Mr. MANN. It went into effect in 1905, I think.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In view of the Democratic platform, does the gentleman have the nerve to ask us to re-create this office?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state that the receipts from the sale of public lands in Arizona are sufficient to justify the existence of two land offices in my State, and for the convenience of the public there should be two offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the letter of the distinguished Secretary of the Interior he says only about one in four of the entries and final proofs are made before the register and receiver. Will the gentleman inform the committee how the other three-fourths are transacted?

Mr. HAYDEN. Before United States court commissioners and clerks of the courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that way the interested parties are not inconvenienced because of the want of a land office.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is much more satisfactory to go to the land office and attend to the business personally with the register and receiver than with some commissioner, who may make errors.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that after the entryman makes his entry the commissioner then sends it to the land office, and that the final proof is transmitted in the same way.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; he transmits it to the land office.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that particular, I notice that this distinguished Secretary does not come out very strongly in favor of this bill. He says:

> I incline to the opinion that the establishment is warranted.

He does not use his customary strong King's English in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sure you will notice that as to most bills on which the Secretary of the Interior makes report he generally contents himself with saying that he has no objection to their passage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Secretary Lane usually comes out flat-footed in favor of things that he recommends.

Mr. MANN. If he is very much in favor of them, he lobbies with Members of the House through the mail.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KENT. In case of contest, or any objection or correction of the papers, they have to go to the land office, do they not?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. KENT. How far is it to the land office at present in existence from the outside boundaries of the gentleman's State?

Mr. HAYDEN. About 250 miles.

Mr. KENT. So that in the event of any complication it is a hardship to have to go to the land office?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The railroad rates are very high.

Mr. MANN. That condition existed in 1905, when the Interior Department consolidated these offices. Secretary Lane states that the two districts were consolidated on October 2, 1905, and the consolidated land office located at Phoenix because the public business did not warrant the maintenance of two land offices in Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. During the year 1906, the first year after the consolidation, the total land-office business amounted to only about $51,000, but in 1913 it had increased to over $199,000.

Mr. MANN. How much have the receipts been in 1914 to date?

Mr. HAYDEN. They are stated in the report up to February 28 of this year.

Mr. MANN. That is eight months.

Mr. HAYDEN. For eight months the receipts are $76,770.

Mr. MANN. That shows a great falling off.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; the receipts have declined.

Mr. MANN. Seventy-six thousand dollars for 8 months as against $199,000 for 12 months in the preceding year. That would not seem to indicate the necessity for a new office.

Mr. HAYDEN. In 1908, when the receipts were only $70,000, they were sufficient to pay the maximum salaries for two land offices.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I see! That is the reason. I understand! I do not criticize my friend from Arizona, who, like all the rest of the Democrats, forgets the Democratic platform, and the moment he sees fees sufficient to pay another man's salary, wants to give some one the new job. That is a sufficient reason for the gentleman, but not for the rest of us.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman what became of a bill that was reported favorably, and it seems to me discussed on the floor here in the last Congress, for an additional land-office district in the State of Arizona?

Mr. HAYDEN. There was no such bill in the last Congress. The State of Nevada had but one land office, and a bill was passed allowing two land offices in that State, just as I hope we will pass this bill to-day.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I am very heartily in favor of this bill, because I have seen enough of the State of Arizona to realize that there is great necessity for an additional land district. You ought to have at least two, if not three, districts, in my judgment.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is no doubt that the public interest would be greatly served by the establishment of an additional land office in Arizona. It is a very great hardship for settlers to go great distances to a land office, and it is not the best way to transact the public-land business, to conduct a large portion of it before United States commissioners and clerks of the courts.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about that.

Mr. MONDELL. But that side of the House a year or so ago was very much in favor of doing away with the office of receiver of the land offices. Gentlemen over there were very much impressed with the idea that this was an altogether useless and unnecessary office, that in the interest of economy and in keeping the Democratic pledges these offices should be abolished, particularly so as long as they were largely occupied by Republicans. But I notice that the gentleman's bill provides for the office of receiver just the same as in the former days. Has that side of the House changed its opinion in regard to that matter since we have reached the time for the appointment of Democrats to these offices?

Mr. HAYDEN. I can say truthfully that the two gentlemen who at present occupy the offices of register and receiver in Arizona are conducting them to the entire satisfaction of the people of the State, and both are Democrats.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course; and I presume that two good Democrats will be appointed to the jobs provided for in this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. Not to-day. [Laughter.] I want to ask the gentleman from Arizona a question. When the two land offices in Arizona were consolidated into one, one having been located at Prescott and the other at Tucson, I understand that the one land office was located at Phoenix because it was more centrally located.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman locates this land office at Tucson, then he will want to move the Phoenix land office to some more central part of the State, will he not?

Mr. HAYDEN. If there is any legitimate demand for a change in location, I shall want it moved.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly plain that in a State like Arizona, where you consolidate two offices into one and locate that one in the central part of the State, that when you recreate one of those districts again you ought to move the central location to a farther central location of the district that is left. Is the gentleman in favor of an amendment to this bill changing the location of the other land office at Phoenix back to Prescott?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think that such an amendment is necessary at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not make one at large and locate it on a wagon?

Mr. MANN. If this office is located at Tucson, certainly moving the Phoenix office back to Prescott would be for the convenience of the people.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is a considerable area of public land at no great distance from Phoenix. The office there is not inappropriately located.

Mr. MANN. If you have two districts, Phoenix is not the proper place for either one of the districts, but if you have one district, Phoenix is admirably situated for that one.

Mr. HAYDEN. All this is beside the question involved in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Not entirely in my mind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold his objection one moment? I would like to read a few lines from a Tucson newspaper for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker; I do not want to hear it. [Laughter.] If the gentleman wants to read it for anybody else's benefit, very well.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then let me read it for my own benefit.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentleman reading it for his own benefit.

Mr. HAYDEN (reading):

WILL CARL HAYDEN KEEP FAITH?

CARL HAYDEN has lived in Arizona all of his life, and those who know him will say that when he gives his word he will keep faith, and having pledged himself to support the Tucson land-office measure, he will put that bill through the House.

Only constant vigilance on the part of HAYDEN will get the land office for Tucson. On the next day for considering "unobjected bills" Tucson should get the land office if HAYDEN is watchful and on guard, otherwise it may go to the foot of the calendar and not be reached again this session.

If HAYDEN is really trying to serve Phoenix as stated, it would be an easy matter for him to arrange with some Member who could not possibly be hurt by his action to rise in his seat and object to the consideration of the measure which must be taken up by unanimous consent, but we do not think that CARL HAYDEN would do a trick like that. He has much more to gain by looking at this question from the broad standpoint of all of his constituents instead of taking the narrow and provincial view of the Salt River Valley.

The land attorneys at Phoenix, who do not want to see the land office removed, employed a man to go among the merchants and business organizations there to work up protests against the passage of the bill, and CARL HAYDEN has been flooded with this matter. He has many personal friends at Phoenix, and undoubtedly they have posted him that these protests are inspired by the land attorneys, whose interest is purely selfish.

We think HAYDEN will keep faith with southern Arizona.

Now, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether I have made any arrangement with him to object?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Arizona can make his own statement; I am not going to compromise him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the permission granted me to extend my remarks, I ask that a part of my report on this bill from the Committee on the Public Lands be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 594, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN ARIZONA.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany S. 2548:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2548) to create an additional land district in the State of Arizona, having had the same under consideration, respectfully recommend that the bill do pass. The committee requested the Secretary of the Interior to state the effect of the passage of this bill, and the following letters and tabulated statement show that the fees and commissions in the present Arizona land district have been more than sufficient to support two maximum land offices for the past six years. The fact that the fees and commissions are large enough to maintain two maximum offices clearly demonstrates that the public is entitled to the convenience of a second land office.

A memorial to Congress passed by the Arizona Legislature, which was referred to your committee, states that there is urgent necessity for the establishment of an additional land office in Arizona and recites the fact that many Western States with less public land than Arizona have from 6 to 10 land offices.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior on this bill is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 8, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your request of March 18, 1914, for a report on Senate bill 2548.

The purpose of the aforesaid bill is the establishment of an additional land district in Arizona.

There is attached hereto a tabulated statement indicating the number of entries made in Arizona each year since 1904, the total number of patents issued, the total amount of money received, and the total compensation earned and paid to registers and receivers, from which computation can be easily made of the amount of compensation that would have been paid to registers and receivers if the business had been equally divided between two land offices.

You ask what proportion of original entries and final proofs are made before officers other than the register and receiver. It is estimated that about one in four is made before the register and receiver. However, the creation of an additional land district would no doubt increase this ratio, as it has been found in States where land offices are numerous that applicants prefer to transact this business with the land officers direct.

You ask if the large grants to the State of Arizona by the enabling act will affect the business of the land office and what effect the so-called Santa Fe Railroad land selections under the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat., 189–211), will have upon the business in Arizona. There have been approximately 200 of the latter class of selections, but it should be borne in mind that these selections are not a matter of right but of discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. For the Santa Fe lieu selections the local officers are entitled to $1 each for 160 acres or fraction thereof selected. While section 29 of the act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat., 557), provides that "the fees to be paid to the register and receiver for each final location or selection of 160 acres * * * shall be $1," and the compensations of the local land officers will be increased in proportion to the selections made, the local land office will, to the extent of such selections, be deprived of the fees which would be received in connection with other applications under the public-land laws. However, it is impossible to attempt to approximate just what the financial difference might be.

The estimated cost of transcribing the records in order to establish this new land office, from the data available to this department, is placed at $1,000.

It is very difficult to estimate the future land-office business in a given territory, in view of the fact that it depends in a great measure upon climatic conditions and the character of the available lands. A glance at the accompanying table will show you that, with the exception of the fiscal year 1912, there has been a steady increase in the business of the Phoenix land office up to June 30, 1913.

In view of the amount of public-land business transacted in Arizona during the last five fiscal years and the apparent convenience it would afford the public, I am inclined to the opinion that the establishment of the new office is warranted. For your further information I attach copy of the department's report of July 9, 1913, upon this bill to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, omitting its statement of the boundaries of the proposed district.

As requested, the inclosures forwarded with your letter are herewith returned.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

DISPOSITION OF SURFACE LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15036.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15036) to provide for the disposition of the surface of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals.

Be it enacted, etc., That lands withdrawn or classified as phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals, or which are valuable for those deposits, shall be subject to appropriation, location, selection, entry, or purchase, if otherwise available, under the nonmineral land laws of the United States, whenever such location, selection, entry, or purchase shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the deposits on account of which the lands were withdrawn or classified or reported as valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but no desert entry made under the provisions of this act shall contain more than 160 acres: Provided, That all applications to locate, select, enter, or purchase under this section shall state that the same are made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

SEC. 2. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the location, selection, entry, or purchase is made, the locator, selector, entryman, or purchaser shall be entitled to a patent to the land located, selected, entered, or purchased, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of the deposits on account of which the lands so patented were withdrawn or classified or reported as valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, such deposits to be subject to disposal by the United States only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law. Any person qualified to acquire the reserve deposits may enter upon said lands with a view of prospecting for the same upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting, the measure of any such damage to be fixed by agreement of parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person who has acquired from the United States the title to or the right to mine and remove the reserve deposits, should the United States dispose of the mineral deposits in lands, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the minerals therefrom, and mine and remove such minerals, upon payment of damages caused thereby to the owner of the land, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking therefor in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right to present and have prompt consideration of applications to locate, select, enter, or purchase, under the land laws of the United States, lands which have been withdrawn or classified as phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic mineral lands, with a view of disproving such classification and securing patent without reservation, nor shall persons who have located, selected, entered, or purchased lands subsequently withdrawn, or classified as valuable for said mineral deposits, be debarred from the privilege of showing, at any time before final entry, purchase, or approval of selection or location, that the lands entered, selected, or located are in fact nonmineral in character.

SEC. 3. That any person who has in good faith located, selected, entered, or purchased, or any person who shall hereafter locate, select, enter, or purchase, under the nonmineral land laws of the United States, any lands which are subsequently withdrawn, classified, or reported as being valuable for phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals may, upon application therefor, and making satisfactory proof of compliance with the laws under which such lands are claimed, receive a patent therefor, which patent shall contain a rservation to the United States of all deposits on account of which the lands were withdrawn, classified, or reported as being valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The following committee amendments were read:

First. Amend page 2, line 19, by striking out the word "reserve" and inserting "reserved" in lieu thereof.

Second. Amend page 3, line 2, by striking out the word "reserve" and inserting "reserved" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question about the bill. It proposes to sell or dispose of the surface title of lands classified as phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where they classify land as phosphate land, the land may have some other minerals in it?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where they classify land as oil lands, do they say anything about gas?

Mr. FRENCH. The classifications for the most part are made with respect to one particular mineral.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Idaho has the information, let us get it from him.

Mr. FRENCH. In my State the withdrawals are simply for phosphate and not for any other purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware that lands withdrawn for oil are always withdrawn for oil and gas?

Mr. FRENCH. That is true; but we have none of those in Idaho.

Mr. MANN. How about land withdrawn for asphaltic minerals?

Mr. FRENCH. That is withdrawn for asphaltic minerals.

Mr. MANN. Under such circumstances, where the land has been withdrawn for any such purpose and we give a surface title, why should not the Government reserve all of the minerals under the surface?

Mr. FRENCH. You then would provide that in the passage of this act the withdrawal would be made of all of those minerals wherever the withdrawal for any one exists?

Mr. MANN. So far as this act is concerned.

Mr. FRENCH. I see no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. That is not what this bill does. It says "on account of which the lands so patented were withdrawn or classified or reported as valuable."

Mr. FRENCH. I assume that these withdrawals had in view the particular minerals found there, and I assume that for the most part the withdrawals hold pretty true to the deposits that are within the lands.

Mr. MANN. I should assume, without any hesitation whatever, that if the land had been withdrawn in my State or Indiana or Oklahoma or Massachusetts or any other State that is settled they would not have withdrawn it for the mineral that was worth the most after they found out what was there.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman cares to propose an amendment of that character when we consider the bill, I would not be opposed to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, if I have the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's suggestion relates to a general mineral reservation. Of course that is not what this bill provides. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: The only double withdrawals that are likely are not of two of the classes of minerals named in this act, but of coal, oil, and gas. There are, or are likely to be, such withdrawals as that—withdrawals of the same land for coal, oil, and for gas. Coal and coal land is not treated of in this bill directly at all, but this bill provides that there shall be a reservation to the United States of the minerals on account of which the land was withdrawn. Therefore if the land is withdrawn for oil and gas, the two being always coupled, and also withdrawn for coal, the reservation would be of the oil and gas and of the coal.

But you could scarcely logically amend this bill, if you are going to amend it so as to include in the reservation simply the minerals named here. It would be scarcely logical unless you are going to go further and include coal in the reservation and go still further to a general mineral reservation. The moment you depart from the kind of reservation that we have heretofore provided for in the case of coal, and which we are now extending to these other minerals—the moment you depart from that theory of the reservation of those minerals only for which the land is withdrawn—you must logically go to the extreme of withholding all minerals.

Mr. MANN. Why not do that?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a pretty large question, and it has been argued here several times, and I think personally there is a great deal of objection to making a reservation of the minerals which the lands do not contain. Of course it is barely possible that some other minerals might some time be found than those for which the land is withdrawn, but it is not at all likely, and if in the far-distant future such minerals should be found in the possession of farmers and others, I do not believe any public interest would be injured thereby.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that any good purpose would have been served if the Government had reserved the oil in Oklahoma, California, Illinois, and Kansas?

Mr. MONDELL. The oil in Oklahoma belongs to the Indians mostly.

Mr. MANN. Some of it. That was reserved there and the Indians are getting the benefit of it. Does the gentleman think that anyone knew or could have foretold that there was oil there in the first place?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think any good purpose would have been served if we had reserved the coal in Illinois and it had not passed to the possession of the farmers. However, we are doing that in the West, where we have not passed our lands, and I think it is entirely proper to do so.

Mr. MANN. I think a very good public purpose would have been served if we had reserved it in Illinois.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the monarchical theory is to reserve all minerals to the crown, upon the theory that the mere subject is not entitled to anything except the soil that he stirs. It is a relic of monarchical government, of peonage, if you please.

Mr. MANN. Feudalism! Why not bring it all in?

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. It is all of that. Our fathers departed from that plan. I do not think we should dispose of lands in fee simple for agricultural purposes that do unquestionably or probably contain valuable minerals, and we are reserving in such lands the minerals which they are believed to contain, which the department hopes they contain, which they show some evidence of containing; and it seems to me that is going quite far enough, and that it would not be wise to go further. It is a rather radical departure from our past practice to make a general reservation of all of the minerals. It should not be done. But if you are going to depart from the principle in this bill, which is the principle in the coal bill which passed a couple of years ago, there is no logical middle ground. It is either a reservation of the mineral or minerals which the lands are believed to contain or it is a reservation of all minerals. There would not be any logic in reserving simply the minerals named in this bill from lands that might be withdrawn under one of these classes. That would leave out coal, and the only other mineral that oil and gas lands are at all likely to contain is coal. Phosphate lands in our country are generally in a geological horizon which does not contain coal within a working distance from the surface. I know of no place in my State where there is a region having a geological formation that carries phosphate, that within any working depth from the surface contains a geological formation that carries coal or a geological formation that carries oil, but lands do sometimes contain both oil and gas and coal; sometimes those minerals are found, not very frequently, but sometimes in the same land.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if somebody had suggested when I was a boy that oil could be found in Illinois, he would have been hooted at as crazy, and the geologists, I presume, would have set him down as a fool. Here is a proposition to permit lands to be classified as phosphate, nitrate, or potash. They have some phosphate lands, but I do not recall that they have found any yet that are really nitrate lands, and I doubt whether they have found any that amount to very much that are potash lands.

Mr. MONDELL. We are looking for them.

Mr. MANN. That is correct. We are looking for them, and they will be of very great value to the country, but they have not classified any, and do not intend to, as nitrate lands. So far as that is concerned, the bill uses the term directly enough, but it does not amount to anything if enacted.

It does not protect anybody, as far as nitrates are concerned. Now, I can see no reason why, if you permit a man to take the surface of the ground and he is willing to take the surface for agricultural purposes, we should not reserve the nitrates, the potash, and the phosphate deposits there, of immense value to the agricultural community all over the country, and which will probably never be found in great quantities in many places. Even if they find the nitrates at all, it will be a small space of immense value, and even if we find anything of that sort and this bill passes, some man or company would hold up the United States for nitrates. Nobody will settle on these lands with the expectation of finding nitrates.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If you propose to reserve these supposed valuable deposits, who is going out to hunt for them?

Mr. MANN. People have not gone out to hunt for these things as a rule; that is just where the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What inducement will individuals have to go out and prospect if they are not to have some right to what they may locate?

Mr. MANN. They are usually out there hunting for something else in the locality, to begin with. Now, the gentleman from Wyoming thinks there is no middle course, while I think differently, but if there is no middle course, that is all right. I have not suggested anything but accepting the statement of my distinguished friend from Wyoming that there is no middle course, and not being willing to take the bill as it is, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the Calendar.

AMENDING SECTION 3646 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15987) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3646 of the Revised Statutes be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3646. That whenever any original check is lost, stolen, or destroyed, disbursing officers and agents of the United States are authorized, within three years from the date of such check, to issue a duplicate check, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment, and upon the execution of such bond, with sureties, to indemnify the United States, and proof of loss of original check, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That whenever any original check or warrant of the Post Office Department has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, the Postmaster General may authorize the issuance of a duplicate thereof, at any time within three years from the date of such original check or warrant, upon the execution by the owner thereof of such bond of indemnity as the Postmaster General may prescribe: And provided further, That when such original check or warrant does not exceed in amount the sum of $50 and the payee or owner is, at the date of the application, an officer or employee in the service of the Post Office Department, whether by contact, designation, or appointment, the Postmaster General may, in lieu of an indemnity bond, authorize the issuance of a duplicate check or warrant upon such an affidavit as he may prescribe, to be made before any postmaster by the payee or owner of an original check or warrant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this bill is of sufficient importance to have an explanation of its purposes. While the bill has been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the proposition pertains to the loss of checks of every character whether relating to pensions or any other debit of the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin I desire to say that the bill as originally introduced by me was entirely for the relief of pensioners, owing to the fact that under the present law when a voucher is lost the Treasury Department regulations do not permit a duplicate to be made inside of six months in the case where the voucher was for more than $50, and that, of course, results in a good deal of inconvenience, serious inconvenience to many of these old soldiers whose vouchers may be lost.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman makes it three years.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; it does not, and I will explain——

Mr. STAFFORD. It says it may be presented within three years—that is, a three-year limitation—and it prevents it being issued beyond that time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will explain it in just a moment. Inasmuch as many of these old soldiers are dependent upon their pension checks for living expenses to have them held up for six months is a very serious inconvenience, and the original bill which I introduced was to provide for that particular class, and in that form the bill was introduced. The bill was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee sent the bill to the Pension Bureau with a request for their opinion, and in answer, in a letter addressed to Gen. SHERWOOD, the chairman of that committee, the Commissioner of Pensions stated:

> It concerns the Bureau of Pensions only indirectly, but I may say that so far as this bureau is affected thereby I see no objection to the action proposed——

Mr. STAFFORD. I am fully acquainted with the report; I have read it. I direct the gentleman's attention to the proposition as to whether it is advisable——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will be patient for a moment——

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not desire the gentleman to read the report, as I have read it, and I do not wish to detain the House to that extent.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will give me the time, I think I will not detain the House very much. I will insert the two letters, one from the Department of the Interior and the other from the Treasury Department:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, January 23, 1914.

Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD,
Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I return herewith copy of the bill (H. R. 11893) introduced by Mr. Cramton and referred to me by Mr. Parrish by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The purpose of the legislation proposed is to amend section 3646, Revised States, as to the issuance of duplicate checks in lieu of those lost, so as to permit the issuance of a duplicate check at any time after the expiration of 30 days, in case of a check drawn in payment of pension.

The statute proposed relates to the business of the Treasury Department rather than to that of the Pension Bureau, and the authority granted therein is given to the Secretary of the Treasury. It concerns the Bureau of Pensions only indirectly, but I may say that, so far as this bureau is affected thereby, I see no objection to the action proposed. On the other hand, the ability to issue promptly a duplicate check in lieu of a lost check for pension would undoubtedly prove in some instances a matter of great convenience and real benefit to the pensioner.

Very truly, yours,
G. M. SALTZGABER,
Commissioner.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 23, 1914.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, inclosing, for the consideration of the department, copy of bill H. R. 11893, Sixty-third Congress, second session, being a bill to amend section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of March 23, 1906, etc., so as to authorize the issue of duplicates of checks drawn for any amount in payment of pensions after the expiration of 30 days and within 3 years from date of issue.

In reply I beg to advise you that the present law governing the issue of duplicate checks is section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, as reenacted by the act of February 23, 1909, and the department suggests in lieu of the bill submitted by you the substitution of the inclosed draft of a bill amending said section so as to provide for the issue of all classes of duplicate checks at any time within three years from date of issue under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. If enacted into law, this will enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide by appropriate regulation for the issue of duplicate checks of all classes at the expiration of such periods as may be deemed most desirable, and pension checks could under such a regulation be issued after the expiration of 30 days and within 3 years from date of issue, as suggested in the bill submitted by you.

The draft of the proposed bill has the approval of the department.

Respectfully,
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. CRAMTON. As the gentleman will see, it was then referred to the Treasury Department and the Treasury Department drew a new bill on a little broader lines in order to take care of the general situation, and in that bill it does not provide a limit, but it gives the Secretary of the Treasury authority to prescribe the regulations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under existing law, as I understand, the Secretary of the Treasury has that authority at the present time after six months has expired when a check has been lost.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, the gentleman is lifting that limitation entirely to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate check at any time after proof of loss.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations by which the department will issue duplicate checks, and inasmuch as it is a matter which concerns the department entirely it does not seem to me unreasonable to let the people who have the administration of the department determine under what conditions and at what time they will issue the duplicate checks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course if it is a small amount the existing statute applies, and there can be no objection to allowing them to issue duplicate checks after very brief periods, but if the check, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, has been lost, it would be questionable whether we should give the department the right to issue a duplicate check in a short time, even though a bond may be given in order to indemnify the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the first place, a bond is provided for. In the second place, it seems reasonable to believe that the department, having the actual experience with the matter and having the actual administration of the dapartment, would know as well what regulations were reasonable as we would down here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with that explanation I will not press the objection any further.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill, page 2, line 12, by striking out the word "contact" and inserting the word "contract."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "contact" and insert the word "contract."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings on the bill will be vacated back to the amendment stage.

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill, if he will give me his attention, why the proviso on page 2—the first proviso?

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the issuance by the Post Office Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is a reenactment of the old legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. You have, then, just reenacted the legislation?

Mr. CRAMTON. There has been no change after that "provided."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit with my earnest approval some resolutions unanimously adopted by the Tennessee Press Association and transmitted to me by the Hon. Rutledge Smith, a prominent Democrat, who was the efficient and worthy secretary to the Hon. James B. Frazier when a Member of the United States Senate. Also similar resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Knoxville, Tenn., its membership composed of the leading merchants of that progressive and enterprising city.

The Tennessee Press Association is an organization composed largely of Democratic editors. Recently I submitted resolutions to this House calling for an immediate adjournment of Congress by the Bankers' Association of Tennessee.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TENNESSEE PRESS ASSOCIATION,
Nashville, Tenn., June 6, 1914.

Hon. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully directed to the inclosed resolution, which was unanimously adopted by the Tennessee Press Association at its annual meeting, held in the city of Memphis, Tenn., June 4, 1914.

Yours, truly,
RUTLEDGE SMITH,
Secretary.

Whereas Congress has been in continuous session more than a year, passing tariff and currency legislation, to which the business of the country has not yet adjusted itself; and

Whereas, in view of this fact, business men all over the country are of the opinion that a legislative rest would be both wise and expedient at this time, taking the position that to enact laws that would tend to unsettle business conditions, no matter how meritorious, would not be to the best interest of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the business interests of the country would best be conserved by an early adjournment of Congress, and the secretary of the Tennessee Press Association is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House, Tennessee Senators and Members in Congress.

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Knoxville, Tenn., June 9, 1914.

At a meeting to-day of the Commercial Club, composed of the jobbers and manufacturers of Knoxville, the following resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

Whereas the present Congress has revised the tariff and enacted new banking laws, conditions which tend to affect business generally, and to which business has not had an opportunity to fully adjust itself; and

Whereas the country has suffered from the poor crops in 1913 and the outlook for 1914 is not at this time bright: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Knoxville, Tenn., is of the opinion that it would be unwise for Congress at this session to pass the bills which are now being considered by Congress for the regulation of business, as the people generally have not been given an opportunity to fully consider the nature of these bills, and their passage at this time would only tend to further disrupt the unsettled conditions of business; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Congressman.

G. E. BRADFORD, President.
H. D. FAUST, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FAIRBANKS, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6279) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building at Fairbanks, Alaska, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the erection and completion of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating, lighting, and ventilating apparatus, courtroom, jury rooms, and offices for the judge, marshal, prosecuting attorney, and other necessary officers, and in the lower parts shall include a jail, fully equipped with first-class iron cells and the general equipment of a jail complete; also room or rooms for post office, all sufficient for the use and accommodation of the United States court and officials, for the recorder, for the post office and other governmental offices, upon ground now owned by the United States in the town of Fairbanks, Alaska, where the courthouse and jail now stand; and the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the erection of said buildings: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 thereof may be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of that portion of the block wherein the said old courthouse and jail stand not now owned by the United States.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase that portion of the block whereon the United States courthouse and jail now stand, in the city of Fairbanks, Alaska, not now owned by the United States, at a sum not to exceed $15,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if there has been any request from the people of Fairbanks for an expenditure of this amount of money toward buying land?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the Delegate from Alaska is not here at present, but as I reported the bill I will state that there was a very urgent request, as I recollect, by the governor of Alaska and the grand jury of the Federal court asking for not only the purchase of the site but the construction of a building, and showing that there was an old, dilapidated building there used as a courthouse and, I believe, as a post office almost ready to tumble down and in a congested condition. But the committee under its rule that none but emergency cases should be reported thought that was not such an emergency case as would justify the committee reporting for the building.

But it was further developed in the testimony before the committee that a site would have to be acquired before a building could be constructed, and that the land which embraced the site was in the bankruptcy courts, in the hands of receivers, and would very likely be sold in a short time, and the Government would miss the opportunity, possibly, of acquiring it at all. Hence the committee amended the bill so as to strike out all of the authorization in regard to a building, and merely in view of the fact that they believed that the opportunity to purchase the site would pass from the Government unless we authorized it, they authorized the $15,000. There was not only a request from the people but from the court officials and the grand jury that held its session there. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] is perhaps more familiar with the facts than I am. Those are the facts that developed before the committee, however, and upon which we based this report as being an emergency case.

Mr. DONOVAN. The bill provided for a quarter of a million—$250,000?

Mr. BURNETT. That is all stricken out.

Mr. DONOVAN. And you have cut it down to $15,000 as a sort of beginning?

Mr. BURNETT. No; merely to save the site.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the population of Fairbanks?

Mr. BURNETT. Only a few thousands—a couple of thousand, possibly; but it has a Federal court there.

Mr. DONOVAN. This provides for a post office. What is the volume of the business of the post office?

Mr. BURNETT. Not a great deal. And the question of the amount of the business is not a question we considered or gave any consideration to at all. But it is a place where the Federal court is held, as I recollect it, and where the customs receipts are collected, and a great number of other governmental offices are there. The Delegate can state more fully with regard to that matter than I can.

Mr. DONOVAN. The report says here that the present building occupies half a block. What is half a block in Fairbanks?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Half a block there is 60 feet wide and 120 feet long.

Mr. DONOVAN. And what is the population of the town?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. About 5,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the volume of the business of the post office?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The mail from that whole great interior country comes to Fairbanks and is there distributed for a thousand miles down the river.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is the gentleman able to state the amount of business? Does not he know anything about it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the volume of business?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In what respect?

Mr. DONOVAN. The amount of money the Government takes in—the receipts of the office.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know the amount of the receipts of the post office.

Mr. DONOVAN. And is the business on the wane or on the increase?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is very greatly on the increase.

Mr. DONOVAN. And the gentleman is the Delegate from Alaska. I will inform the gentleman he ought not to bring in a measure of this kind without being familiar with it. The business fell off $2,000 last year, according to the reports of the Post Office Department. The total business in 1913 amounted to $10,139, and in the year ending March 31, 1914, it amounted to $8,094. The total population of the place is 3,541; and the gentleman was a party to bringing in a bill here asking a quarter of a million of dollars for a population of that size.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If the gentleman had an appreciation of what goes on in the West, he would know all about this.

Mr. DONOVAN. The Post Office Department says that the business fell off from $10,000 in 1913 to $8,000 in 1914. It is a dying business. Mr. Speaker, I think we have taken a great many chances up in that country with $35,000,000 for a railroad.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir. The gentleman from Washington always enlightens us.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does it not occur to the gentlemen from Connecticut that under the administration in which he plays a part he will expect to see a greatly increased business at Fairbanks, which will be a terminal of that railroad, and does he not think that it is entitled to a public building, and that now is the time to get it, when the land is cheap?

Mr. DONOVAN. You do not want me to qualify as an expert, do you, and undertake to foretell the future? [Laughter.] I leave that to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who does undertake to do that and play the divining act. He not only knows all that is going on in the present, but knows what will happen in the future. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, I can foretell the gentleman's future. He is serving his last term in Congress. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman is out of order. The gentleman is out of order most of the time. [Laughter.]

The population of Fairbanks, according to the census, is 3,541; and, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the business of the post office has fallen off, and in view of the fact that neither the committee nor the gentleman who is the Delegate from Alaska here know what they are talking about, I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. DONOVAN. No. What you want to do is to go and inform yourself as to the facts. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE AT THOMASVILLE, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15110) to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land for the post office in the city of Thomasville, Ga.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the portion of land between the post-office site and Madison Street, same width as post-office site and running back 56 feet, to enlarge the site for the post-office building at Thomasville, Ga., at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut reserves the right to object.

Mr. DONOVAN. From reading this bill I find there is no amount stated as the limit of the appropriation. Is that true, or have I read it wrong? There is no limit as to the amount appropriated.

Mr. PARK. The bill says "not to exceed $5,000."

Mr. DONOVAN. Let me ask the gentleman how much is expended there for the post office?

Mr. PARK. Nine thousand dollars has been expended for a site.

Mr. DONOVAN. How much for the building?

Mr. PARK. Nothing for the building.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the population of the town?

Mr. PARK. About 5,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Nine thousand and 5,000 are 14,000. Is the gentleman willing to offer every little place $14,000 for a post office?

Mr. PARK. No, sir; but this is the second largest winter resort in Georgia, and during the winter a great many people go there.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does not the gentleman think that $5,000 is a considerable price to pay for a plot of ground in a small town?

Mr. PARK. It is in the center of the city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there any reason for this except the desire of the people of Thomasville to have the Government buy the land in order that they may have a park named after our late colleague, Mr. Roddenbery?

Mr. PARK. Yes, sir. There is another reason not given in the report. We expect to ask later, if we can get it, a United States court room, and the people wish the ground to be extended far enough to put the court room above the clerk and marshal's office and the post office.

Mr. MANN. Then the purchase of this land is not needed, so far as the present building is concerned? It is not needed for the erection of the building now authorized?

Mr. PARK. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does anybody contend that this would be an emergency matter, just to have the Government buy a piece of real estate?

Mr. PARK. It is this way: If the erection of a building is to be begun in the third quarter of this year, unless we can secure it now we can not get it at all. We wish to put the building in the center of that plat.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the man who wants to sell property always says that unless the purchaser buys it now the opportunity will be gone forever. I have been taken in myself in that way, and have learned better. I have owned some property that was said to be very cheap when I bought it years ago, and I can not get as much for it now as I paid then. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARK. Well, will the gentleman reserve his objection to the bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will reserve it.

Mr. PARK. I wish to offer an amendment by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can have his amendment read for information.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. The enlarged site, except where buildings, further additions, and approaches are located, to be used as a park to be known as "Roddenbery Park," to be maintained by the city of Thomasville, Ga.

2. That the maintenance of the park in no way interferes with present or future plans of the Government regarding governmental use of the site.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, in a little city, largest but one in the district whence I come and second largest winter resort in Georgia, an appropriation of $70,000 has been made for a post-office site and building; a site has been purchased, and plans and specifications prepared.

The site is in the heart of the city on the corner of two prominent streets.

The authorization and appropriation were obtained through my predecessor, whose home was there and where his family still live.

Since his death the city authorities desire me to ask Congress for $5,000 to secure an addition to the site, which will give them, in all, a space 144 by 211 feet, and they wish the building placed in the center. It now faces two streets; it will then front three.

The Supervising Architect states that it is unnecessary to change plans, and no changes will be made except approaches, which will not add expense.

The people of Thomasville ask Congress to allow them to make a park of the space not occupied by the building, to be maintained at their expense and not interfere with the rights of the Government, only the privilege to adorn and care for it—the right to name it "Roddenbery Park" for my predecessor.

The park will be in the business center, facing east the Tosco Hotel, north the county courthouse, and west the Stewart House.

By my request, and by the grace of the President and the Senate, the widow of Congressman Roddenbery has been appointed postmaster in Thomasville, and she will preside in this building.

The park is to be sodded and planted in bulbs, shrubs, and trees.

Here will commingle the blue of the violet and the gray of the lily.

Here will intertwine the white rose of the North and the red rose of the South, whose fragrance and beauty shall tell of peace never again to be broken by warring sections.

Here the Confederate jessamine, bravely clinging, will reach to kiss with perfume breath the folds of the sheltering flag.

Here morning-glories in sweet accord will point their purple bugles to the skies to greet the roseate dawn.

Here may come the health seeker and breathe with healing the balsam-laden air.

Here may the myrtle flaunt its crimson plumes in shimmering, golden sunshine, and aromatic shrubs breathe their incense in atmosphere trembling to the droning of bees.

Here in the heart of this health resort, set like a jewel in the bosom of southwestern Georgia, I ask the Congress to perpetuate the memory of Seaborn Anderson Roddenbery; here, where he lived, had his triumphs and defeats, his sorrows and his joys, and died and is buried—the country of the grape, the melon, and the peach; the clime of the honeysuckle, the eglantine, and yellow jessamine, which draw their exquisite flavor and fragrance from the air in which they bloom and ripen; and when loving hands of his former fellow citizens shall adorn the spot, you will behold again "the hawthorne bush with seats beneath the shade for talking age and whispering lovers made."

Here will "the musk of magnolia hang thick in the air and the lily's phylacteries broaden in prayer."

Here the convalescent, the puny child, and sickly babe may rest in the calm of Indian summer, in the gentle zephyrs of blushing spring, and may breathe the ozone of subtropical winter.

In this lovely park the mocking bird, "the trim Shakespeare of the South," will year after year build his nest and rear his young and trill in sweet concord his roundelay.

And all will go to enshrine in the hearts of his countrymen the name and fame of a loyal son of Georgia and the South.

I earnestly ask the Members of this House to pass the bill. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I had a very high opinion of the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Roddenbery, during his lifetime, and I have the same feeling about him now; and I also have a very high opinion of his successor [applause], who has paid to the memory of Mr. Roddenbery a beautiful tribute. But I do not believe that Congress is called upon to erect a statue or provide a park for each Member of the House as he passes on. I doubt whether we could commence with one and stop there. There are some Members of the House that I would be willing to erect a statue for—but not yet. [Laughter.] I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. PARK. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection just a moment, while I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment and offer one that the gentleman can not object to?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment is not before the House.

Mr. PARK. I wish to have it read.

Mr. MANN. I withhold my objection. I do not care how many amendments the gentleman offers.

The SPEAKER Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Strike out all below line 2 and insert:

"That the city of Thomasville, Ga., acquire title to the land between the post-office site and Madison Street, same width as post-office site and extending 56 feet, and make good title to the Government of the United States to enlarge the post-office building site at Thomasville, Ga.

"2. That the enlarged site, except where buildings, further additions, and approaches are located to be used as a park, to be known as Roddenbery Park, to be maintained by the city of Thomasville."

Mr. MANN. Still reserving the right to object, what is there that will prevent the city of Thomasville doing this, if it wishes to?

Mr. PARK. We could not use the remaining portion of the lot unless the Government permitted us to do so. The city can deed it to the Government when they acquire it, and then they would like to use the entire lot that is not occupied by the building and approaches.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand this sufficiently to consent to its consideration now. The gentleman can ask to have the matter go over.

Mr. PARK. It involves no appropriation of money on the part of the Government. I will ask that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12019) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, and of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, as amended by an act approved February 11, 1913, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any person who has made, or shall make, homestead entry of lands of the character herein described, and who has not submitted final proof thereon, or who, having submitted final proof, still owns and occupies the land thus entered, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his first entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated as subject to this act, as provided by section 1 thereof.

"SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proof, as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under said section, prove by himself and two credible witnesses that at least one-sixteenth of the area embraced in such entry was continuously cultivated for agricultural crops other than native grasses, beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry: Provided, That any qualified person who has heretofore made, or who hereafter makes, additional entry under the provisions of section 3 of this act to an entry upon which final proof has not been made, may be allowed to perfect title to his original entry by showing compliance with the provisions of section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, respecting such original entry, and thereafter in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date of such original entry, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry, which cultivation, while it may be made upon either the original or additional entry or upon both entries, must be cultivation in addition to that relied upon and used in making proof upon the original entry; or, if he elects, his original and additional entries may be considered as one, with full credit for residence upon and improvement made upon his original entry, in which event the amount of cultivation herein required shall apply to the total area of the combined entry, and proof may be made upon such combined entry whenever it can be shown that the cultivation required by this section has been performed; and to this end the time within which proof must be made upon such a combined entry is hereby extended to seven years from the date of the original entry: Provided further, That where an entry is made as additional to an entry upon which final proofs has heretofore been submitted by an entryman who still owns and occupies the land thus entered, the entryman in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date thereof, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry and must be performed upon the land included therein to the extent and for the period required in connection with original entries under this act, proof of which must be submitted within five years from and after the date of the additional entry: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to require residence upon the combined entry in excess of the period of residence as required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 23, strike out the word "heretofore" and insert the word "theretofore."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Oregon with regard to the extent to which this bill amends the present law. My understanding is that the first change from the present law is found on page 2, beginning with the beginning of line 4, and extending down to the word "entered" in line 5.

Mr. SINNOTT. In section 3.

Mr. MONDELL. In section 3, page 2. Is that correct?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; the first amendment is to section 3.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the first change from the present law. The gentleman proposes to reenact the present law, and the first and only change in section 3 is the addition of the words in lines 4 and 5, as follows:

Or who, having submitted final proof, still owns and occupies the land thus entered.

That is the only change from the present law in that section, is it not?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, there is no other change in the law that I discover from reading it hurriedly until we reach the proviso beginning in line 22, on page 3.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there is a change on the bottom of page 2, in lines 24 and 25, inserting the words:

To an entry upon which final proof has not been made.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; that was necessary in order to harmonize with the provision which follows.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. Then the next change is the proviso.

Mr. MONDELL. The proviso beginning with line 22, on page 3.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And extending down to and including line 8, on page 4.

Mr. SINNOTT. Ending with the word "entry." Then there is a transposition of the last proviso which is in the original bill, the proviso beginning in line 8, page 4.

Mr. MONDELL. As the law now stands a homestead entryman who has not made final proof on his land, and who still holds his land as an unperfected entry, may, providing the adjacent land to that so held has been designated as enterable under the enlarged homestead, take an additional tract in such an amount as will with his original tract not exceed 320 acres.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill proposes to amend the present law by allowing a homesteader who has made final proof, but who is still living upon his land——

Mr. SINNOTT. And owns it.

Mr. MONDELL. And owns it, to exercise the same right, under the same conditions, as he could if his homestead was unperfected.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, it extends to the homesteader living on a perfected entry the right which a homesteader living on an unperfected entry now has. It is certainly wise to do that. We tried to do it when we passed the enlarged-homestead bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. And that is the only change.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, I would call the gentleman's attention to the proviso in section 3:

Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated as subject to this act, as provided in section 1 thereof.

Of course under the present law all of these designations would be enterable whenever the classification had been made, because there is no title in the entryman. But with this change which is now made in this bill you provide that land now in private ownership shall first be designated as subject to entry under this act, which can not be done.

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, yes; they do it.

Mr. LENROOT. How?

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin aware of the fact that land in private ownership is now designated under the enlarged homestead law? The Land Office, in making designations under the enlarged homestead law, does not go to the trouble of determining the exact status of titles of all the lands designated, and lands that are in private ownership are frequently designated under the enlarged homestead law.

Mr LENROOT. How is it possible that private lands can be enterable?

Mr. MONDELL. The designation is not, strictly speaking, a declaration to the effect that they are enterable.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the term used in the act. The designation is this: The Secretary of the Interior expresses the opinion that the lands he describes do not contain merchantable timber, and that they are not susceptible of irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply.

Mr. LENROOT. But how are private lands enterable? How are such lands affected one way or the other by the designation?

Mr. MONDELL. They are not affected by it, but in including lands in the designations private lands are frequently included in the general area designated. For instance, in the eastern part of my State there is a vast area from the northern line of the State to the southern line of the State, approximately 40 miles wide, and practically all of which was designated in the way I have suggested except some bordering along streams; that great designation covers lands private and public.

Mr. LENROOT. Not to affect any rights.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. Here private rights are affected.

Mr. MONDELL. We do not change the law except to say that if a man who has a homestead on which he has made proof that has been included in one of these designations and additional land adjacent also so included, he may take——

Mr. LENROOT. Is it proposed to have the land in private ownership subject to the enlarged homestead law?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; they are lands designated as to their character.

Mr. MONDELL. The designation is a designation as to the nontimber and nonirrigable character of the lands. The public lands are not necessarily enterable because they are so designated, because if they do in fact have merchantable timber they are not enterable and could not be patented. If they are in fact irrigable, they could not be patented.

Mr. LENROOT. All lands now designated by the Secretary under this act are enterable.

Mr. MONDELL. Not unless they are actually enterable in fact. The fact that the Secretary designates them as nontimbered, nonirrigable lands does not of itself make them enterable under that law. The Secretary's designation is simply that certain lands which he describes, frequently an entire township, are, in the opinion of the Secretary and to the best of his knowledge, not timbered and not susceptible of irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known water supply. That is a guide to the entryman. If, in fact, the entryman can and does swear and bring witnesses to prove that the lands are of that character, he can and does enter them. Of course, until the Secretary has made the designation, expressed his opinion in regard to them, the affirmation of the entryman has no effect. But what the designation amounts to is an expression of opinion from the best knowledge he has as to the character of the land as to timber and irrigation upon which the entryman has the right to make his application.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the floor. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not the floor.

Mr. MANN. Then I will be glad to take the floor, in order to ask a question of some gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question as regards the only amendment in section 3, which applies to the man "who, having submitted final proof, still owns and occupies the land thus entered." It permits the man who has actually gone on the land, filed upon it, made final proof, and received a patent notwithstanding the fact that the Secretary has not designated the adjoining land to obtain the benefit of the 320-acre homestead. Under this bill is it not a fact that upon the application of the homesteader owning his land and living upon it, if the adjoining land is of the character provided for under the homestead law, that this man can get the adjoining 160 acres which he ought to get?

Mr. MONDELL. Not unless the land he has made proof on has also been designated.

Mr. RAKER. The Secretary designated the land which has been filed upon.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, what we refer to as a designation of land enterable is not in fact a designation of land enterable, but a statement as to the opinion of the Secretary relative to the character of the land. The law prohibits lands which contain merchantable timber or lands which are irrigable at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply from being entered under the enlarged-homestead act. It further makes it the duty of the Secretary to designate lands which do not come within these prohibitions. In other words, he designates lands as being lands not susceptible of irrigation at a reasonable cost and as not containing merchantable timber, and much of the lands so described are in private ownership.

Mr. RAKER. And land of the character designated in the enlarged-homestead law he can designate subject to entry under that law.

Mr. MONDELL. To be accurate, he designates it as not containing merchantable timber and not being irrigable at a reasonable cost from any known water supply. It being such, it is enterable under the enlarged-homestead act.

Mr. RAKER. If the land has then been designated, or even before it has been designated, if a man makes his application and the department will then investigate, and if they find it of the character the law permits, he then may file on the whole 320 acres. Under the law as it exists to-day, when land has been designated before he files, it does not permit a man who has filed on this character of land, who has borne all of the hardships incident to such a life, to get the additional 160 acres, because he has made final proof and secured a patent for his first 160-acre homestead. It may take him some little time to get the matter in proper shape, and his application may be pending for the additional 160 acres. Because he has made final proof he is deprived of the right to obtain the additional 160 acres of land that is contiguous to his original entry.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says deprived of his right; of his right to what?

Mr. RAKER. His right as an American citizen to go and take up the land and improve it.

Mr. MANN. He has no such right at all, either legally or morally.

Mr. RAKER. He has a right to take up the land, build his house, raise his family, and improve the land. This bill should be enacted into law, and should pass now.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The leader of the minority ought not to be allowed to take the floor and interrupt the gentleman without getting his permission.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut has not been recognized by the Chair. What right has he talking to the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, just one moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13717) to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the entryman mentioned in section 2291, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of June 6, 1912 (37 Stats., 123), upon filing in the local land office notice of the beginning of such absence at his option shall be entitled to a leave of absence in one or two continuous periods not exceeding in the aggregate five months in each year after establishing residence; and upon the termination of such absence, in each period, the entryman shall file a notice of such termination in the local land office; but in case of commutation, the 14 months' actual residence, as now required by law, must be shown, and the person commuting be at the time a citizen of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon what is the need of this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the present homestead law leave of absence permits absence to be taken in one continuous period of five months. This present bill aims to permit that leave of absence to be taken in two separate continuous periods. It frequently happens that the homesteader desires a leave of absence during the harvest season and also during the winter months. In the harvest season, if he leaves his homestead, he may obtain employment in the harvest fields and then return to his homestead and do whatever is necessary to be done there. Then, by having a leave of absence during the winter period, he may work in the forests or in the lumber camps.

Mr. MANN. I remember very well when the bill was passed.

Mr. SINNOTT. It was really thought then that under the original bill he might obtain such an absence, but the department has construed that differently.

Mr. MANN. I do not know who so thought. It was not so stated here; quite the contrary. It was stated at that time that it was desirable to permit the homesteader, in the wintertime, when he could do nothing on his homestead, to go somewhere else and earn some money. The proposition now is to let him go in the wintertime and then, in the summer time, when he ought to be on his homestead, let him go and harvest somebody else's crop. What will he do on his land during the time that he is there? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. SINNOTT. He will be plowing his land, putting his crop in, and once in there may be very little necessity in probably a great many cases for his being there. His wife or his family may remain on the homestead, and he may be away working at whatever work he can find.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, this bill would particularly affect the homesteaders on the arid region, and it is apparent that oftentimes these men have crop failures and they are unable to earn money and maintain themselves on their homesteads, and it is absolutely necessary in order to support their families that they may go into the cities and do whatever they can in order to hold their filings. We in the West are facing a loss of homesteaders by reason of the fact that these men, if they are obliged to remain on the land continuously, can not support themselves.

Mr. SINNOTT. There is frequently nothing for them to do upon the land.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Absolutely nothing. If their crop is a failure, they have no live stock and they can secure no employment within the immediate vicinity of their holdings, and they are obliged to go sometimes a long distance into the mountains, or wherever they can find employment; and if they could do that it would result, in my judgment, in a large number of these homesteads, instead of being deserted, being retained and ultimately improved upon and settled.

Mr. MANN. Will it not just encourage them not to have live stock and not to really make permanent improvements?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I think not.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has well explained his bill, but I want to say, in addition, that it is a very meritorious one. I think it is in the interest of the settler who needs help. The original necessity for a leave of absence law was to aid the poor man by allowing him to get out for a while and work. This bill simply lets him go off just the same amount of time but in two different periods. I perhaps do not know as much about it as the gentlemen who live out there, but my State was once a homestead State, and I myself was once a homesteader.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman complete his homestead?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and I have the farm yet.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman probably did not stay on it five months in the year?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. I stayed there all of the time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman think if the homestead laws had been administered in the spirit in which the act was passed that there never would have been any occasion for such legislation as this?

Mr. FERRIS. That may be true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The legislation passed in the last Congress granting homesteaders a leave of absence was made necessary because the department became so technical in requiring an absolute continuous presence of the claimant in order to obtain title to his land that we had to pass a law that specified that he might be absent a few months within the year.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I know of an instance where a young woman attended the National Educational Association, at Los Angeles, Cal., and was away from her homestead for two weeks, and her proof was suspended and held up because it was considered an absence without leave.

Mr. MANN. She was probably a school-teacher and had never resided on the land except nominally.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, without trying to assume the rôle of an expert, or to tell more about a homestead than anybody else, I think what the gentleman said is entirely true. There was a time in the country when land was land, and nobody cared who got it or how title was obtained; but the condition of the public mind is altogether different to-day, so that, whereas once a man could earn a living and run back to the homestead and stay there for a few nights, to-day he is suspended and his proof is rejected, and he is fought all along the line. I very much hope there will be no objection.

Mr. MANN. Hopes are not always realized.

Mr. FERRIS. It is easy to realize that on unanimous-consent day.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oklahoma will recall when the five-year leave of absence provision passed the House originally it did not provide for a continuous leave of absence, but simply gave the homesteader five months during the year during which he could be absent.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. That was found necessary owing to the technical construction which the department had placed on the law.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is true.

Mr. MONDELL. And in conference of the two Houses the provision making the leave of absence continuous was inserted, and——

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). And there was a good deal of doubt at that time as to whether that provision was wise, but there was a good deal of insistence on the part of the administration officers of the department that we should try it. Now, it has not worked so well.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question? Mr. Speaker, in regard to the matter in hand, the gentleman from Illinois has reserved the right to object, and I trust he may find his way clear not to do so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care what people trust or hope. If they have information, I will be very glad to have it; but the gentleman from California ought to learn by this time that hopes and trusts do not go in the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under consideration for a good many years. Deserving men have gone off to work and their homesteads have been contested. Homesteaders have gone to town in order to make some provisions for the assistance of their children, and their homesteads have been contested, and many, many hardships have been brought about on that account. Now, when the five months' leave of absence was given it was thought by the Senate it would be better to have it at one time. The House thought it would be better to have it in two or three periods, but the Senate put in one continuous leave of absence of five months. Now, there are many times and many reasons why men should go away for five months and come back and attend to his matters at home, and then go away and go to work somewhere else, and then come back and attend to his duties, seeing to his family, and at the same time properly and legitimately improving his homestead, and it is a good law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the gentleman from California has said, and in spite of the reasons he has given, I shall not object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STREET RAILWAY SYSTEM, SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8660) to amend sections 4 and 17 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, is hereby amended so that the first paragraph of subsection (e) thereof shall read as follows:

"(e) The construction of the railway shall be commenced and at least the sum of $20,000 shall have been expended or contracted to be expended within two years after the passage of this act by the Congress of the United States, and at least 2 miles shall be completed, equipped, and ready for the transportation of passengers within two years after such commencement."

SEC. 2. That section 17 of said act is hereby amended so that the second paragraph thereof shall read as follows:

"The association shall not issue stock in excess of the amount paid to it therefor in cash and $100,000 additional, nor shall it issue bonds at less than 90 per cent of their par value, and the entire proceeds of its stock and bonds shall be applied to capital expenditure."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee one or two questions. This bill proposes to extend the time for the completion of this railroad two years.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. And also permit the promoters to water their stock to the extent of $75,000 instead of $50,000, as provided now?

Mr. HOUSTON. It increases the amount of stock above the amount paid in $25,000 in addition to the $50,000.

Mr. LENROOT. That is watering, of course. I notice in the report this language:

The hearings developed that, owing to the financial depression, the parties were unable to fully comply with this provision.

These promoters expected to raise this money in the United States, I take it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I am not able to answer that question as to where this money is to come from.

Mr. LENROOT. Where does this financial depression exist?

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose it exists in the Island of Hilo—the Hawaiian Islands. There is where the railroad is proposed to be constructed, and I presume there is where the depression exists.

Mr. LENROOT. That is where the gentleman thinks the financial depression exists?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not stating there is any financial depression existing there.

Mr. LENROOT. But the committee states the fact, and I think it is only fair to inquire what was in the mind of the committee when they made that statement.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, the gentleman means some one said it somewhere in the hearings?

Mr. LENROOT. I am reading from the report. I will ask the gentleman this other question; my first question was preliminary. Does the gentleman think this financial depression is to continue for two years more, so that we could not now extend the time for complying with the provisions of the act without issuing additional watered stock?

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to make any prophecies in regard to depression, business or financial, but I must say I am not under any apprehensions of any depression being greater, and I hope that within the next two years it will be better and continue to grow better.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. But, so far as that is concerned, it is directed only to the business and financial ability of the parties who are undertaking this enterprise. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming in a moment. This is only a proposition to extend their time two years, and also to extend the amount of stock that may be issued in excess of the money paid in the sum of $25,000.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming; he asked me first.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, with these sugar planters, if this sugar plantation supply railway is in a bad way now, when the duty on sugar has only partly been reduced, how can we hope or expect it is going to be any better off when sugar goes on the free list?

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into any discussion of free sugar or the tariff bill at all; it is not necessary.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not want a political discussion?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not fair to be injected into this discussion.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not propose to go into a political discussion of the merits of this proposition?

Mr. HOUSTON. Not at all.

Mr. GARNER. I do want to make an inquiry of the gentleman. One thing seems to me rather anomalous, and that is to permit this company to issue one-third more stock than the money they pay in. What is the reason for that?

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I am just taking this proposition as we find it. This bill was passed by the Territorial Legislature of Hawaii granting this franchise. After that it came to Congress with some amendments, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, it was passed through Congress two years ago. Now they claim that on account of the expense incident to putting this enterprise on foot it was necessary to issue this amount of stock. They furthermore have proof, as shown in the hearings, or make the claim, that they have expended the amount of $50,000, or something more, in the preliminary part of the enterprise. Now, I am not able to give the details of that.

Mr. GARNER. The very proposition of an act of Congress permitting a corporation to issue more stock than the amount of money they pay in does not appeal to me, I must say, as one Member. I do not understand the philosophy of permitting a corporation to water its stock by act of Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the judgment of the gentleman from Tennessee as to how the Interstate Commerce Commission would do that under the bill recently passed, where they have to approve a bond issue by railroads? Does the gentleman believe the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it were left to it as to a matter in this country, would allow the railroads to issue watered stock in that way?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not feel called upon to pass on that question, Mr. Speaker. This is a business venture. I want to say that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] was on the subcommittee that especially had this matter in charge, and I believe he helped to prepare this report, and perhaps is more familiar with the facts surrounding it than I am.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. ELDER. Do you not think this would be establishing a precedent by Congress to recognize the watering of stock as a legitimate thing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We found that a long bill had been passed and approved on August 1, 1912, reserving a great many rights to the territorial government of Hawaii, and it carried some little liberality in the hope that they might build a street car line in the little town of Hilo, of 7,000 or 8,000 people. It is proposed to build the line from the center of the town out to the Government breakwater. They got this bill passed, which allowed $50,000 to be used in excess of the stock to be sold. That money was largely used up in legal business and in promotion and in going to Germany, as that was where the capital was originally interested, and they found they were not getting anywhere with the thing, and this bill, H. R. 18041, passed two years ago, will expire on August 1 next.

Mr. ELDER. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not questioning the time it expires and have no objection to that. But it occurs to me that simply to allow the promoters, who took the original expense, and pay them $25,000 for their promotion, and the rest put on the market, is a recognition by Congress, it seems to me, of the watering of the stock.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no heart in the matter at all.

Mr. ELDER. Certainly. I do not mean to intimate that. It is of no particular interest to me except in the way that I have stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the people of Hawaii came here with their maps, and they worked very hard on it. They have used up this original stock which they were allowed to issue. They still think and hope that they can build the railroad. In the meantime the Japanese have come in there and brought these Ford automobiles and have put in cross seats and carry people out to the breakwater for 10 cents. When we were considering it in the subcommittee and in the full committee, former Gov. Frear appeared on another matter, and he was asked to state his opinion about this, and in our hearings here we had the indorsement of this plan from him.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I understand from the gentleman that this company now has issued $50,000 worth of stock?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As near as I can remember. We went into it at some length.

Mr. LENROOT. And that has not gone into the capital account at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The lawyers who got the papers ready, and this and that agent, were paid in stock or promises of stock. I do not know how it was done.

Mr. LENROOT. Unless the gentleman will accept an amendment striking out section 2, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] a question? The gentleman from Tennessee will be on the conference committee. This is a House bill, and if it passes the House under these conditions, will the gentleman see that the House is protected in its views upon section 2?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state in regard to that matter that as a conferee appointed by this House, I would feel it my bounden duty to reflect the sentiment of this House. I can not go further than that.

Mr. ELDER. Would the gentleman consider his duty in line with the sentiment of this House if we strike out this amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House accepts that action, I will insist on it as a conferee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. DAVENPORT of Oklahoma and myself were a committee to talk with these people, and we agreed with them that this might be put in. Unless it is by another resolution, it will undoubtedly end that part of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 2 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is another committee amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. But the committee amendment is to section 2, the next amendment, as I understand it. I propose to strike out the section.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] to strike out section 2. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. That was the same amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended in conformity with the text.

On motion of Mr. HOUSTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INCOME TAX ON RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9770) to levy and collect an income tax on railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the normal income tax of 1 per cent there shall be levied and collected 4 per cent on the net annual income of all railroad corporations doing business in Alaska, on business done in Alaska, which shall be computed and collected in the manner provided in the act of Congress, approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," the proceeds of which tax when collected shall be paid to the treasurer of Alaska and be applicable to general Territorial purposes. So much of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," or acts amendatory thereof as impose a license tax of $100 per mile per annum on railroads operated in Alaska is hereby repealed, and all penalties for nonpayment thereof are hereby remitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] rise?

Mr. WATSON. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. We have not reached that point yet. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] reserves the right to object.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia, in charge of this bill, if this bill provides for a change in the way of taxation in Alaska from $100 per mile to 4 per cent of the net income of the railroads?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, can the gentleman give us any idea of what the tax would likely be on a railroad in Alaska that has been in operation for some time—what the tax would be on that basis instead of the $100 per mile?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that under the present system of taxation revenue is received from only two railroads in Alaska. The $100 per mile flat license tax has resulted in shutting down three of the railroads in Alaska, and they are not now in operation.

Mr. FOSTER. Right there can the gentleman give us the length of those railroads—what their mileage is?

Mr. WATSON. The total railroad mileage in Alaska is 452 miles, of which the three railroads referred to comprise about 250 miles. There is a fourth railway which is 45 miles long which has had a kind of intermittent operation; so that, roughly speaking, 300 of the 452 miles, or in the neighborhood thereof, is not now in operation in consequence very largely of the present system of taxation; and under the law which now prevails so many penalties have accrued against these railways as to amount to confiscation if an attempt were made to collect the penalties.

For instance, on the railroad running out of Fairbanks, which is 45 miles long, and to which I have made reference as being operated in part, or, more correctly speaking, for a portion of the year only—a railroad which cost for construction about $800,000—the penalties that have accrued for operating, without paying the license tax, aggregate between four and five million dollars, six or seven times as much as it cost to construct the road in the first instance.

Now, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that three of the railroads in existence pay no tax under the present system, and that the fourth one is operating with penalties accruing upon it and has not paid the mileage tax for the present tax year; that only two of the railroads have paid this tax; that neither of those roads has any considerable general traffic in the Territory of Alaska. One of them is the railroad that runs from Cordova to the Kennicott copper mines, generally known as the Guggenheim property, a distance of 196 miles. The general traffic of that road is not believed to be sufficient to enable them to pay the $100 a mile license tax, but the hauling of ores from its own mines has enabled it to pay the tax.

The Yukon road, which runs through the White Pass into Canadian territory, traversing Alaska for 20 miles, conducts a considerable volume of Canadian business and has also paid the license tax. These two railroads, under the bill proposed by the committee, would probably pay more tax to the Government than they now pay.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, on the net income of 4 per cent?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; on the net income at the rate of 4 per cent. So far as the committee could get any information, which I will say to the gentleman is only approximate, these two railroads which are now revenue producers to only a small extent would yield more revenue than they do under the present statute. As to the four other roads, they yield nothing at the present time. Under the proposed enactment they would perhaps yield nothing for several years to come.

Gentlemen must be familiar with the fact that these small railroads in a pioneer country have not the traffic to produce any profit to their owners or to pay any revenues to the Government. As an illustration, I will mention the fact that the road which runs out of Fairbanks 45 miles, and which has incurred such enormous penalties during the past year for not paying the license tax, according to the returns for the year 1913 had a net income of only $2,000. The present tax would be $4,500, as the gentleman can calculate. In all human probability, as I have said, the measure proposed by the committee will yield no revenue for some years to come from any of these railroads except the two which are now conducting operations. As a matter of fact, the act of 1899—the act organizing the Territory of Alaska, known as the organic or enabling act—exempts the railroads of Alaska from local taxation by the territorial legislature until some time in August, 1917. Two of these five years have already elapsed, so that within three years' time the territorial legislature will have the power to tax these railroads in accordance with a system of its own suited to local needs and conditions at that time. There is no probability that within this period of three years there will be any net income derived by the Government from the traffic of these railroads.

I will say to the gentleman also, that several times in the recent past there have been passed acts of Congress exempting different ones of these roads from taxation in recognition of the fact that they were making nothing out of which to pay taxes. These periods of exemption have generally been for five years, as I recall. They have all now expired. No railroad in Alaska, other than the two named, is willing to hook an engine to a car to send mail, or a piece of mining machinery, or a party of prospectors a single mile for fear of incurring the enormous penalty which the statute imposes upon it for not paying the license in advance. The result is that mining prospectors have no means of getting to the mines; it is impossible to send any machinery to the mines. There is no transportation.

Mr. MADDEN. If this law were passed, would you say——

Mr. FOSTER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. I will now yield to the gentleman [Mr. FOSTER]. I will with pleasure yield to the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] later.

Mr. FOSTER. I was going to ask this: Your idea after investigation is that these small railroads that are now built in Alaska can not and will not operate unless we give them some relief in this way, but that these other railroads which are possibly not producing a profit, except by the carrying of the ore belonging to the company that owns them, can afford to pay this tax. Is that the understanding of the committee?

Mr. WATSON. That is the understanding of he committ e, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask whether, if this act became a law, the railroads that are not now operating would begin to operate, so as to carry machinery and passengers into territory where they are not now able to go by rail?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is the very purpose of it.

Mr. WATSON. The committee believe that the railroad in the Seward Peninsula, another railroad called the Solomon River and something else—the name escapes me—the railroad from Fairbanks to the mines, which is now operated in partial disregard of the tax requirement, and possibly the railroad from Seward to a point 72 miles north, called the Alaska Northern Railway—that all of these railways would resume operations either continuously or from time to time, so as to afford some accommodation to the population residing along their routes should this bill become law.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the penalty now imposed on the railroads for operating when they fail to pay the tax?

Mr. WATSON. The license tax is payable in advance. If the railroad company operates a single day without having paid that tax, it incurs a penalty equal to the tax itself, which is $100 a mile. The second day it incurs a penalty double that, and the third day treble that, and so on ad infinitum.

Mr. MADDEN. What information has the committee on the question of the net earnings of the railroad which is said to be 196 miles long?

Mr. WATSON. The railroad running from Cordova to the Kennicut copper mine is of course subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MADDEN. Have any reports been filed showing their net earnings?

Mr. WATSON. There have been partial reports filed, from which the committee have been able to approximate the net earnings.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the judgment of the committee as to the net earnings?

Mr. WATSON. The judgment of the committee is that the 5 per cent income tax, which is the normal income tax of 1 per cent with this 4 per cent added, as provided in the bill, would yield a little more revenue than the $100 per mile, which on this road, at present rate of tax, is $19,600 per year.

Mr. MADDEN. The so-called Guggenheim road would pay $19,600 a year under the present law?

Mr. WATSON. Under the present law, yes; and would pay a little more under the proposed income tax. The White Pass & Yukon Railroad now pays $4,500 a year——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ELDER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] objects.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection.

Mr. ELDER. I am perfectly willing to reserve my objection, but the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] forces me to object. The regular order was called for.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to state that the main purpose of this bill is not so much for the benefit of these railroads as it is to furnish some transportation to the different portions of Alaska where these small railroads happen to run. These railroads are now shut down. They are not operating. If they were operating continuously, of course their operations would be very beneficial. If they would run occasionally, they would afford a very great benefit to the people within that territory. It is a great hardship upon these people not to have the benefit of the roads that have been built there by this capital, and that are not able——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request for the regular order, but I can not for the life of me understand how people would advocate large property escaping taxation.

Mr. HOUSTON. As I said, it is not for the benefit of the property owned by the railroads that this bill is introduced, but it is in order that the people in this Territory, laboring under the great disadvantages which surround them, shut off from transportation to and from the outside, shall be able to get in there to prospect, to get machinery in there, to develop mines, and things of that sort. It will be of very great benefit to the people of that country if they can have this road.

Mr. ELDER. There are other classes of property in Alaska, whether operated at a profit or not, and do they not have to pay a certain modicum of the taxes?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. ELDER. What reason is there, even if the railroads are not operated at a profit, why they should not pay their proportion of the taxes?

Mr. HOUSTON. For the reason that the people of Alaska may have the benefit of transportation that these roads would afford. It has been the practice in this country in opening up new country to exempt the railroads from taxation, in order that they can be established and furnish facilities for transportation and develop the country. When they have made good and got a footing, when they can be successfully operated, then they pay taxes.

Mr. ELDER. Why do not the railroads raise the rates?

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Is it not a fact that this bill provides a taxation of 4 per cent?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; and if the property invested in the roads makes anything we will get taxes on it whatever it is. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] has said, that income would be small. It would be small, but I think there would be some, and whatever there was would be taxed. This change of method of taxation is for the purpose of giving that country, which is laboring under so many disadvantages, but has such enormous resources within its borders, an opportunity to make a beginning.

Mr. ELDER. The question that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] asked was what I asked a few moments ago. The private property owned by private individuals has to pay its portion of the taxation.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true, but their properties are not situated like this. Their business is not transportation for the whole people in reach of these railroads.

Mr. ELDER. But could not the roads raise their transportation rates to meet the charge, and let the people of the country pay the taxes instead of the General Government giving it to them?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; the roads can not raise the rates, because the transportation rates are so high now that they ought not to be increased. That is the difficulty surrounding the railroads in a new country. They are already high, and this bill is for the purpose of letting the settlers have the benefit of their operation, and we want to give them this aid in supplying their wants in this country.

Mr. ELDER. I can not quite agree with my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the gentleman from Louisiana understand that there is provided by this bill a revenue to be derived of 4 per cent in taxation?

Mr. ELDER. Yes; 4 per cent taxation on the net profits, and it is stated here that there are no profits. If they would make it 1 per cent on the gross profits, I would not object, but they come in and say we provide for 4 per cent on the net profits, and then in the next sentence they say there will be no net profits, and, of course, no taxation whatever. We were told during the passage of the Alaska bill that the great mining interests of the country, the Guggenheims, had grabbed Alaska by the throat, and now they come in with a bill relieving the Guggenheims from taxation. The people of my country have undeveloped property, but they have to pay taxes on it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill does not propose to relieve the Guggenheims's railroad from taxation. On the contrary, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], we believe that that road will pay as much taxes under this new system as it does at present, and even more.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Speaking of the Guggenheim road, if you pass this, providing for 4 per cent on the net income, as they carry their own copper, is it not morally certain that there will be no net income, because they will simply reduce the rates?

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not be fair to provide a tax on the gross income? I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia who has charge of the bill what he thinks of a change from a tax on the net income to a tax on the gross income? I do not think it ought to be much, and I do not think we ought to bear down on the little railroads, and I think we can well afford to do that.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, it will be better for this bill to be amended so as to carry a small gross income tax rather than that the relief sought should fail at this time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think so.

Mr. WATSON. I was going to suggest that a gross-income tax in the case of perhaps two or three of these railroads might be a hardship, but I have no idea that it would be any hardship to the Copper River or the White Pass & Yukon Railroad.

In regard to the question of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER], it is absolutely certain that under the present system the Government is going to derive but little revenue from the railroads in Alaska. The gentleman assumes that we are losing revenue. As a matter of fact, you are getting but little at present. I want to say to him, furthermore, that there is but little doubt about the fact that the plan proposed in the bill will tax the Guggenheim property more highly than it is taxed under the present law.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Guggenheims make their own rates on their own property.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no way in the world for this Government to undertake to compute or to collect taxes from that or any other railroad except by conferring authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, or some other public body, to inspect its books and look into its accounts.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission has any power to order a raise in rates?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely unnecessary for me or this House to undertake to deal with that question.

Mr. LENROOT. But it goes to the very meat of this question.

Mr. WATSON. The Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to inspect the books and also to inquire into the business operations of that railroad company. The Government everywhere is bound to trust somebody, and I am not here to assert that any system can be devised whereby everybody can be compelled to conduct an absolutely honest business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment, I would like to have an understanding with the gentlemen whether they will agree to 1 per cent tax on the gross income. Otherwise I say frankly that I shall object.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], is willing that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana shall be accepted, and I myself have no objection to it.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether we can have the same kind of agreement in respect to the conference report on this that we had a moment ago, that the chairman of the committee will accept it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I will state, as I stated before, that when I am on a conference committee I shall try to reflect the will of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold that for a moment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think two other amendments ought to be added to this bill before it is thought of being passed. One is the railways, as a condition precedent, ought to give a bond that they will operate these railroads and that they are not getting this exemption for the sole purpose of clearing up title so that they can sell to the Federal Government. The second amendment is that they ought to pay a decent, reasonable tax on the property for the entire time they have had it. The present tax rate probably has been excessive, but they ought to pay something, and this should not be taken as a precedent to let any railroad company come in and have all of their taxes remitted. No one ought to ask such a thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that one, if not two, of these railroads has been specially exempted for a time, and that the time is about to expire.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of whoever has the floor.

The SPEAKER. No one has the floor.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here is the situation as it appears to me: This remarkable committee came in here a few weeks ago advocating and reporting a measure to expend $35,000,000 of this Government's money for railroads in Alaska, and now they come in and tell us the railroad can not afford to pay its taxes. I am going to object right here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] objects.

THE LATE ADLAI E. STEVENSON.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the subject of the late Adlai E. Stevenson.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the life and character of the late Vice President, Adlai E. Stevenson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, and gentleman of the House, 79 years ago Adlai E. Stevenson was born in the State of Kentucky. At an early age he came with his parents to Illinois, but returned soon after to Kentucky, and in 1856 he graduated at Centre College, in Danville, Ky. During his college career there developed the romance which lasted through his long life, and just after his graduation he married Miss Letitia Green, the daughter of the president of the college which conferred his degree upon him. She remained his faithful companion in all the vicissitudes of his long life until a few months ago, when she preceded him to the tomb.

In the early part of his career Adlai E. Stevenson was contemporaneous with Lincoln, Douglas, Logan, McClernand, Oglesby, and those other great sons of Illinois who long ago preceded him to the silent tomb. His active career in national politics commenced before most of the Members of this House were born. In 1864 he was a presidential elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1874 he was elected from the Bloomington (Ill.) district to the office of Representative in Congress. Two years later, in 1876, he was reelected. In 1884 he led the Illinois delegation to the Democratic national convention, the convention which named Grover Cleveland. From 1885 until 1889 he was First Assistant Postmaster General. From 1893 until 1897 he was Vice President of the United States. His active career continued almost until the day of his death. Five years ago he was the Democratic candidate in Illinois for governor of Illinois when long past the allotted age of three score and ten. He commenced to practice law in the late fifties in Metamora, Ill., and after that he practiced law in Bloomington, Ill., and his firm, the firm of Stevenson & Ewing, was for a long period of years one of the best-known law firms in the State of Illinois. He was successful in his business career, and long ago, years ago, when labor first commenced to organize and was demanding recognition, he recognized the right of laboring men to organize in the great coal industries, in which he was an important factor in that section of Illinois.

While he was active in political life, ready always to give his services to his country when his country demanded his services, he was a successful business man, honest and fair in all his relations with his fellow men. While he was a contemporary with those great Illinoisans I have mentioned, who long ago preceded him to the tomb, he was always young. Those of us who knew him best never thought of him as growing old. As his old friends died he renewed his activities and acquaintances among the young, and he retained his full physical and mental vigor up until the very last. Last Saturday the Illinois delegation—all of them signed the telegram—sent a telegram to him at the hospital in Chicago where for some months he had been ill, expressing our hope for his speedy recovery and expressing our sympathy for him on account of his serious illness. His son wired back that the message had been read to him and that he appreciated the fact that he was remembered here in the National House of Representatives, where he had served for four years; here in the Capital, where he served for eight years as Assistant Postmaster General and as Vice President of the United States. A few hours later his great heart ceased to beat. He died yesterday morning, Sunday, June 14, 1914.

Throughout his long and useful career no suspicion of dishonor or dishonesty ever attached to his name. On behalf of the Illinois delegation in Congress I desire to pay this last tribute of respect to his memory. His life work is over; full of years and of honor, with unfaltering step he approached the end. In the State which produced a Lincoln, a Douglas, a Logan, and an Altgeld, we consider him one of our greatest citizens. His soul has gone back beyond the stars to God, who gave it. To-morrow his body will be buried by the friends he loved in the State he so signally served during all the years of his long career. Great mind, generous soul, kind friend, adieu. May the earth press lightly upon the heart of Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois. [Applause.]

INCOME TAX ON RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] is willing to waive his objection to this bill if there is no other objection and let it be considered with the amendment proposed here, and I would ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. What bill is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. BRYAN. The railroad bill proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON]. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be restored to the status it was when Mr. DONOVAN objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent that House bill 9770 be restored to the status it occupied at the time the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] objected.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I think that we have had enough discussion on this bill, and the more I think of it the more I am against it, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXCHANGE OF FOREST LANDS WITH THE STATE OF OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 49) to provide for the exchange with the State of Oregon of certain school lands and indemnity rights within the national forests of that State for an equal area of national-forest land.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Oregon is hereby authorized to select, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, a compact body of not to exceed 40,000 acres of unappropriated nonmineral land within townships 10 and 11 south, ranges 5 and 6 east, Willamette meridian, in the Santiam National Forest, Oreg., to be maintained as a State forest to secure its highest permanent usefulness to the State of Oregon and particularly to the common schools to which its resources are devoted and to State forestry demonstration and education, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant and convey said selection to the State of Oregon for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 2. That in exchange for the selected lands the State shall reconvey and relinquish to the United States a good and sufficient title to an approximately equal area of unencumbered sections 16 and 36, or parts thereof, of substantial forest values satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture, within the national forests of Oregon, granted to said State, or indemnity rights within such national forests to which the State is entitled therefor: Provided, That the lands reconveyed and relinquished as base lands shall immediately become parts of the national forest in which they are situated.

SEC. 3. That the lands conveyed to the State shall be at all times subject to use by the United States for the construction, maintenance, and operation of roads, trails, telephone or telegraph lines needed in the administration of the contiguous national forest areas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he would be willing to have the bill provide that the land to be exchanged should be of substantially equal value?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter of this bill and the proposed change were negotiated by Gov. West, of the State, and the departments, and I do not believe that the State authorities would be willing to accept this amendment. Gov. West contends that the State lands, and particularly the indemnity lands, are worth a great deal more than is set forth in this report, that for exchange purposes and for base purposes the State lands and the indemnity lands are worth from $17 to $20 an acre, and I took that matter up with him, and I do not believe they would consent to this amendment.

These lands are to be withheld from sale for a period of 50 years, and are to be devoted to school forestry purposes.

Mr. MANN. Well, possibly they will be devoted to school forestry purposes, but that is not what it says. What it says is particularly as to the common schools, to which its resources are devoted. Then they ask us to give them land worth twice as much as the land they want to give to us in exchange. I really do not see any reasonableness in that proposition.

Mr. SINNOTT. It will foster instruction in forestry. In the State of Oregon we have at least one-fifth of the timberland in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Do you not want to foster instruction in forestry?

Mr. SINNOTT. We do, and are willing to do it.

Mr. MANN. But you want to do it at our expense?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; a great part of that timberland is owned by the Federal Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the report, the State of Oregon has ample school lands which they could transfer for these 50,000 acres of equal value or substantially equal value if they saw fit to do so?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I do not believe they have. It is stated in the report of B. T. Galloway, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, that the State of Oregon is proposing to surrender its best lands.

Mr. MANN. They have plenty of land they could transfer or they would take the smaller amount. I do not blame them at all. They want the best end of it. And the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] naturally is endeavoring to protect the interests of his State. I do not know whether the rest of us are here wholly for that purpose or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the forest lands in the State of Oregon that are proposed to be exchanged are scattered all through the national forests, are in all a very large number, and make a very serious problem. Now, I think Gov. West's contention is that the lands of the State are estimated at too low a value. I have been over a good deal of the forest lands of the State of Oregon in which these sections are located, and agree with the governor that the lands of the State are very valuable.

Mr. MANN. But this bill does not estimate the value of these lands. That is a matter that can easily be revised. But the question is whether Congress in authorizing the exchange of 40,000 acres of land to Oregon shall require that 40,000 acres of substantially equal value shall be given by Oregon to the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. As I understood from Forester Graves, who went to Oregon and talked this matter over with the authorities of the agricultural college and the State authorities, he was satisfied the lands proposed to be given to the Government in exchange for these lands on the Santiam, in a general way and taking into consideration all the conditions, would be in general a fair exchange, mutually satisfactory to both parties.

Mr. MANN. I think not. I do not think anybody pretends that at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report contradicts that absolutely.

Mr. MANN. The Forestry Service contention, if I understand, from personal opinion, was that we could afford to give 40,000 acres of land to Oregon if they would maintain a forestry school. I doubt if there is enough in this bill to maintain a forestry school, even.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have talked with Forester Graves, and I repeat what I thought he said to me about the matter.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The letter from the Secretary of Agriculture says that the value of the Government land is about twice as great.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of course, that is from another authority, but I believe from my talk and from what I understand of the State authorities' position that statement is not well founded in fact. From my information I am led to believe the exchange would be mutually profitable and fair under the circumstances.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but that is easily revised. The bill does not determine that. The value of the land can be determined upon further consideration, but what reason is there, liberal as the General Government is, for exchanging land on the supposition that we give two to one?

Mr. SINNOTT. The State of Oregon agrees to withhold this land from sale for a period of 50 years. The legislature has passed an act reserving that land for that length of time and devoting the land to a school of forestry.

Mr. MANN. Where is that agreement?

Mr. SINNOTT. The legislature has passed the act already.

Mr. MANN. But they could repeal it to-morrow. There is no such agreement in this bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is to be expected that they will keep faith with the General Government.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any faith they have to keep. We do not require them to do anything about it. On the other hand, we put in the bill a provision to the effect that it is to be devoted particularly to the common schools. That is not a school of forestry. That is a direct contradiction of the theory upon which the gentlemen have advocated the passage of this bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. On line 11 it is stated that it is devoted to a school of forestry, demonstration, and education. The proceeds, whatever they may be, are to go to the common-school fund.

Mr. MANN. Line 11 where?

Mr. SINNOTT. On page 1 of the bill. There it is stated, "State forestry, demonstration, and education."

Mr. MANN. Either the gentleman from Oregon has not the bill that is pending before the House or else I have not. I have Senate bill 79, as reported to the House.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is what I have.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oregon yield for a question—the handsome gentleman?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor.

Mr. SINNOTT. Has the gentleman from Illinois the bill that passed the Senate?

Mr. MANN. I have the print of the bill that passed the Senate and was reported to the House.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have the print that passed the Senate and was reported to the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, this place is to be maintained as a State forest?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. It is to devote its resources to the common schools.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oregon yield for a question?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is this the bill that the present governor of Oregon and the land commission have gone into thoroughly, and which the governor is so anxious to have passed because of the benefit it will be to the Government and the State?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is the bill approved by the Acting Secretary of Agriculture and also by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and by the Forestry Service.

Mr. RAKER. I have received several letters from Gov. West, of Oregon, in regard to the matter, and I suppose the other members of the Committee on Public Lands did. The committee reported the bill out, and evidently they thought that it was to the interest of the State of Oregon and to the interest of the United States, and would give an equivalent in exchange, and reserve the timber, and allow the matter to be properly administered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SINNOTT. What was the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Substantially the same value of land to be exchanged.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I have not the authority to change the provisions of the Senate bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, the great lawgiver of the House——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I shall object to this bill whenever it is presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HEADQUARTERS, CUSTOMS DISTRICT OF FLORIDA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6433) to relocate the headquarters of the customs district of Florida.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the headquarters of the customs district of Florida shall be at Tampa, in said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask why this customs district is removed from Jacksonville to Tampa?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say, in answer to that question, that the headquarters ought to be in Tampa.

Mr. MANN. That is in the gentleman's district. That is a sufficient reason. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OCHOCO NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 533) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of consolidating the forest lands belonging to the United States within the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange lands belonging to the United States which are part of the Ochoco National Forest for privately owned lands of substantially equal value and area lying within the exterior limits of said national forest: Provided, That upon consummation of an exchange hereunder the lands acquired by the United States shall thereby become a part of said Ochoco National Forest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar——

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is too late.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no pressing objection to the bill, Mr. Speaker, and if the Speaker rules that it is too late, I do not care to press it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had asked if there was objection, and had stated that there was none, and had announced that the bill was on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMBASSADOR TO ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13667) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to the Argentine Republic.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, whoever is in charge, I want to suggest to him that it is about time to adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, let us finish the next three bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Nobody is in charge.

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not wish to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. This being unanimous-consent day, nobody is in charge except the Speaker.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Connecticut makes the motion to adjourn——

Mr. DONOVAN. I am not going to make any motion to adjourn. I thought some one was running the ceremony here.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the next bill is the bill authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to the Argentine Republic. A Senate bill providing for the appointment of an ambassador to Argentina has already passed the House, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this bill will lie on the table.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF TREATY OF GHENT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13922) to approve of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Ghent between the United States of America and Great Britain and Ireland, and of the century of peace and amity between the United States and other nations.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. DONOVAN. Delighted.

The SPEAKER. Likewise the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN]. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

FOURTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HOME EDUCATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11179) authorizing the Secretary of State to extend invitation to foreign countries to send delegates to the Fourth International Congress on Home Education.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to extend an invitation to foreign countries to send delegates to attend the Fourth International Congress on Home Education, to be held in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, September 22 to 29, 1914, under the auspices of the International Commission on Home Education: Provided, That the attendance of such delegates to whom invitation may be extended by the Secretary of State shall be at no expense to the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the gentleman in charge of the bill does not seem to move on it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not suppose there would be any objection to it.

Mr. MANN. Let us see if I am correct about this bill. It is to authorize the Secretary of State to extend an invitation to foreign countries to send delegates to the Fourth International Congress on Home Education. What is the Senate bill that has been reported in reference to education, to accept an invitation elsewhere?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It has no reference to this matter.

Mr. MANN. What is it for?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not know. This is a House bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not as well posted on what his committee does as I am. On Friday or Saturday the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported House joint resolution 273, requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign countries to participate in an international congress on education.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]. It is a different bill from this.

Mr. MANN. Is it a different Congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes. At any rate, is has not passed the Senate or House.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at is who issues these invitations.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The President.

Mr. MANN. This bill provides that the Secretary of State shall issue them.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, the Secretary of State can issue them.

Mr. MANN. He can if we give him authority. But who is the proper person to issue them?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I suppose the President is the proper person, but the Secretary of State, under the authority of this bill, can issue them.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better lay this aside and find out.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think there is any doubt about it. The bills usually provide that the President shall issue the invitations; but there is no reason in the world why the Secretary of State should not issue them.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the report in this case says:

The purposes of the congress are the correlation of all the forces interested in social progress and the betterment of the human race, which is so much to be desired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Nothing could be better.

Mr. MANN. If they correlate all the forces into the social progress of this educational congress, we had better abolish this congress. That made me suspicious of the whole thing, when I read it in the report, because I would not accuse the gentleman from Virginia of originating that language.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I think I copied that from some statement made in reference to it.

Mr. MANN. Not from the Secretary of State, but from the man who lives from promoting the enterprise.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Some gentleman interested in educational work—probably the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE].

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think that is an unfair criticism on the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? There is another phase to this bill that has often been considered in this House, and that is the proposition of inviting the countries of the world to participate in a convention or congress or entertainment, the Government not being at any expense. It is almost impossible or inconceivable that the Government can entertain people from foreign countries—invite them here—without being at some expense.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The Government will not entertain them, but the congress is going to entertain them. While that question has been raised a number of times, still a number of bills have been passed like this providing for the invitation and no appropriation for it.

Mr. GARNER. Is not there danger of embarrassing the Government and putting us in an awkward attitude?

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that formerly there was some expense in entertaining the delegates, but that grape juice is now very inexpensive?

Mr. GARNER. It does not look well to invite people as guests and not entertain them. It is like inviting one to your home and then saying, "We will not be to any expense to entertain you," and putting it off on somebody else. That is the only objection I see to invitations of this kind.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentlemen interested in this work, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] are seeking to have the invitations extended and in getting the bill through. I hope it will not be objected to, because they are interested in it; the purposes of the bill seem to be good, and the purpose of the congress seems to be good.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that the better form would be to have the President of the United States issue the invitations, and I think the most of the resolutions have been drawn in that way. Would the gentleman be willing to accept such an amendment?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suppose there would be no trouble about that, whatever the proper method is. I do not think it is desirable to have the President or the Secretary of State to invite foreign countries to send delegates here and then not even furnish them with salt or bread.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That will depend on the organization.

Mr. MANN. If we issue the invitations we can not depend upon them, as we have found out several times heretofore.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We found out several times that we could do it and I do not remember of any time when we found out that we could not do it.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman some instances. I know that I sweat blood for a month, not only in reference to an appropriation for an international congress but for the use of the Capitol Building.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. In that case it was contemplated the Government should entertain these delegates.

Mr. MANN. Not to any extent.

Mr. HARRISON. And there was no expression to provide that they should not be paid by the Federal Government, as is provided in this bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. None at all.

Mr. MANN. We have had several cases, especially the one at Buffalo, in which it was expressly provided in the bill that there should be no expense incurred by the Government of the United States, and we have made an appropriation to pay the expense. President Taft sent a message to Congress especially requesting us to make an appropriation, and saying he did not think the President ought ever to be authorized to extend an invitation to foreign delegates unless the United States was prepared to pay the expense of taking care of those delegates, which at the time I thought was very good sense.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Still we have passed a number of them since that time with this provision in it. Congress did not seem to agree with President Taft about that.

Mr. MANN. We passed a few recently, but we do not know what the outcome is going to be. Most of those passed are to accept invitations.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; and also some extending invitations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15799) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for any person qualified to make entry under the homestead laws of the United States to make a stock-raising homestead entry for not exceeding 640 acres of unappropriated unreserved public land in reasonably compact form: Provided, however, That the land so entered shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as "stock-raising lands."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on application or otherwise, to designate as stock-raising lands subject to entry under this act lands the surface of which is, in his opinion, chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, do not contain merchantable timber, are not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and are of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not designate for entry under this act lands of such character that, in his opinion, 640 acres will not support a family.

SEC. 3. That any qualified homestead entryman may make entry under the homestead laws of lands so designated by the Secretary of the Interior, according to legal subdivisions, in areas not exceeding 640 acres, and in compact form so far as may be subject to the provisions of this act, and secure title thereto by compliance with the terms of the homestead laws: Provided, That instead of cultivation as required by the homestead laws the entryman shall be required to make permanent improvements upon the land entered before final proof is submitted tending to increase the value of the same for stock-raising purposes, of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre, and at least one-half of such improvements shall be placed upon the land within three years after the date of entry thereof.

SEC. 4. That any homestead entryman of lands of the character herein described, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, shall have the right to enter, subject to the provisions of this act, such amount of contiguous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act as shall not, together with the amount embraced in his original entry, exceed 640 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries, but improvements must be made on the additional entry equal to $1.25 for each acre thereof.

SEC. 5. That persons who have submitted final proof upon, or received patent for, lands of the character herein described under the homestead laws, and who own and reside upon the land so acquired, may, subject to the provisions of this act, make additional entry for and obtain patent to contignous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act, which, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead law, shall not exceed 640 acres, on proof of the expenditure required by this act on account of permanent improvements upon the additional entry.

SEC. 6. That in the event there are not contiguous lands in area sufficient to complete an entry of 640 acres, as provided for in this act, the entryman or patentee shall have the right to enter within a radius of 10 miles from his first entry subject to the same requirements as specified for contiguous additional entries, lands in reasonably compact form which have been designated for entry under the provisions of this act, that shall, together with the first entry, not exceed 640 acres: Provided, That the entryman shall be required to enter all contiguous areas open to entry prior to the entry of any noncontiguous land.

SEC. 7. That any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of 21 years and is a citizen of the United States, who has entered or acquired under the homestead laws, prior to the passage hereof, lands of the character described in this act, the area of which is less than 640 acres, and who is unable to exercise the right of additional entry herein conferred because no lands subject to entry under this act adjoin the tract so entered or acquired or lie within the 10-mile limit provided for in this act, may, upon submitting proof that he resides upon and has not sold or encumbered the land so entered or acquired, relinquish or reconvey to the United States the land so occupied, entered, or acquired, and in lieu thereof, within the same land-office district, may enter and acquire title to 640 acres of the land subject to entry under this act, but must show compliance with all the provisions of the homestead law and of this act respecting the new entry: Provided, That the lands so relinquished or reconveyed as herein provided shall thereafter be subject to disposition only on such terms and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

SEC. 8. That the commutation provisions of the homestead laws shall not apply to any entries made under this act.

SEC. 9. That any homestead entryman or patentee who shall be entitled to additional entry under this act shall have, for 30 days after the designation of lands subject to entry under the provisions of this act and contiguous to those entered or owned and occupied by him, the preferential right to make additional entry as provided in this act: Provided, That where such lands contiguous to the lands of two or more entrymen or patentees entitled to additional entries under this section are not sufficient in area to enable such entrymen to secure by additional entry the maximum amounts to which they are entitled, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make an equitable division of the lands among the several entrymen or patentees applying to exercise preferential rights, such division to be in tracts of not less than 40 acres, and so made as to equalize as nearly as possible the area which such entrymen and patentees will acquire by adding the tracts embraced in additional entries to the lands originally held or owned by them: Provided further, That where but one 40-acre tract of vacant land may adjoin the lands of two or more entrymen or patentees entitled to exercise preferential right hereunder, the tract in question may be entered by the person who first submits to the local land office his application to exercise said preferential right.

SEC. 10. That any person who has heretofore acquired title to land under any of the homestead laws of the United States and who is the owner and occupant of the land so acquired may purchase from the United States not exceeding 320 acres of stock-raising lands, as designated by this act, or unappropriated and unreserved lands valuable only for grazing contiguous to his said homestead, upon paying to the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for such lands, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which said land, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead laws, shall not exceed 640 acres.

SEC. 11. That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine and remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof, where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land, to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the surface of the land.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations in harmony with the provisions and purposes of this act for the purpose of carrying the same into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman that this is rather an important bill, somewhat long, having 12 sections in it. I understand the Committee on Rules has agreed to report in a rule for the consideration of certain bills which seek to deprive entrymen of rights. Why could not they not have included this bill in the list which seeks to give entrymen some rights?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I went to the Committee on Rules, and was told that the bill affecting certain measures in regard to the conservation of resources in the West was already loaded down sufficiently, and they would not add this bill, though I think they should have done it.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, there is not anything in those conservation bills which give any rights to the settlers on the land in addition to what they otherwise would have. I think they are good bills, in the main, but I should think that the Committee on Rules might be willing to report a rule for the consideration of one bill which sought to give some rights to the homesteaders.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I agree with the gentleman; but inasmuch as they did not do it, and because of the very great importance of this bill, I hope that the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows the House could not pass this bill to-day, even if it were taken up. If it were taken up for consideration, it would take at least a day to consider it. How can the gentleman expect to pass it on a Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. FERGUSSON. It is a very important bill. It was considered for many weeks, or days at least amounting to weeks, in the Committee on Public Lands. Extensive hearings were had.

Mr. MANN. I think it is an important bill, and there are certain important amendments that ought to be made to it before it is workable, but it seems to me the gentleman ought to get the Committee on Rules, which is now seeking to say what the House shall do, to report in favor of the consideration of a bill which is on the side of the homesteaders seeking to give him some rights, instead of on the side of the Government, seeking to take away rights from the homesteader, both of which are proper.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I understand that, but if the gentleman will permit me, this bill is of urgent necessity to be passed at this time, first, from the standpoint of the Government itself——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Why was not this bill included in the so-called administration conservation program, for which a rule is to be brought in?

Mr. FERGUSSON. It was simply because the rule now is loaded down sufficiently with bills. That is the answer that I obtained.

Mr. MONDELL. But does not the conservation program propose to do anything for the settler seeking a home?

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman think this bill is so good that it ought not to require a rule to be brought in to consider it?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, it is a most excellent bill, and I hope to see it become a law. I am very much more anxious to have this bill become a law than some of these so-called conservation bills.

Mr. FERRIS. If that is true, then the gentleman ought not to object to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not objecting; certainly not.

Mr. MANN. Under the provisions of this bill it would not amount to a row of pins if passed. It has to be amended to make it valuable.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, being a Member not interested in public lands, that some unanimous consent might be had now to consider this bill at some particular time where it can be given deliberate consideration and amendments offered and considered.

Mr. MANN. When such a request as that is made I will see then what I will do.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I am not misinformed, a petition was signed by a large portion of the membership of the House, asking for a rule on certain conservation bills. I do not understand that this bill was included in that request, and that may account for the Rules Committee not having provided for it, and furthermore I do not think it occurred to them that perhaps a rule ought to be necessary for a bill of this kind.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, let me submit a request to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and see if the gentleman will have any objection to it. It is undoubtedly too late to consider this bill to-night. Would the gentleman have any objection to giving consent for its consideration and let it be taken up two weeks from now and considered? This bill is important to the West and the development of the West. Let it be taken up now and then go over as unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. There are six pages of titles on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day. We are still working on the second page. Does the gentleman desire on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to take up a bill that probably would take a couple of unanimous-consent days, which means a month? We ran into that on the Calendar Wednesday business, from which we will probably be extricated now. Does the gentleman want to fix a day so you can not get a bill up on Calendar Wednesday or the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and can not move to suspend the rules? You can not call up a bill now that is not privileged, nobody can on any day, without getting the Committee on Rules to approve it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, while there is some truth in what the gentleman says——

Mr. MANN. It is all true, what I have said.

Mr. FERRIS. We do have a hard time in getting up many bills, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that practically all winter Calendar Wednesday has been taken up with two bills, the Alaska railroad and the codification bills.

Mr. MANN. And I tried to prevent it and the gentleman voted in favor of it.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not recollect whether I did or not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not recall what he does——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bill that is needed very badly in the West, and it is important to gentlemen on both sides; there are no politics whatever in it. I would be very glad if the gentleman from Illinois will give his permission for it to go over until next unanimous-consent day, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON] and myself would like to see what the gentleman desires in the way of amendments, and we can get this thing in shape, and then we could get it through in an hour or two.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want permission to take up this bill to-night and two weeks from to-day until——

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think it will take the time the gentleman thinks it will.

Mr. MANN. And then four weeks from to-day, until a month is used——

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think it will take that long.

Mr. MANN. If we adjourn before autumn we will be ready to adjourn by that time, and in the meantime no one can get any bill passed, no matter how small or how important it is to the public or to the Member. Now, I think it is a hoggish thing to make a request of this kind.

Mr. GARNER. If this is such an important bill, can not we come back here——

Mr. MANN. Can not the Committee on Rules, which is now saying what we shall consider, report a rule in for this bill?

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, if the Committee on Rules is going to bring in a rule here that will limit the debate to an hour on a side and pass the bill under a five-minute rule, he will very likely complain.

Mr. MANN. I surely would, if they tried to pass the bill without debate. But that is what you are trying to do with this.

Mr. GARNER. No; we want to consider it.

Mr. MANN. No; you do not want to consider it. You want to pass it, a bill under which if 639 acres will support a family, you can not get 640 acres, and under which if 641 acres are necessary to support a family, you can not get 640 acres. It is so crudely drawn it would not take a Pennsylvania lawyer, but a schoolboy could walk through it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. Can he not include this in the list of bills that he asked to have a rule for?

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to make the remark that while gentlemen on this side are trying to get a bill up for the benefit of the homesteader the gentlemen on the other side are playing politics.

Mr. MANN. I want the gentleman to know that that is not true.

Mr. FERRIS. They have been playing politics on that side of the House, and we want to get away from it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] demands the regular order. And the regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KITCHIN, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. FITZHENRY, on account of funeral of ex-Vice President A. E. Stevenson.

To Mr. ADAMSON, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. VAUGHAN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a correction of the RECORD, or, at least, to make a statement concerning an item in it that concerns me. On Friday last I was called to New York City to meet a relative, who came with a little child on the evening of that day from Europe. Before going I requested to be paired against the Senate amendment to the tolls bill, that amendment being only a proviso annexed to the bill, the language of the bill itself otherwise remaining exactly as it originally passed the House, and referring exclusively to exemption of tolls on our coastwise vessels.

This morning on examining the RECORD of Friday I find myself paired not only against the Senate amendment, but also in favor of an amendment offered on that day in the House by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss]. I knew nothing about the Moss amendment until I saw the RECORD this morning. By his amendment it was declared that the United States has the right to exempt from tolls for passage through the canal not only coastwise vessels but all vessels of the United States and its citizens.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question as to our right to exempt "all" vessels of citizens of the United States was not in controversy, and I do not wish at this time to be recorded as either for or against that proposition. Under the law and regulations which govern the canal all vessels of citizens of the United States engaged in trade between the United States and foreign countries and passing through the canal will pay the same tolls as will English or German or other foreign vessels passing through it—that is, $1.20 per ton. The bill raised no question concerning our vessels engaged in foreign trade. The controversy related only to the exemption from tolls of our coastwise vessels. And I was and still am unalterably opposed to the British contention—that the United States has no right to exempt from tolls our own ships, doing our own exclusive coastwise business, through our own canal.

The question of our coastwise traffic is a purely domestic question. It is utterly, indefensibly wrong to permit any foreign nation, in even the slightest degree, to interfere with our domestic commerce. England would not tolerate such an interference in her domestic affairs. A distinguished Member of another body has called the attention of the country to the fact that the London Times, although a strong advocate of the repeal of tolls exemption for American coastwise vessels, said a few days ago:

> It must be conceded in behalf of the United States that if the United States should ever indicate a desire to deal with the domestic commerce of Great Britain, it would be resented.

Mr. Speaker, I was opposed to the Senate proviso because, under all the circumstances preceding the repeal, the bill and proviso amounted to a complete surrender of vastly important American rights. It is my judgment that, in accordance with the treaties and with the plainest principles of justice and honor, the United States had the right to exempt from tolls American coastwise vessels passing through the canal. It was the maintenance of this right and not the question of economic policy which was of paramount importance.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Territories be hereby discharged from further consideration of the bill H. R. 17262, a bill extending the civil government of Alaska, and for other purposes, and that the same be hereby referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CURRY. Reserving the right to object, is that a request from the chairman of the Committee on Territories?

The SPEAKER. It is a request from the Speaker of the House. It was referred incorrectly through a misunderstanding about whether the Public Lands Committee agreed to a certain arrangement or not. The truth is that the Committee on the Public Lands already had the bill. Without objection, the reference will be changed.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill.

COST OF PUBLIC BUILDING, SMYRNA, DEL.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7298) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Smyrna, Del.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost heretofore fixed by Congress for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for a United States post office at Smyrna, Del., be, and the same is hereby, increased from $25,000 to $55,000.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 6, strike out "$55,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill some questions about it. How large is the city of Smyrna, Del.?

Mr. BROCKSON. The town of Smyrna proper has about 2,000 inhabitants, and there are three suburban villages, making about 2,500 population in all who get their mail from that office.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the proposition now of a change? Is it to increase or decrease the amount already authorized?

Mr. BROCKSON. To increase the amount.

Mr. CULLOP. From what to what?

Mr. BROCKSON. From $25,000 to $35,000.

Mr. CULLOP. What are the annual receipts of this office?

Mr. BROCKSON. That is for the site and the building and a fireproof vault, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. CULLOP. What are the annual receipts?

Mr. BROCKSON. Something over $6,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Over $6,000?

Mr. BROCKSON. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that a rule of the department is not to recommend the construction of a building where the receipts are less than $10,000 annually. Now, have you free delivery in that town?

Mr. BROCKSON. Not in the town, but there are free delivery routes radiating from it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Delaware will permit me, I will state that this post-office building was provided for in a bill enacted some years ago. The site has been bought and paid for, and it has been found to be utterly impossible to construct the building at all. There is only $20,000 available with which to construct the building, and we are simply providing $10,000 more to add to the $20,000 now available for the construction of the building.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reading the report from the department I find that they recommend $55,000 as the amount that will be needed to construct a suitable building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no intimation here whatsoever that the building can be erected for the increase of $10,000 recommended by the committee. What is intended by the proposed increase of this amount by $10,000 when you have only $20,000 available, when the department says that $55,000 in all will be needed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, well, the statements made by the Supervising Architect's Office are not always based upon absolutely sound foundation. Thirty thousand dollars will construct a nonfireproof post-office building suitable for this little place.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman from Delaware made any inquiry as to whether this additional $10,000 will enable them to construct a building suitable for the needs of this place?

Mr. BROCKSON. Yes; I have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any official information as to that?

Mr. BROCKSON. They say that amount will be sufficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the report to show that, and I was desirous of knowing whether $10,000 would be of any service.

Mr. BROCKSON. They paid $6,700 for the lot, and the citizens contributed $1,700, and only $5,000 was taken from the appropriation to pay for the lot.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 6, by striking out the figures "$55,000" and inserting "$35,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BROCKSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT—EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have permission, immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, to address the House for 20 minutes on a matter pertaining to a couple of items in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I have never asked permission to address this House before, with the three years of service that I have had.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we ought to agree to that to-night. I may not object to it to-morrow, but I can not agree to it to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects. The question is on agreeing to the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimates of appropriations for the acquisition of sites for post-office buildings at Hobart, Okla.; Honey Grove, Tex.; Moultrie, Ga.; and West Plains, Mo., with the request that the same be incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. Doc. No. 1038), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9701) for the relief of F. W. Theodore Schroeter, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 829), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4629) to reimburse Gaston R. Poitevin for property lost by him while assistant light keeper at East Pascagoula River (Miss.) Light Station, as recommended by the Lighthouse Board, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 830), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11157) for the relief of John A. Gauley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 831), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4628) for the relief of N. Ferro, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 832), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1213) to provide for the refunding of certain moneys illegally assessed and collected in the district of Utah, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 833), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 201) for the relief of John W. Cupp, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 834), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9622) providing for the relief of the heirs of Waldo M. Potter, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 835), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. VOLLMER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6653) for the relief of Mary Van Deventer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 836), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16425) for the relief of the Schwarzchild & Sulzberger Co., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 837), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. VAUGHAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6895) for the relief of Amy M. Sorsby, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 838), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17267) to authorize Frank A. Gardiner to construct a bridge across the waters of Pistakee Lake and Nippersink Lake, at or near their point of intersection; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma (by request): A bill (H. R. 17268) for the relief of the heirs of the Eastern Cherokee Indians, who are the descendants of the deceased parties of the treaties of 1835, 1836, and 1846 between the Eastern Cherokee Indians and the United States of America; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 17269) to authorize cooperative homesteading on public lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 17270) granting an increase of pension to William F. Craig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17271) granting a pension to James M. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 17272) for the relief of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, of Wilmington, N. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

Liebman and others, of Addington, all in the State of Oklahoma, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 16, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Edward King Hardin, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our heavenly Father, that we can come to Thee to ask for that wisdom which we need in carrying on the work which is committed to us, for we are told in Thy Word if any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. We ask Thee this morning that we may have that wisdom and that strength which we need in the performance of the duties which come to our hands. We commit ourselves and our all to Thee, asking for that guidance without which our work and our lives shall be a failure. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of the preceding day.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson	Overman	Sterling
Brady	Jones	Owen	Sutherland
Bryan	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Burton	Kern	Perkins	Thompson
Catron	La Follette	Reed	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Root	Tillman
Chilton	McCumber	Sheppard	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Shively	West
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	White
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Fletcher	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smoot

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with whom I am paired is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present. The Secretary will call the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. BURLEIGH, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is now present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

The trustees of the Old Goose Creek Church, near Markham, Va., v. United States (S. Doc. No. 507); and

W. W. Aycock, administrator of the estate of William C. Blalock, deceased, claimant, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 506).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 533) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 29) authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6433. An act to relocate the headquarters of the customs district of Florida;

H. R. 7298. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Smyrna, Del.;

H. R. 8660. An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912;

H. R. 11317. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind.;

H. R. 11624. An act to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888";

H. R. 12909. An act to correct the military record of James W. McGreevey;

H. R. 13717. An act to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods;

H. R. 15320. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y.; and

H. R. 15987. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 55. An act for the relief of Daniel Hampton;

S. 2069. An act for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey;

S. 2226. An act for the relief of Joel J. Parker;

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams; and

S. 2590. An act to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a memorial of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 46, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and a memorial of the International Association of Machinists, of Saginaw, Mich., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Atkins, Mich., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Metal Trades Council of Grand Rapids; of the Federation of Labor of Detroit; and of the Street Railway Employees' Association of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Gratiot County Medical Society, of Riverdale; of the Branch County Medical Society, of Coldwater; and of sundry citizens of Alma, Union City, and Cassopolis, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the distribution and dispensing of narcotic drugs by physicians, dentists, and veterinarians, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Valentine, Nebr., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Grindstone City, Mich.; and a memorial of Local Union No. 1233, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIVELY presented the memorials of William Moore, Theodore Wiggins, George Smith, and 67 other citizens of Evansville and Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

G. L. TANEYHILL.

Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1124) for the relief of G. L. Taneyhill, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 598) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROOT:

A bill (S. 5868) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Terwilliger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 5869) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 5870) granting a pension to Carlton Meredith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 5871) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Ford; and

A bill (S. 5872) granting a pension to William M. Faidley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 5874) for the relief of Fred C. and C. Helen Fisher; to the Committee on Public Lands.

NATIONAL INCORPORATION OF RAILWAYS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 5873) for the formation of national corporations for railroad and navigation lines engaged in interstate and foreign commerce was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say with reference to this bill that the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Shreveport case points decisively toward the necessity of organizing as national corporations the great railway systems of the country. The constant trend of the decisions, which is toward the absorption of all the powers over commerce by the United States Government by reason of the grant to it of jurisdiction over that part relating to interstate commerce, indicates the necessity of incorporating the great railway systems under national law.

In addition we are now about to enter upon the control of the stock and bond issues of carriers engaged in interstate commerce. That will involve, according to the contention of many, the exclusion of the control heretofore exercised by the States over the stocks and bonds of all carriers organized under their laws that have any relation to interstate commerce. The trend, therefore, is toward the absorption by the National Government of the entire jurisdiction over railways. It seems to be of the highest importance, therefore, that the National Government should have the power to create corporate instrumentalities through which these enormous functions will be exercised.

The bill which I offer is a bill which I introduced in the Senate in 1909, which in itself was an improvement upon a similar bill offered by me in the Senate several years previously. It seems to me that public opinion is ripe for immediate action upon this important subject, either in the way of a separate bill or in the way of an amendment to some of the legislation that is now pending relating to the regulation of interstate commerce.

I desire to call particular attention to section 18, relating to taxation; section 19, relating to State police and State rates; section 20, relating to acquisition of State railroads; section 21, relating to accident and insurance fund; and section 23, relating to jurisdiction of suits by and against railway companies. I ask that these sections may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The sections are as follows:

TAXATION.

SEC. 18. That railroads and navigation lines owned by corporations duly organized under this act are hereby declared to be instrumentalities for the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce. The franchises, stocks, bonds, fixed evidences of indebtedness, operations and traffic, and the corporation itself shall not be subject to taxation by any State or Territory, but the physical property of such corporation situate in the State or Territory, including its right of way, its real estate, stations, office buildings and equipment, shall be subject to assessment at such average percentage of their actual value as shall be customary with reference to other property in such State or Territory, and to the customary taxes on such assessment. In lieu of such tax any State or Territory may impose a tax not exceeding 4 per cent on such proportion of the gross receipts of such corporation as the number of miles of line in such State or Territory bear to the total miles of line operated by such corporation. In estimating the miles of line each mile of second track shall be regarded as equal to one-half mile of track, and each mile of third or fourth track shall be estimated as equal to one-third of each mile of main track. For the purposes of each State the Interstate Commerce Commission shall certify to the taxing authorities of each State or Territory the gross receipts for the preceding year, the total mileage as aforesaid, and the proportion of such total mileage operated in such State or Territory.

STATE POLICE AND STATE RATES.

SEC. 19. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as interfering with the police laws of any State regarding railroads incorporated under this act and operating in such States, nor shall anything herein contained be construed as affecting the right and power of each State to regulate purely State commerce on railroads organized under this act. But the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hold conferences from time to time with the regulating power of any State with a view to such harmonious adjustment and regulation of State commerce and interstate commerce as will protect the public against abuses or extortion and the railroads against inadequate returns upon their investment, and as will promote the efficiency of such corporations as common carriers. With such end in view the said commission shall call and hold at least once each year a conference with the railroad commissioners of the several States, and with such other State officers having any duty of supervision, taxation, or regulation of railroads within their respective States. Such conference shall be held in the District of Columbia, and the presiding officer at such conference shall be the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or some other member of said commission designated by its chairman. The proceedings of such conference shall be printed or distributed by or under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

ACQUISITION OF STATE RAILROADS.

SEC. 20. That such corporation may, with the consent of any State, upon the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, acquire the railroad of any corporation now organized under the laws of such State, and may issue for the purchase thereof such amount of bonds and stock as may be authorized by said commission, but such authorization shall only be made after a full public hearing, at which the Attorney General shall appear, either personally or by one of his assistants, and no issue of bonds or stocks therefor shall exceed the value of such road as ascertained by said commission.

With the consent of the State under which any railroad corporation is or may be organized, merger between the corporation owning such road and a corporation organized under this act may be accomplished under this act; and bonds and stock may be issued by any corporation organized under this act for such purpose: Provided, That such proposed merger is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the amount of bonds issued, together with the rate of interest thereon, and of the stock issued in the accomplishment of such merger, are also approved by said commission.

ACCIDENT AND INSURANCE FUND.

SEC. 21. That it shall be a condition of the grant and continuance of any franchise to do business under this act that the corporation holding such franchise shall set aside annually a percentage of the gross receipts of said corporation, not exceeding 1 per cent, to be held as a fund in the Treasury of the United States for the payment of pensions to the employees of such corporation who shall have been disqualified for active service, either by injury in the service or by age. The conditions entitling employees to pensions, the amount and time of payment, the investment of the fund, the disbursing of the same, and the entire management thereof shall be under rules and regulations to be made, and from time to time amended, by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

JURISDICTION OF SUITS BY AND AGAINST RAILWAY COMPANIES.

SEC. 23. That any corporation organized under this act shall, for the purpose of all actions by or against it, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed a citizen of every State in which its lines are located, and in such cases circuit and district courts of the United States shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State. The provisions of this section shall not be held to affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in cases by the United States, or by direction of an officer therein, or cases for winding up the affairs of any such corporation.

Any case involving the recovery of fines or penalties under this act may be brought in the circuit court of the United States for any judicial district wherein the corporation has its principal office or through which the line or any part thereof may run. In every such case, for the purposes thereof, the jurisdiction of the court shall be coextensive with the territory of the United States, and in writs of subpœna, removal of persons, execution, and all other process shall run throughout the United States. All existing laws pertaining to the taking and compelling of testimony in cases arising under the act to regulate commerce, or its amendments, shall apply in cases arising under this act.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $207,000 for improving Tillamook Bay and Bar, Oreg., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,500 for inspection of prisons and prisoners and parole, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. JAMES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 396) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the present administration of Nicaragua, headed by Adolfo Diaz as president, has been maintained for upwards of two years by the active presence of American marines in the capital at Managua, under the guise of a legation guard, and in defiance of the wishes of the people of that Republic; and

Whereas the American banking houses of Brown Bros. and Seligman have undertaken to finance the affairs of the Nicaraguan Government during this time; and

Whereas certain fraudulent syndicate bonds issued by former President Zelaya, known as the Ethelburga syndicate, aggregating $6,250,000 in gold, has been questioned and their validity denied by the former government of President Estrada and the present Government of Nicaragua; and

Whereas, notwithstanding the fraudulent character of said bonds, they have been engrafted onto said Republic as a bona fide indebtedness against the wishes of the Nicaraguan people; and

Whereas said bonds were issued without valid consideration, and the names of the beneficiaries unknown, but said bonds were largely deposited with certain European bankers for safe-keeping until secured in large part through the activity of Ernest H. Wands, who had been designated by the Department of State of the United States as financial agent of the Republic of Nicaragua, in the interest of said Brown Bros. and Seligman; and

Whereas said bonds were purchased at an average of 25 per cent of their face value for speculative purposes, and were, through the assistance of the State Department of the United States, brought within the scope of an American guaranty, which entirely validated said bonds, greatly to the detriment of the people and Government of Nicaragua and to the advantage of the purchasers thereof; and

Whereas the sole beneficiaries of said fraud upon a friendly Republic were the Brown Bros. and Seligman, bankers, and Speyer & Co. and their allies, who became the friendly depositors thereof; and

Whereas this course upon the part of the American financial institutions, aided by the Department of State, has brought reproach upon the American Government; and

Whereas the last presidential election in Nicaragua was intentionally and directly influenced by the presence of the marines of the United States Navy at Managua, Granada, Masaya, Corinto, and other interior places, and the presence of the American naval vessels at the ports of Corinto and Bluefields in violation of the present treaty of commerce, peace, and amity between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Government of the United States of America, such action tending to prevent the invalidation of the fraudulent indebtedness herein specifically described; and

Whereas the National Railroad of Nicaragua, about 129 miles in length, has been sold much below its actual value to said Brown Bros. and Seligman, with the approval and acquiescence of the Department of State of the United States, in open and flagrant violation of the constitution of that Republic; and

Whereas by virtue of the protection granted by the Department of State of the United States to said bankers in maintaining their control of the customhouses of Nicaragua, said bankers are enabled to secure enormous profits through compelling the Republic of Nicaragua to redeem at par the said "Ethelburga syndicate" bonds, acquired as aforesaid: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, are hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the transactions above described. They are authorized to take testimony wherever necessary, subpœna witnesses, and the expenses incurred shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On June 15, 1914:

S. 4167. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of other wars than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4168. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4260. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4353. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. J. Res. 148. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to foreign Governments to participate, through their accredited diplomatic agents to the United States, in the National Star-Spangled Banner Centennial Celebration.

On June 16, 1914:

S. 4552. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4657. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

M'CLINTIC-MARSHALL CONSTRUCTION CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5147) to authorize and direct Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Canal Zone and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to investigate certain claims of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., which were:

On page 2, line 9, after "ten," to strike out all down to and including line 17 and insert "taking into consideration the claim of the contractors that the work was done under requirements as to character and finish not fairly within the meaning of the specifications."

On page 2, in lines 22 and 23, to strike out "and to adjudicate the same."

On page 3, line 2, to strike out "finding" and insert "findings."

On page 3, line 2, after "finding," to strike out all down to the period in line 4.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS GRAVES BONHAM.

The bill (H. R. 12826) to reinstate Francis Graves Bonham as a cadet at the United States Military Academy was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. I will state as a reason for making the request that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate have reported favorably an exactly similar bill. The House report which accompanied the bill now presented to the Senate is exhaustive and goes into the whole subject.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reappoint as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, without regard to age or the existence of vacancies, Francis Graves Bonham.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill (S. 4417) to reinstate Francis Graves Bonham as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, heretofore reported to the Senate, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

H. R. 7298. An act to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Smyrna, Del.;

H. R. 11317. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind.; and

H. R. 15320. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y.

H. R. 6433. An act to relocate the headquarters of the customs district of Florida was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 8660. An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

H. R. 11624. An act to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 12909. An act to correct the military record of James W. McGreevey was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 13717. An act to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 15987. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909, was read twice and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

TRANSPORTATION FOR PARCEL-POST PACKAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. If there be none, and if there are no resolutions coming over from a former day, morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was a resolution coming over from a previous day, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it appears that there is such a resolution upon the desk, it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The resolution to which I refer went over from last week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter has been passed over informally for such a length of time that the Secretary has not considered it as being subject to be presented to the Senate without the special request of the Senator from Georgia. If the Senator desires the resolution to be laid before the Senate, that will be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire that the resolution be laid before the Senate for the purpose of disposing of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 363) submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia on May 14, 1914, as follows:

Whereas on August 24, 1912, a Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for Transportation of Mails was authorized to investigate and report upon the rates, etc., paid to the railroad companies for the carriage of mail matter; and

Whereas the matter carried by the parcels post is of a character that can be handled in a different class of car and at cheaper rates than ordinary mail matter; and

Whereas it is of great importance that the Post Office Department should have an opportunity to readjust its contracts for mail transportation, with a view of providing economical and suitable accommodations for the transportation of parcel-post packages: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for Transportation of Mails be requested to report at as early a day as possible the result of their investigations and their findings.

Resolved further, That the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for Transportation of Mails be requested to advise the Senate of the time at which they will be able to make their report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the joint committee referred to in the resolution have been engaged in their work for a number of months. My purpose in submitting the resolution was that the Senate might be informed when we could expect a report and that we might obtain the report as soon as possible. I think the result of that report will be legislation which, to a considerable extent, will modify our existing contracts for the transportation of mails, and I especially had in view a modification with reference to the parcel-post mail.

When the Post Office appropriation bill containing the parcel-post provision came over from the other House at the last Congress it provided for a flat rate of 12 cents a pound all over the United States, except on rural routes. The Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads worked laboriously upon the subject. The result of their work was a modification of the rates, the adoption of the zone system, and very much lower rates for short distances. I had the privilege of serving on that committee, and I believe that its work was of great service to the public. I did not think at the time the rates were made as low as they should have been made, but since then the Postmaster General has lowered the rates and increased the weight limit. This work on his part I cordially approve.

At the time the Post Office appropriation bill was before the Senate I was confined to my room by sickness and did not have an opportunity to take any part in the discussion of that bill. In the committee I had expressed a disapproval of an increase at that time of the weight limit of a parcel beyond 50 pounds. Had I been in the Senate at the time the Post Office appropriation bill was considered, I should have explained the fact that I did not believe that we were at that time prepared satisfactorily to increase further the weight limit; that it was extremely important before we did so to obtain a report from the joint committee, and to legislate with a view of handling in a better way our parcel post and a part of our general postal matter. I believe that the modification of the system to a weight basis and the modification of the character of cars of transportation as to part of the mail will make it practicable for the railroads to handle a large part of the parcel post and the heavier mail much more economically, and as an incident to that fact and as an incident to the facts developed by the investigation, the Postmaster General would be in a position much more intelligently to proceed with his work of perfecting the Parcel Post System. In no sense was my attitude due to any change of desire to continue to perfect the parcel post along the lines that the Post Office Department has already proceeded to effect. I have been in cordial sympathy with the Postmaster General in his effort to perfect the parcel post, but I thought it unwise to increase the weight limit until our modes of railroad transportation were improved. I am desirous that this should be done as soon as possible, and therefore wish a report from the committee which has been at work on the subject.

Mr. President, since I introduced the resolution the committee has completed its work and formulated a bill. A bill covering the subject has been introduced in the House and the report of the joint committee is being perfected for the use of both bodies. I therefore do not deem it worth while to press the resolution further. The object I had in view has been carried out without the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What formal disposition does the Senator suggest? Does he withdraw the resolution or ask that it be laid on the table?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest that it be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes that under the rules of the Senate to indefinitely postpone a resolution is the method employed for finally disposing of it. It will come up again if it is laid on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I ask that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, yesterday, when occupied with the session of the Judiciary Committee, the Senate acted on the provision for the International Institute of Agriculture, on pages 15 and 16. I shall, when the committee amendments are disposed of, ask to reconsider the action of the Senate, and ask to have restored the provision of the bill as it came from the House. The appropriations are parsimonious, in my judgment, and certainly low enough, and I think it was a great mistake to reduce the appropriation under this head. I shall ask to reconsider that action, and will undertake to indicate to some extent the work of this important agency and the necessity for taking care of it in some proper way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment of Mr. SUTHERLAND to the amendment reported by the committee, on page 19, lines 19 and 20, to strike out the words "agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and to insert "counsel, who shall also act as agent," and in lines 21 and 22 to strike out the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so that, if amended, the paragraph will read as follows:

> Salaries, United States agency: Counsel, who shall also act as agent, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum—

And so forth.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill will not oppose the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better to change it so as to read "agent, who shall also act as counsel," rather than to say "counsel, who shall also act as agent," because Great Britain has an officer called "the agent," and I think our Government ought to have an officer called "the agent."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He will be the agent also.

Mr. OVERMAN. But he is not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that the only reason I have for putting it as I have—"counsel, who shall also act as agent"—is that, as I understand, there is no agent now acting. The duties of the agent are really discharged by the chief counsel, and if we provide in the bill that the counsel shall also act as agent there will be no necessity of making an appointment, as the counsel who is now holding that position will continue as counsel and also will act as agent.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I want to say a word with reference to the agent, for fear some misunderstanding might be entertained with reference to that office and that officer. Mr. Lansing was appointed the agent some time ago—I do not recall just how long ago—and nobody who is familiar with his work could for a moment criticize his discharge of the duties of that position. He is a very able man; I know him personally and know him well, and he did discharge the duties of that position with great faithfulness and with great ability; but a few months ago he was appointed counselor for the State Department—and I think it was a most excellent appointment—and, having the duties of that position to discharge, he could not devote the time to the position of agent which he had theretofore been able to do, so that out of necessity the duties of that office to a great extent devolved upon Mr. Clark. That is as I understaud the situation.

I called attention yesterday to the importance of this litigation. I find in the House hearings which were held a year ago some statements which emphasize what I have already said. At page 66 of those hearings—the House hearings on the bill a year ago—Mr. Lansing testified as follows:

> Mr. KENDALL. I suppose the State Department, in preparing these dockets, is not doing anything more than simply making a statement of the personnel of the parties and the character of the claims, and the defense urged.
>
> Mr. LANSING. In making up the docket they are making copies of all the correspondence in relation to them so that the cases may be reviewed from the beginning. Some of them are very old; some of them are 50 years old, so that it has been necessary to go through and make copies of all the documents. You will see that we have an unusual number of stenographers for this work. We have four typewriters—young women.
>
> Mr. HARRISON. What is the aggregate amount of those claims? Can you give us any idea?
> Mr. LANSING. So far there has been scheduled for hearing something like $4,000,000 for the United States claimants and something over $3,000,000 for the British claimants.

So there is involved in these cases approximately $7,000,000.

> Mr. KENDALL. Many of these claims ought to be of record; they are claims asserted by citizens of the United States against the Government of Great Britain?
> Mr. LANSING. Yes, sir; and by British subjects against the United States.
>
> Mr. KENDALL. And, for instance, the claims of American citizens have been presented to the State Department, through diplomatic channels, to the British Government?
>
> Mr. LANSING. Yes.
>
> Mr. KENDALL. And no adjustment seemed possible?
>
> Mr. LANSING. Yes.
>
> Mr. KENDALL. And they must be submitted to this convention?
>
> Mr. LANSING. Yes.
>
> Mr. KENDALL. When was the convention created?
> Mr. LANSING. In 1910.

Then, further, he says, at page 69:

> Mr. CLINE. There is a good deal of research work to be done, but do you not think you have quite a large force for the number of cases, and have been at it for a long time, to make up a docket of 300 cases?
>
> Mr. LANSING. There are more than 300 that have been made up, and we have examined in addition to that 250 cases for which we had to have a docket made up in order to determine whether they should be presented to arbitration, and we started to make up a second schedule. It is only the first schedule that has been negotiated, and there will be another schedule, and all that thing of negotiating another schedule will be done by this agency.
>
> Mr. HARRISON. Is there any existing law for this? Is there any law to-day or is it necessary for any law to be passed to sanction the treaty that has been entered into, or the agreement?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. There was a law passed sanctioning the treaty, and this agreement grew out of the treaty.
>
> Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. That makes a law for this, because under that treaty this agreement was negotiated.
>
> Mr. HARRISON. There is no question but what this would stand on a point of order, if a point of order was made?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. No; a point of order would not lie to this.
> Mr. LANSING. In regard to your question about the amount of work; for example, in one case, in the Rio Grande Dam case, there are something like 1,500 pages of typewriting.
>
> Mr. CLINE. That is an extreme illustration?
> Mr. LANSING. It is, but we have a dozen cases, I presume, where there are a thousand pages. We have one memorial from Great Britain that covers a thousand printed pages.

It will be seen, therefore, that there is involved in the preparation of the cases and their presentation an immense amount of work. I think it would be a misfortune to the Government of the United States if either of these men, and particularly Mr. Clark, who has had charge of the cases from the beginning, and who has thoroughly familiarized himself with all the details, were now removed and new men put in their places. Nobody can foresee what injury would be done to the Government by that sort of a proceeding.

The money that is involved is not the sole thing. Some of these cases which involve small amounts of money involve questions of vast importance to the United States. It is in the highest degree important that the position of the United States in those cases should be maintained, not because a judgment for the small amount of money involved would be any great hardship, but because a decision of the point against the United States would lead to other claims and would lead in the end to the payment of very large sums of money.

The only purpose I have in offering this amendment is to make it quite sure, as nearly as the Congress can make it sure, that these two lawyers shall be retained until this work is completed. The provision of the Senate amendment is:

> Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; * * * counsel, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

That involves affirmative action on the part of the President. The President must send the names to the Senate, and the Senate must act upon them. When we make a provision of that kind it is almost inevitable that the appointments will become political in their nature. Efforts will be made to secure the appointment of other men. These appointments never have been treated as political appointments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Were they not political appointments when these men were appointed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; they were not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Were not the men who were appointed pronounced Republicans?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These men are Republicans, but Democrats also were appointed by Mr. Taft. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the personnel of the American agency upon these British-American claims.

The first agent who was appointed was S. Mallet-Prevost. He was a Democrat from New York. He was appointed agent and senior counsel by Mr. Taft on June 7, 1912, at a salary of $15,000 per annum. The man who stood at the head of that agency was a very prominent Democrat. He resigned on account of ill health. His resignation became effective in December, 1912, and Mr. Taft appointed as his successor Mr. Robert Lansing, a Democrat of New York. He was appointed June 15, 1912, at a salary of $7,500; first at a salary of $500 a month, which was subsequently increased to $7,500 per annum. There was appointed as one of the joint secretaries of the arbitration tribunal, at a salary of $2,500, which was subsequently increased to $3,000, Mr. R. A. Young, a Democrat of Tennessee. There was appointed Mr. H. D. Pierce, a Democrat of Massachusetts, who was appointed counsel at a salary of $2,520 per annum. There was appointed as counsel Mr. J. Reuben Clark, jr., a Republican of Utah, appointed January 15, 1913, at a salary of $7,500 per annum, his appointment to become effective March 4, 1913; Arthur McKinstry, a Republican, who was appointed first as special assistant to the agent and then as counsel at a salary of $5,000 per annum; G. F. Wilson, a Republican of the District of Columbia, appointed at a salary of $2,520 per annum; and Mr. Snowden, a Republican of Pennsylvania, appointed chief clerk at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

So there were eight appointments to that agency and four of them were Democrats and four of them were Republicans, the chief places being given to Democrats. It never has been treated as a partisan matter.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator will take notice that there are two kinds of Democrats for the purposes of appointment. There is a Democrat who votes the Democratic ticket and there is the professed Democrat who does not vote the Democratic ticket. It will require but very little investigation to determine the class in which these gentlemen fall.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should imagine that Mr. Lansing would be considered by the Senator's party a pretty good Democrat, because he has been selected for the position of counselor for the State Department by Mr. Bryan, and is holding that position now.

Mr. SHIVELY. Suppose he is. That may indicate a vast degree of liberality on the part of Mr. Bryan rather than nonpartisanship on the part of his predecessors. But I am not canvassing Mr. Lansing's Democracy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not observed any very great or very extreme degree of liberality on the part of the administration thus far in regard to these appointments. At any rate, these appointments never have been treated as partisan appointments, and they ought not to be treated as partisan appointments now.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator wants a legislative provision here that will secure the retention of particular men in positions in the department. His idea is that unless certain words are put in the bill there is a possibility of a change in some of these places. Is this not precisely what he has in mind?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it will not prevent a change being made; but if a change is made it will necessitate the removal of the people who are there, and the appointment by the President of somebody else. The trouble with this bill is that it obliges the President to send in the names——

Mr. SHIVELY. Of somebody else?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not necessarily of somebody else; but it obliges him to send in the names, and my objection to it is that when we require that the names shall be sent in, and that the Senate shall advise and consent to them, that at once throws the matter into politics.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is, the Senator objects to having the burden thrown on the President of selecting suitable persons for this work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the burden is there now.

Mr. SHIVELY. But he would relieve the President of this burden by having a legislative provision here that will keep them there?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, Mr. President; I have not asked any such thing.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then the Senator is objecting to the creation of a place that the President would have to fill by appointment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am objecting to legislation which obviously, upon its face, is intended to legislate these men out of their positions and put these positions into the hands of——

Mr. SHIVELY. Of Democrats?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of lawyers who have had nothing to do with the case and who will at once become partisan appointees.

Mr. SHIVELY. Why would not precisely the same argument apply to any other responsible position in these departments?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, apparently it is impossible to show the Senator the distinction between these various classes of employees, if I have failed to do it thus far.

Mr. SHIVELY. I am speaking now of heads of departments—of Secretaries, of Assistant Secretaries. The men who have been in office are men who are acquainted with the work. They have learned the business. They have all the cases before them in hand. Why make any change at all?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator see no distinction between changing an ordinary officer of the Government and discharging a lawyer who is half through trying a case and putting in another man to finish it up?

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator, however, is going on the theory all the time that the President would not appreciate the qualifications of the men whom he now has in mind, nor the present status of the public business, and that he would not take notice of any advantage there may be in retaining such persons in their positions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the only thing I have attempted to strike out of this bill is the provision "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and simply make an appropriation for counsel, just as we have done in all of the bills heretofore dealing with this subject, and just as the House attempted to do, the only difference being that the House did not particularize the various officers and the salaries to be paid them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if I understood him correctly as stating that there are a number of these cases, and they are continually coming up, so that it is not one large case which the same counsel had prepared? New counsel—capable counsel—could go into this litigation and take charge of it, just as new counsel take charge of the business of one of the departments or the district attorney's office; could they not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; that is not the situation. Of course, when a new Attorney General is appointed he has old district attorneys. Cases are coming up and they are disposed of; but this is an altogether different situation. Under the treaty which we had with Great Britain, which was ratified in 1910, we provided for the arbitration of several hundred claims which were specified in the schedule. Those various claims are placed in various groups, according to the question which is involved, so that there would be something like 40 or 50 different kinds of cases which are heard together. All of these cases have been in process of preparation. I read from the hearings before the House committee, showing that it has taken a thousand pages or 1,500 pages of typewriting to present some of the cases; that is, the presentation in the nature of a pleading, of a petition, if I may call it such. The evidence has been gathered by these men and has been printed. The cases are all in process of being presented. Some of the work has been done in all of them. One of the most important of these cases, to which I called attention yesterday—the Cayuga Indian case—involves a million dollars. The claim is against the Government of the United States, and has proceeded so far that there is nothing remaining to do except to make the oral argument. The lawyers are now preparing that argument, which will be made, perhaps, in the course of a few weeks or a few months; I do not know just how soon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will be patient with me, obviously, in a case of that kind—the Senator is a lawyer and understands how that is—the lawyer who has prepared the pleadings, the lawyer who has gathered the evidence and who has studied the case, is in a far better condition to argue it intelligently and to the advantage of the Government than some new man, even though he might be abler than the old lawyer. He is in far better condition to argue it than the new man who might be put in. That is all I am seeking to preserve here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not often the case that in the appellate court a new lawyer is employed who conducts the argument there, rather than the lawyer in the court below?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; that is done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And would it not certainly be just as easy in these cases to take the record and master it as in cases before the appellate court?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not think so. I have tried in my life a good many lawsuits; so has the Senator from Georgia. I know that I can argue a case a good deal better if I have myself performed every one of the preliminary steps—if I have drawn the pleadings, if I have had in my office the witnesses upon my side of the case, if I have tried the case in court, and examined my own witnesses and cross-examined the other witnesses. The case becomes a part of you, as the Senator from Georgia perfectly understands.

Having done all that, I think I or the Senator from Georgia is in a far better position to argue the case before the Supreme Court than a new man who simply gathers a case from the cold reading of the record. It is so obvious that I can not conceive how anybody would dispute the proposition.

That is peculiarly so in this kind of a case, which does not involve the ordinary questions of law, but which involves questions of international law, questions of treaty rights, which the former Solicitor of the State Department has been connected with for many years. He is entirely familiar with the whole situation.

But, Mr. President, the amendment which I proposed does not attempt to continue these men. It simply leaves the situation where it is now. It leaves it where we put it last year; it leaves it where the bill the year before left it. It simply appropriates money for counsel, and without the provision that that counsel must be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

There is another suggestion which I desire to make about that. The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] called attention to it yesterday. It is that there is grave doubt as to whether these counsel are officers of the Government of the United States. If they are not officers, of course, the Senate has no constitutional authority in the matter. The Senate is called upon to advise and consent to the employment of employees. Here is a lawyer employed in a particular set of cases. There is no fixed term; there is no tenure of office; it is simply to do this piece of work; and when that work is ended the employment is ended.

Mr. REED. There is no time when the salary stops?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no time when the salary stops. He is to do the work at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

Mr. REED. As long as he can keep the cases in court, the salary goes on?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly. The amendment does not attempt to make any change in that respect. The Senator from Missouri seems to take some comfort from my response to his question; but I will say to the Senator that my amendment does not deal with that situation. If the Senator thinks that is unwise, he had better move an amendment, because it is the bill which makes the salary $7,500 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is quite a change made in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I say there is quite a change from the bill as it passed last year and as it came to us from the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say there was not any change in the bill. I said there was not any change in this particular portion of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the appropriation, as it came from the House to the Senate, and as it came last year, was a lump-sum appropriation of $75,000; and these people fixed their own salaries. When I inquired into it and found out how many employees they had, the committee proceeded to fix the salaries in this bill. There is the change.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is what the Senator from Missouri is apparently complaining about. The Senator from Missouri by his question seemed to suggest that it was unwise to fix the salary of a lawyer at an annual rate who is paid to try some cases, and I simply said to the Senator from Missouri that that is what the bill does.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Let me ask a question. I made no complaint. The consideration that troubles my mind is this: After having listened to the Senator from Utah I am thoroughly convinced from his argument that if either of these lawyers were to die the United States would be in an absolutely helpless condition, because it is plain from his argument that there is nobody on earth who can take their places.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The remark of the Senator from Missouri is very funny, but it——

Mr. REED. It is very serious.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It lacks application. Of course, if a lawyer should die he would have to be replaced by somebody else, but this appropriation is made on the theory that the lawyer is going to live long enough to try these cases and enjoy the emoluments. All I am saying is that the lawyer having half finished these cases, it is perfectly absurd to throw him out and put somebody else in, so long as he is doing good work.

Mr. REED. Has the Senator any reason to assume that the President will do a perfectly absurd thing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; but the language of this bill makes me very suspicious that that is the intention of the committee reporting it. Else why should they provide that counsel who are already employed and who are now engaged in this work must be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

I have not sought to change it one particle. I simply want the appropriation made for counsel without saying anything about their appointment, leaving it as it has always been left, for the President or the Secretary of State. If dissatisfied with what these men are doing, he can make a change, but it does not oblige the President to act affirmatively in the matter, as this bill does.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senator from Georgia that I think they were not here when I had a little discussion on this subject yesterday afternoon. The matter reached its present position, I think, on a suggestion that I made—I do not know whether in open Senate or personally—that it would be better to strike out the provision for the appointment to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for two reasons. One is that these are not officers. I am perfectly clear that they are not officers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator wishes to strike out the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"?

Mr. ROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And just let them be appointed by the President?

Mr. ROOT. It is not necessary to say that they shall be appointed by the President. That is the President's business anyway. The other reason is that it would have the effect for the moment of ousting the present men.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I intimated yesterday that I was willing to strike out those words, but as the Senator from Utah has framed his amendment I will never agree to it.

Mr. ROOT. I was stating the steps by which we got to the place where we are now. If you say in making the appropriation for going on with these cases that the counsel shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, then there is no appropriation for the men who are at work now; it practically ousts them and requires a new appointment to be made. It did not seem as if we ought to interfere with them in a lawsuit. The President has entire control of it. If the President or the Secretary of State is not suited with the counsel he can change the counsel, and if we let it alone they will take care of it. I do not think you ought to interfere. That is the way we came to this point.

Let me say another thing. These cases are rather peculiar. The practice, the kind of questions, the kind of evidence, the kind of arguments are rather peculiar to themselves. They are as unlike ordinary practice as patent cases are unlike ordinary practice, and there are not a great many lawyers who are familiar with this kind of practice.

The gentlemen who have been concerned in these cases were selected evidently because they had familiarity with that kind of a case. Mr. Lansing, who I tell the Senator from Indiana

[Mr. SHIVELY] is a real, sure-enough Democrat, has always been a consistent Democrat in my own State——

Mr. SHIVELY. I am glad to have the Senator's certificate, though I have not raised the question as to Mr. Lansing.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. Lansing was selected because he had been concerned in a long series of arbitrations. He was in the Bering Sea arbitration 21 years ago. He was one of the associate counsel in the Alaska boundary case in London 11 years ago.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. In the observation I made I had not the gentleman named in mind. I do know that within the last 16 years there has been a line of alleged Democrats appointed to public positions under Republican administrations, and while I am not going to give the particular names——

Mr. ROOT. You say the mistakes have been made by a Republican administration?

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; but as a rule they did not make the mistake of appointing a Democrat who voted the Democratic ticket. They as a rule appointed Democrats who voted the Republican ticket. The Senator is entitled to consolation from that fact.

Mr. ROOT. I suppose they tried to appoint Democrats who did not themselves make mistakes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New York says that the Republicans have made many mistakes by appointing Democrats. He appears to be very anxious this morning to perpetuate one of those mistakes.

Mr. ROOT. No; Mr. Lansing has ceased to be agent and has become counselor for the State Department.

Mr. REED. I understand, but the Senator from Utah says that one or two of these men were Democrats, and I understand the Senator wants to keep them in that position.

Mr. ROOT. I do not care whether they are kept in or not. What I want to have Congress do is to refrain from interfering with the cases. I am interested in the cases. I carried on the controversy about many of these cases and the treaty was framed and ready for signature but for certain specific controversies during my time as Secretary of State. We have a great court before which our contentions, which have lasted many of them a lifetime, are being argued, with M. Fromageot, one of the chief men in the French foreign office, presiding, with Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, the Chief Justice of Canada, as a member of the court. I do not care whether the counsel are Democrats or Republicans. I want to see the United States win in those cases. I am sure that it would be unfortunate for the contention of the United States as a litigant before that tribunal in those cases for Congress to interfere. I am satisfied to have the President and the Secretary of State take care of it themselves, and I think that we ought simply to make whatever appropriation is reasonable and necessary to enable them to do it and not thrust in provisions which will constrain them.

Now, the only reason why I think we have to discuss anything more than merely striking out "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," was that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] wanted to have the language put in such form where the same person would perform the functions of counsel and of agent; that is, to save a salary, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] undertook to put language in the form that would accomplish that. So far as I am concerned about it, and I think so far as the Senator from Utah is interested, everything would be accomplished by simply striking out that provision about the appointment, leaving the President and the Secretary of State to control the thing as they have always done.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator had framed such an amendment it would have been accepted long ago, but he wants to retain Mr. Clark by making the counsel act as agent, when Mr. Clark says in his testimony here that the agent is absolutely indispensable and necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, my amendment provided for an agent. I do not understand what the Senator from North Carolina means by saying that if I had offered——

Mr. OVERMAN. We provide for the appointment of agent and counsel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the difference between saying counsel who shall act as agent and saying agent who shall act as counsel? We have conferred on the same individual both functions and it is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not amount to this: If the President intended to retain one of the officers and you retain counsel, the counsel to act as agent, it would leave the present counsel. If you provided that there should be an agent who should act as counsel, you would probably retain the present agent and he would be the counsel. Would it not do just to strike out the provision that they have to be confirmed by the Senate and let it go. I think the Senator from North Carolina will not object to that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from North Carolina objected yesterday.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I said in answer to the Senator from New York that I would probably accept that, but when you want to appoint this counsel agent and make him an agent by legislation, I will never agree to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is not a matter of very great importance perhaps, but let me read to the Senator from yesterday's RECORD what he said.

Mr. OVERMAN. No matter what I said yesterday, if the Senator will change the amendment, I will accept it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When I offered the amendment which reads—

> Agent, who shall also act as counsel, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum—
>
> The Senator said:
> Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can not accept the amendment. It is the action of the committee.

The question was put to the Senate, and upon a division the ayes were 10 and the noes 12. No quorum voted, and pending that we adjourned.

Then I asked to reverse my amendment and make it counsel who shall also act as agent, for the reason which I have stated, and which I think is a good reason.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we had better have some light thrown on this amendment. Some statements have been made, not intentionally, but they have been magnified a great deal. This court spent this last year $73,000. They had five stenographers, at $1,200 each. They have been spending a great deal of money. I have gone into it to see what they did with the money and what has been done. I asked them to furnish me with the list of the cases. They said there were 400 cases. Here is the list of the cases. There are only 36 in all. How many cases were argued by Mr. Clark at a time? They sat five days in Canada. They were six weeks in Canada and six weeks here. He argued only 12 cases. Here is a list of the cases, and Mr. Clark says many of them are grouped in one case.

We found that with this lump sum of money they were paying one man $7,500, another man $7,500, another man $5,000, and they had two lawyers, at $2,500; they had three or four law clerks, at $1,800; they furnished a building up here, and were paying rent, and spent altogether $73,000. So we thought the Senate ought to have an intelligent understanding of it, and we would put every man's salary in the bill.

Mr. Clark says in this testimony one man can do this work, and we cut out one $7,500 man, because Mr. Clark said one man could do the work. The man whom the Senator praises so highly, and I have nothing to say against him, says that an agent is indispensable. I do not care whether he is confirmed by the Senate or not, but I think the Senate ought to see that this money is not expended extravagantly and that there is not too much money appropriated for this purpose. Lump sums are dangerous and always wrong, because when you give a man a certain sum of money he is tempted to make new offices and offices at great salaries. That is the reason why we put the provision in the bill fixing each man's salary as to what it shall be. If the Senator will strike out those words, I will accept it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I could not accept the amendment in the way the Senator suggests it. His proposition is to strike out the words "to be appointed by the President," so the bill will then read:

> Agent, who shall act as counsel, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum.

Mr. Clark is not agent, he is counsel, and the effect of that legislation would be to reduce his compensation from $7,500 to $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. If he is the man you say he is——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish what I was saying, if the Senator will pardon me. I know the character of the work that has been done by Mr. Clark, and I know his ability, and I know that $7,500 is small enough compensation. The effect of it would be, in my judgment, that Mr. Clark could not afford to do the work for $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, is he afraid to trust the President to appoint this man as agent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not the point.

Mr. OVERMAN. The President should have the right to select whom he pleases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill finds this man holding the position of counsel. The moment you pass this bill his salary ends at $7,500 and begins at $5,000 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Unless the President appoints him agent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There would be far more justice in saying "agent, at $5,000 per annum, and counsel at $7,500." I should not object to that at all.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, why would not that be right, the chief work of the agent having been done?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Clark says that the agent is indispensable.

Mr. ROOT. I know he is indispensable; there has got to be an agent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think it would be right that the agent, the main man in the whole matter, should receive $5,000 and the counsel be paid $7,500?

Mr. ROOT. I think that the chief work of the agent has been done, and that his further work is mainly formal, although indispensable; and as the chief work of the counsel is now being done, it would be more appropriate to pay the agent $5,000 and the counsel $7,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am satisfied if the Senator from New York will look at the number of the cases which are filed and their amounts he will think, as it seems to me, that as to the pecuniary claims any good lawyer could take charge of and try them. But the agent who represents the Government in this great court ought to have more salary than the counsel, who only assists him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if any good lawyer can do this work, it is a peculiar thing that Great Britain selects one of the very best lawyers that she has to conduct the litigation upon her side. The truth is that any lawyer can not do it, but that it requires a man of peculiar training and of peculiar ability in this kind of law.

Mr. OVERMAN. The cases which Mr. Clark argued were usually small in amount. He argued one case involving $12,000, another involving $16,000, another $15,000, and then he says he partly argued one involving $5,000, another involving $85,000—only one of them involving over $50,000. They were all small claims which he argued up to 1912.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He partly argued a case involving $1,310,389.70.

Mr. OVERMAN. Here is the statement he furnished me. He partly argued a case—I suppose that Mr. Lansing argued it and that Mr. Clark and Mr. McKinstry assisted him—which involved $1,000,000. I think they were all three engaged in that case; but as to most of the cases which remain the Senator can see that they are comparatively small and involve no great amount.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are several hundred of these cases, and one of them, while involving a comparatively small amount of money, may involve a question of very great moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why does the Senator from Utah say there are several hundred of these cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because the schedule says so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked Mr. Clark if he would furnish me a list of the cases pending, and he sent me a first schedule of the American and British claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those are claims which have been submitted.

Mr. OVERMAN. The second schedule of claims which are not submitted, claims against Great Britain, 5; British claims against the United States, 7. That is what Mr. Clark furnished. I personally know nothing about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator listen to me a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The first list to which the Senator from North Carolina has referred contains American claims against Great Britain; another list contains British claims against the United States, which have already been submitted to the tribunal. The second list contains cases of both kinds which are to be submitted to the tribunal, meaning that all of the work has been done in those cases, except to argue them. Now, there remain a number of cases that have not yet been prepared. If the Senator will turn to the schedule of claims annexed to the treaty, which he will find on page 66 of the hearings, he will find the enumeration.

AMERICAN FISHING CLAIMS—GROUP I—AGAINST NEWFOUNDLAND.

Cunningham & Thompson (18 vessels)—

Then it goes on giving the names of the vessels—

Davis Bros. (10 vessels).

* * * * * * *

William H. Parsons (12 vessels).

* * * * * * *

Gorton-Pow Co. (37 vessels).

In the next column are given a number of shipping claims on the part of Great Britain. The Senator will find that I am not in error in saying that there are several hundred of these cases. Mr. Lansing, in the testimony I have read, said that 300 of them had been prepared.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am only taking the testimony before the committee submitted by Mr. Clark, and I will read to the Senator what Mr. Clark said:

Senator JONES. Could not you, as counsel, perform not only the duties of counsel but also the duties of agent?

Mr. CLARK. I have no doubt one man can, at the present time, perform the duties of both offices if he gives all his time to it.

We have not only given the agent, but we have given the counsel, additional counsel and two law clerks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that does not mean that he is to perform all of the legal duties appertaining to this work.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the question the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] asked him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh no; it does not say anything of the sort.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is exactly what it does say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; he says that one man in the condition in which things now are can perform the duties of agent and of chief counsel. He does not mean that he should not have any help.

Mr. OVERMAN. The question of the Senator from Washington was how much time was taken up, and in response to that question of Senator JONES, he said, "I have no doubt one man can, at the present time, perform the duties of both offices if he gives all his time to it."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is both of those offices, of course; and that is the purpose of my amendment, to say that he shall discharge the duties of both offices, and it is that amendment to which the Senator from North Carolina now objects. Let me read again to the Senator what Mr. Lansing stated about the number of cases:

Mr LANSING. There are more than 300 that have been made up, and we have examined in addition to that 250 cases for which we had to have a docket made up in order to determine whether they should be presented to arbitration, and we started to make up a second schedule. It is only the first schedule that has been negotiated, and there will be another schedule, and all that thing of negotiating another schedule will be done by this agency.

The truth is that, so far as this first schedule is concerned, the work of the agent has been substantially done; the preparatory work has been done; and the work which remains, so far as the first schedule is concerned, will devolve upon the counsel, and not upon the agent. Until that first schedule of claims is disposed of, one man can discharge the duties of agent and of chief counsel; and that, I repeat, is the very purpose of the amendment which I have offered.

I was diverted from a suggestion which I desired to make some little time ago with reference to these employees being officers of the United States. It does not seem to me that they are officers of the United States any more than a person who would be employed to superintend the construction of some particular building or of half a dozen buildings or of a series of buildings would be an officer of the United States. He would be an employee. He has no tenure of office; he exercises no part of the sovereignty which, after all, is the great test of whether or not a person discharging certain duties is an officer or an employee. He exercises no part of the sovereignty of the Government, but is simply employed to do a particular piece of work, to try a certain lawsuit. His employment is temporary in character. When those lawsuits have been determined, his duties are ended. It is not a position which continues. Therefore those two essential things are wanting, namely, the element of the exercise of a part of the sovereignty and the element of the tenure of office. For those reasons we ought to strike out this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I submit that if this amendment involves a change in the personnel of the employees of the Government before this commission, it is unwise and unfair. I do not feel like criticizing the committee for the general form of the amendment. The aim was to itemize the expenses to be incurred, and with that I think every Member of the Senate will sympathize. But here is a litigation of a technical nature, requiring men of special qualifications. They have appeared before this commission; they are familiar with the procedure; they have argued certain of the cases and have prepared others. It would be most inopportune to change the counsel and other employees of the Government at this time.

I fear from some things that have been said in the dialogue here that this amendment is to be utilized for appointing Democrats in place of the men who are now holding those positions. To begin with, there is one record of 1,500 or 2,000 pages in one case, prepared by the men who are now acting. Just fancy what would happen if they should be displaced and others should be substituted for them. There is in a way a general type of all these cases, and it is not desirable, as Abraham Lincoln said in receiving the delegation from the Baltimore convention, "to swap horses while crossing a stream." It would be very poor policy to displace these men.

As this amendment reads it contemplates the appointment by the President of men who are to be confirmed by the Senate. I regard that as an intimation that a change is contemplated which would be very bad policy and most injudicious. The Government would be very likely to suffer from a change in its counsel and other employees if this amendment should prevail.

Again, it is hardly fair. The eight employees under the administration of President Taft were equally balanced, four Democrats and four Republicans. The leading position was given to a Democrat. Of the five appointments which have been made under the present administration, embracing positions of rather minor importance, though with substantial salaries, all five have been Democrats. Of the total number of 13 employees, 9 have been Democrats and 4 have been Republicans. This is a situation in which politics ought not to count.

Mr. Clark was counselor of the State Department for a time, and has exceptional qualifications for this position. The other men have gone through what might be called a training, and no new men in their places can perform the work as well. There is an enormous amount of detail in some of these cases, and to change the personnel and bring in new men in their places would be well-nigh disastrous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 19 in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out in lines 19, 20, and 21 the words "Agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Counsel, who shall also act as agent," and also, in lines 21 and 22, to strike out "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so that if amended it will read:

Salaries United States agency: Counsel, who shall also act as agent, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum; counsel, $2,520, etc.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I understand that if we vote down the amendment to the amendment it is the purpose of the committee to strike out the provision requiring confirmation by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. MYERS. I inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WALSH] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], both being absent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I must withhold my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senators from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]; the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Borah	Cummins	Page	Sterling
Burleigh	Dillingham	Perkins	Sutherland
Burton	McCumber	Root	Townsend
Catron	Nelson	Smoot
Crawford	Norris	Stephenson

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	Jones	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Lane	Pittman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Stone
Chamberlain	Lewis	Reed	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Thompson
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Thornton
Gore	Newlands	Sheppard	Tillman
Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Shively	West
Hughes	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	White

NOT VOTING—41.

Brady	Goff	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Gronna	Myers	Thomas
Bristow	Hollis	Oliver	Vardaman
Chilton	James	Penrose	Walsh
Clapp	Johnson	Poindexter	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Ransdell	Weeks
Colt	Kern	Saulsbury	Williams
Culberson	La Follette	Sherman	Works
du Pont	Lea, Tenn.	Shields
Fall	Lippitt	Simmons
Gallinger	Lodge	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. SUTHERLAND'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I understand that the chairman of the committee is satisfied to accept the amendment I am about to propose. I will either propose it or leave it to him to propose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the Senator propose it, and I will accept it.

Mr. ROOT. On page 19, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out as follows:

On lines 19, 20, and 21 the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and on lines 21 and 22 the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, lines 19, 20, and 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and on lines 21 and 22 the same words, "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. I now move, on page 19, line 23, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

I hope that amendment will be accepted. It leaves it open for the President to change the counsel if he is not satisfied with the one that is there now. It leaves it open to him to require the counsel and agent to be the same person. If, however, there are to be separate agent and counsel, the counsel ought not to have less compensation than the agent.

It would be rather a mark of indignity for the leading counsel in these important cases not to receive a compensation at least equal to that of the agent. I do not think it ought to be done. The interests are too great to interfere for a matter of $2,500.

I hope the Senator will accept the amendment on behalf of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can not accept that amendment. I think we have made a very liberal and even extravagant allowance for these people. As the Senator stated on yesterday, the duty of the agent, to whom we give $7,500, is not only to prepare the pleadings and look over them with the assistance of his counsel, but he also argues the cases. We have given him an assistant counsel at $5,000. We have given him an assistant counsel at $2,500. We have given him two law clerks at $1,800. What more ought he to have in the cases now pending? For the next year there will be only a few cases. Mr. Clark said one man could give his time to it and do it all. That is his testimony.

Why should we give the assistant counsel—for that is what he really is—the same salary that is given the leading counsel? I can not see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended, which the Secretary will state.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Semtor from North Carolina that in providing the various amounts to be expended I think he is paring them a little bit closely. He provides—

For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following, for salaries and expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800.

Suppose the arbitrators want to sit four months. Suppose they want to sit five months. Suppose Great Britain, which pays one-half of the expenses, would like to have them sit four months or five months. Why should we not meet our part of the expense? Why limit them to sitting for three months?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because Mr. Clark estimated that that is all the time they could possibly sit, and sent down his estimate to that effect, and we gave him his full estimate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish the Senator would call my attention to that testimony.

Mr. OVERMAN. I refer to the estimate that was sent down by him. Here it is:

Salary of three arbitrators, $1,200 each per month, $10,800.

I asked him to send this estimate. I wanted to make it exactly as he wanted it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Clark has not testified to that at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. He sent this estimate to us. I asked him to send it from the office—to make an estimate of what was needed—and here is the paper he sent. They sat only six weeks last year, and I thought three months probably was as much as they would sit the next year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that estimate is based upon the request of the chairman of the subcommittee to estimate the expenses for the sitting of this arbitration board for three months. They sat about three months last year. I am told that it is very desirable that they should sit more than three months this year. These cases are to be argued. They sat six weeks in Washington last year, and they sat, as I understand, six weeks in Canada; and there is not any reason in the world why they should not put in four months' time or five months' time this year, if they desire to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator knows that if they have to sit longer they can come here for a deficiency appropriation, as they did last time, and get it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; I know we can appropriate for a deficiency, but——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator stands up here on the floor now and says that they must have more than these amounts, when here comes from the Department of State an estimate with a red ribbon around it, headed "American and British claims arbitration, estimates for 1915," and they only estimate for these arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, and we give them everything they ask for.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it not true that that estimate was furnished at the request of the Senator from North Carolina, based upon his suggestion that they would sit for three months?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not based upon anything. We asked them to send the estimates, based on what they knew and not on what I knew. I know nothing about what time they would sit; and here is the paper they sent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has no provision whatever in the bill that would cover any extraordinary expenses to meet emergencies——

Mr. OVERMAN. I was just thinking about asking the Senate to cut down part of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will not the Senator let me finish what I was going to say before he undertakes to reply?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has no provision here for emergencies. It has been necessary in the past to employ stenographers and typewriters to do special work, outside of those that are employed at regular salaries. There is no provision here for any emergency expenses.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to mention this, for it looks like a small matter, but these people have been too extravagant. They spent $71 last year for spring water, $167 for electric fans, and put in $134 worth of furniture. That is the reason why I say it is dangerous to give these lump sums. They ought to have made an estimate. I have tried to give them the amounts they asked for. I do not see why we should increase the amounts.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. SHIVELY. Do I understand that Mr. Clark is in charge of this work?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Clark is one of the leading men in it. He was sent down here. There is nobody serving as agent now. Mr. Lansing was taken from the place he held as agent and put in the State Department as counselor, and then Mr. Clark took entire charge of it, and he said he was doing the work; that while an agent was indispensable, one man could do all the work that had to be done.

Mr. SHIVELY. As I understood the Senator a moment ago, in answer to a request from the department which had this matter in charge, the department stated that three months' sitting would be enough?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the estimate—"salary of three arbitrators, three months, $1,200 each, $10,800." That is the way it appears in the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. And as a matter of fact, last year they sat only six weeks?

Mr. OVERMAN. Six weeks in each country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; they sat three months last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am told that it is desired that they shall sit longer this year; that the cases are ready for argument.

Mr. OVERMAN. They get a thousand dollars a month, and if they sit longer they can come back here with a request for a deficiency appropriation. [Reading:]

Mr. CLARK. I did not intend to convey the impression that they sat in Canada six weeks. The first session lasted about six weeks, but part of that was here and part in Canada.

That is Mr. Clark's testimony, which shows that they did not sit anything like three months.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. The entire amendment, beginning on page 18, is to strike out lines 19——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the paragraph beginning on line 19, page 19.

The SECRETARY. The paragraph as amended on page 19, beginning in line 19, reads:

Salaries, United States agency: Agent, $7,500 per annum; counsel, $5,000 per annum; counsel, $2,520; 2 law clerks, at $1,800 per annum each; joint secretary, who shall also act as disbursing clerk, $2,500 per annum; 2 stenographers, at $1,200 per annum each; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $24,240.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 17, after the word "Switzerland," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the clause read:

International radiotelegraphic convention: For the share of the United States for the calendar year 1915, as a party to the international radiotelegraphic conventions heretofore signed, of the expenses of the radiotelegraphic service of the International Bureau of the Telegraphic Union at Berne, Switzerland, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 18, to strike out:

International conference for the purpose of drawing up international rules and regulations for the assignment of load lines to merchant ships: The appropriation of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the participation of the United States by official technical delegates in the international conference to be called by the British Government to meet in London during the year 1914 for the purpose of drawing up international rules and regulations for the assignment of load lines to merchant ships, made in the act approved February 28, 1913, making appropriation for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, is hereby reappropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 24, after the words "clerical assistants," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

Fifth International Conference of American States: To meet the actual and necessary expenses of the delegates of the United States to the Fifth International Conference of American States, to be held at the city of Santiago, Chile, beginning in September, 1914, and of their clerical assistants, $50,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 5, after the date "1914," to strike out "$2,000, to be immediately available and to continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," and insert "$750," so as to make the clause read:

International Congress on Customs Regulations: To defray the expenses of an expert of the Treasury Department to represent the United States in the International Congress on Customs Regulations, to convene at Paris in June, 1914, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 21, to strike out:

Nineteenth Conference, Interparliamentary Union: For the purpose of defraying the expenses incident to the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, to be held in Washington in 1915, $50,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe. The President is hereby requested to extend an invitation to the members of the Interparliamentary Union.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 4, to strike out:

Acquisition of embassy premises, Mexico City: For the purchase of a site and the construction of a building thereon at the City of Mexico, and for the furnishing of the building, or, as to the Secretary of State may seem best, for the purchase at said city of a site and a building already erected, and for the alteration, repair, and furnishing of such building, and the construction of an addition thereto, if necessary, for the use of the embassy to Mexico, both as the residence of the diplomatic officials and for the officers of the embassy, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 14, to strike out:

Acquisition of embassy premises, Tokyo, Japan: For the construction of a building on ground now held by the Government of the United States at Tokyo, Japan, for the use of the embassy to Japan, both as a residence of the diplomatic officers and for the offices of the embassy, and for furnishing the same, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 20, to strike out:

Acquisition of legation premises at Berne, Switzerland: For the purchase of a site and the construction of a building thereon at the city of Berne, Switzerland, and for the furnishing of the building, or, as to the Secretary of State may seem best, for the purchase at said city of a site and a building already erected, and for the alteration, repair, and furnishing of such building, and the construction of an addition thereto, if necessary, for the use of the legation to Switzerland, both as the residence of the diplomatic officials and for the offices of the legation, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 5, to insert:

Acquisition of consular premises at Shanghai, China: For the purchase in the city of Shanghai, China, of a site and buildings for the use of the consulate general, the United States Court for China, the jail, post office, and other offices of the United States in the port of Shanghai, and for the alteration and repair of said buildings and the construction and installation therein of fireproof vaults, $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 4, after the word "convention," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

International Commission on Public and Private International Law: For the payment of compensation to, and the necessary expenses of, the representative or representatives of the United States on the International Commission of Jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President February 8, 1908, for the purpose of preparing drafts of codes of public and private international law; and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of such drafts, including the compensation of experts under article 4 of the convention, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Allowances for clerk hire at United States consulates," on page 28, line 4, after the words "Secretary of State," to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$375,200," so as to make the clause read:

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $375,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 20, to insert:

REMISSION OF PORTION OF CHINESE INDEMNITY.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer from the sum of $2,000,000, reserved from the "Chinese indemnity, 1900," by provisions of the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, and place to the credit of the fund for "defending suits in claims against the United States" such sums as the Attorney General may from time to time certify to said Secretary as having been expended under his authority and direction in defending claims of citizens of the United States against said Chinese indemnity fund in the Court of Claims of the United States, exclusive of salaries; also that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the credit of the said Court of Claims with the Public Printer, from the said reservation of $2,000,000, upon the certificate of the chief justice of the said court, such sums as the said court may have spent, or shall hereafter spend, for printing testimony in the trial of the said claims; and further, that there shall be allowed as costs in the suits in which recoveries have been, or may hereafter be, had under the said joint resolution of May 25, 1908, such expenses of the claimants, exclusive of counsel fees, as the said Court of Claims may adjudge to be fair and just, and such costs so allowed shall be paid out of the said reserved sum of $2,000,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the certificate of the said court: Provided, That within three months from the passage of this act applications for such costs shall be filed as supplementary motions in the said court by or on behalf of the persons who have recovered judgments under the said joint resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina what is included within the provision "such expenses of the claimants" on line 17? What are those expenses?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are court costs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why not say "court costs"?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows the history of it without my going into it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do know the history of it, and I therefore ask the Senator why not say "court costs"?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are such costs and fees as the Attorney General shall certify as correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; the provision is "that there shall be allowed as costs in the suits in which recoveries have been or may hereafter be had under the said joint resolution of May 25, 1908, such expenses of the claimants, exclusive of counsel fees."

Mr. OVERMAN. It is intended only for court costs, the costs before us. There are nothing but court costs and counsel fees. We struck out "counsel fees." The Senator will notice it says exclusive of counsel fees, and we allow actual costs. That was the intention of it. There is nothing else before us. I do not know what other costs there could be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know what was intended by the committee. I only know what I find in the bill, namely, a provision for expenses. That certainly would not be confined to the costs of court.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will offer an amendment and put in "court costs" I will accept it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not very fortunate in my amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see what other costs it could be.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, this subject has long and often been before the Foreign Relations Committee, and that committee has steadfastly refused to report favorably any provision taking money out of this fund for the benefit of the claimants. It is a trust fund, and we are bound to protect it just as much certainly as we protect the moneys in the general funds of the Treasury of the United States. Whatever is left of that fund after the payment of the claims will go to China, and there is nobody here to protect it unless we protect it.

We endeavored in the Committee on Foreign Relations to find out what the expenses were that were to be paid. We never did find out. The best information that we could get was that they amounted to considerably over a hundred thousand dollars.

I do not think we ought to legislate on this subject in this way. Whatever is to be taken out of this fund ought to be made known to Congress. We ought to know how much is going to be taken out for this purpose, for that purpose, for the other purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, you will notice the language, "such sums as the Attorney General may from time to time certify to said Secretary as having been expended under his authority and direction." There is a large printing bill that has been paid by the Government that we thought ought to be reimbursed out of this fund.

Mr. ROOT. When ordinary printing bills are to be paid out of the funds in the Treasury we get the amount and appropriate the amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. Our idea was to save the Government harmless from the money expended. If the Senator will say that the Foreign Relations Committee has looked into this matter and declined to allow any of these claims, I am willing to strike it out.

Mr. ROOT. The Foreign Relations Committee has declined.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A bill is now before a subcommittee.

Mr. ROOT. As the Senator from Utah suggests, there is now pending before that committee a bill intended to cover this very subject, or a large part of it, and it is pending before a subcommittee.

Mr. OVERMAN. That being so, if it is before the Committee on Foreign Relations, I move myself to strike out the matter.

Mr. ROOT. That covers the whole business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that we disagree to the amendment. I do this with the understanding that the matter is now pending before the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. ROOT. I so understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is pending before the Foreign Relations Committee and has been referred to a subcommittee of which I happen to be a member.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 32, to insert line 1 to line 10 in the following order:

FIFTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

For the purpose of defraying the expenses incident to the Fifteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism to be held in the United States in 1915, $40,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe. The Secretary of State is hereby authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the Governments of the world with which we maintain diplomatic relations to participate in and appoint delegates to said congress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like the Senator from North Carolina to throw a little light on that appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the temperance people all over the United States are deeply interested in this amendment and have asked that this appropriation be made. These international conventions have been held from time to time in other countries and delegates from America have attended and have enjoyed the hospitality of other Governments on these international occasions. This is simply to pay the expenses of holding the next of the international conventions in the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that I am in hearty sympathy with conventions of that character; but have we ever appropriated money for this purpose before?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We have appropriated to pay the expenses of delegates from our country to conventions held in other countries.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How much did we appropriate last year?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think there was a convention last year.

Mr. SMOOT. We made an appropriation last year.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We have appropriated a small sum, perhaps $5,000, but that was simply to pay the expenses of our delegates. This is to pay the expenses of holding the convention in this country. They will have to have halls and committee rooms, and there will be all the usual expenses which attend the holding of conventions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have usually provided in authorizing these congresses and sending delegates to foreign congresses that no appropriation should be made by the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We have endeavored to lessen that expense, and we have turned down many of the requests, but we have not turned down the request as to these alcoholic conventions. It is not a question of prohibition exactly; it is a question of alcoholism. The scientific questions that are involved are very important, very useful, very educational. Somebody has to pay the expenses. It is for the public good that the congress should be held, and we want it held in this country. It is proper that we should take our turn in bearing the expenses of these international conventions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to my colleague that last year Senate bill 1620 was before the Senate appropriating $6,850 to pay the delegates to the convention held a year ago. At that time there was a discussion, and I moved to reduce the appropriation from $6,850 to $4,500, which was agreed to by the Senate. That bill also carried a provision as follows:

And the President is hereby authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the said congress to hold its fifteenth biennial meeting in the United States in 1915.

That was disagreed to and stricken from the bill.

In making my motion, in answer to some remarks made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], I made this statement:

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that if we give $6,850 at this time, two years hence we shall be called upon for another appropriation, and it will not then be $6,850, but it will be $10,000.

I want to apologize to the Senator. It is not $10,000; it is four times $10,000.

Now, Mr. President, I thought when I offered the amendment striking out the provision for the President to invite this congress to meet here in 1915 I was doing it with a full understanding of the committee that hereafter all conventions that were not provided for by treaty should not receive assistance by way of an appropriation from Congress. It was upon that ground that I moved the amendment at the time. The reduction in the amount was made with the full understanding that that was sufficient to pay the delegates to the convention. Of course, if the Senate desires now to extend that invitation after having refused to extend it, and also to appropriate this amount of money, and thinks it is proper to do it, I am not going to make a point of order, and I am not going to object to this amount, but I simply call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a year ago I was as sure that this request would be here again and that the amount would not be confined to four or five thousand dollars as I am to-day.

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to say that we have applications there for assistance to all kinds of conventions. I myself believe that this is the best of them all. I believe with all my heart in prohibition. I live it, and I not only live it, but I teach it. I believe the greatest thing that can possibly happen to mankind is to live it; but I want to say whenever a question arises as to a policy, and we agree upon it, I can not see any difference between one or the other.

I make this explanation for the reason I think it is due from what I said a year ago.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think we ought to be very careful in the consideration of the various invitations that come to us, and in that respect I am in perfect harmony with the attitude of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. But we have, as a matter of fact, accepted the invitations of a number of the Governments of the world and sent delegates to the various conventions. I remember when the matter came up to which the Senator from Utah refers. That is a different matter from this, however. That was to pay the expenses of our delegates to a convention called by a foreign country, to which we had been invited to send delegates. If we did not want to participate in those conventions, we should have refused to appropriate any money to send official delegates from this country to that convention. We have in that way accepted several of these invitations, and now we are asked to hold this convention in this country. I understand the convention or congress does not meet in any country where an official invitation has not been extended, so that unless we extend the invitation as drawn in this provision the congress will not meet in this country but will meet in some foreign country.

It seems to me that it is nothing but the courteous thing for us to take care of the expenses of this convention and invite other countries to it, just as they have invited us, and in view of what we have done heretofore.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think we ought to do that in all these international conventions?

Mr. JONES. I do not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a very large number of them, and they are all good.

Mr. JONES. As I said a moment ago, we ought to consider every one of the invitations that come to us and remember that hereafter our turn will come to extend an invitation to meet in this country. We ought to consider the importance of the various conventions and the expense it is likely to lead us to, and then determine whether we are going to accept invitations, knowing that there will probably come a time when we will be called on to meet the expenses of holding the international convention in this country.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I will yield in just a moment. A couple of years ago, I remember, there was an amendment suggested to the Army appropriation bill to invite the riflemen of Argentina or the South American countries here and appropriating $25,000 for that purpose. I objected to it. It was said that we had accepted an invitation a year or two before from Argentina to send our rifle team down there and that they had appropriated a large sum of money to entertain our rifle team, and therefore because we had accepted their hospitality it was up to us to extend the invitation, and on that theory we appropriated $25,000 to entertain the rifle team and the shooting-match affair.

If we did that, we certainly ought not to hesitate a moment when a matter of this importance comes before us, and it is important in view of the fact that we have sent delegates to several of these international congresses heretofore.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator we have been sending delegates to these international congresses for many years. This is the fifteenth, and the first one that was ever appropriated for was in 1911. All the delegates before 1911 who went there paid their own expenses. There is another thing I wish to say in this connection. This is an annual gathering. That is the difference between the one the Senator speaks of and this one, as I understand it.

Mr. JONES. I am reliably informed that this congress never meets in any country except on an official invitation from the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true; I do not know.

Mr. JONES. They have decided that they will meet in this country. That is conditioned, of course, upon an official invitation coming from our Government. It is the purpose of this provision to authorize an official invitation to be extended.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and probably knows how this sum of $40,000 was arrived at. How was it discovered that it would take $40,000 to pay these expenses? It does seem to me that this is a large sum of money for the entertainment of delegates to a convention of this kind. There might be certain conventions where there would be more money needed.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator I do not know just how it was arrived at. It may be that the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], can give more definite information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that the parties interested said they had to hire halls and committee rooms and furnish all kinds of entertainment, and that this sum would be required. We had no facts presented to us.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to be held in San Francisco, Cal., is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not, either; but I was told by one interested in it that they intend to hold it at the time of the world's fair in San Francisco. That may have been settled upon, and it may not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea where it is to be held.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa, in relation to the amount, that I asked some Members of the House if they knew what the expense consisted of, and all the answer I got was just about the same as the Senator from North Carolina has given, that that was the estimate of the parties interested in holding the congress.

Mr. KENYON. Are the hotel bills of the delegates to this country paid?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Secretary of State investigated the matter and estimated the expense of the congress. He estimated that it would require $50,000, and the amount was cut to $40,000 by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Was this the estimate of the Secretary of State?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES. It was sent down and they made a report. I am told that in these congresses in other countries they had 1,300 and 1,500 delegates, but they probably will not have so many, because they have farther to come. They expect, I am sure, an attendance of three or four hundred delegates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What are these expenses?

Mr. JONES. I suppose there will be meetings, and that they will have banquets of a character that will be suitable for a convention of this sort. I suppose they expect the Government to pay those expenses. I understand those expenses have been paid in the other countries by the Government, and they have appropriated a certain sum for the purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is this $40,000 to be used for banquets?

Mr. JONES. I suppose a part of it is to be used for that purpose. That is simply a supposition on my part. The Senator knows as much about it as I do.

I do not suppose a congress of that character, or of any character, could come together where they would not have banquets. I have not known of any. There will be entertainment of various kinds. This is for the official entertainment of the foreign delegates.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I wish to state for the information of the Senator from Utah and Senators who made the inquiry as to where this congress would meet that I am reliably informed that it is to be held in Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that all the information I got was from one person who was interested in securing it in this country, and he suggested at that time, and it was some time ago, that it would be held at San Francisco during the World's Fair. As I said, I do not know whether that is so or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if there are no more committee amendments to act upon, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate the provision for the International Institute of Agriculture.

I move to reconsider the vote whereby the House provisions were changed. I make the motion with reference to the item on page 15, line 26, first, and then I propose to follow that with a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the figures in the House bill were changed in line 3 on page 16 from $3,600 to $2,500, and in line 7 on page 16 from $5,000 to $2,500.

In reference to this motion, Mr. President, I will be as brief as possible. I am quite sure the committee could not have thoroughly understood the nature of the convention known as the International Institute of Agriculture. They certainly could not have been informed regarding the purpose and scope of the institute and the character of its work. This National Institute of America——

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Florida that of course he was not here and the committee knew nothing about it, but we found what was in the current law. If the Senator will agree to let the amendment stand on line 26 on the basis of the law of last year we are willing to accept the amendment on page 16 and make it all correspond. We will recede from the amendment in line 3 and also in line 7, but we insist on line 26, which was the current appropriation last year, and we see no reason to increase that amount.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is perhaps true; I have not examined as to the statute of last year; but the House provision is based on the recommendations of our own delegates to the International Institute of Agriculture at its last session.

I will take but a moment of time. I should like to put in the RECORD a letter from the King of Italy to the prime minister, dated January 24, 1905, which forms the basis for this organization. It was in consequence of this letter that the institute was founded by the international treaty of June 7, 1905.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

The origin of the institute is shown in the following letter of His Majesty the King of Italy to Prime Minister H. E. Giov. Giolitti:

"DEAR PRESIDENT: Mr. David Lubin, a citizen of the United States, has made a proposal to me, with all the ardor of sincere conviction, and it seems to me both wise and useful, and I therefore recommend it to the consideration of my Government.

"Farmers, who generally form the most numerous class in a country and have everywhere a great influence on the destinies of nations, can not, if they remain isolated, make sufficient provision for the improvement of the various crops and their distribution in proportion to the needs of consumers, nor protect their own interests on the market, which, as far as the more important produce of the soil is concerned, is becoming more and more one market for the whole world.

"Therefore considerable advantage might be derived from an international institute which, with no political object, would undertake to study the conditions of agriculture in the various countries of the world, periodically publishing reports on the amount and character of the crops so as to facilitate production, render commerce less expensive and more rapid, and establish more suitable prices.

"This institute, coming to an understanding with the various national offices already existing for the purpose, would also supply precise information on the conditions of agricultural labor in various localities, so as to serve as a safe and useful guide for emigrants, promote agreements for mutual defense against diseases of plants and animals where individual action is insufficient, and, finally, would exercise an action favorable to the development of rural cooperation, agricultural insurance, and credit.

"The benefits attained by means of such an institute, a bond of union between all farmers and consequently an important influence for peace, would certainly be manifold. Rome would be a suitable place for its inauguration, at which the representatives of the adhering States and the larger associations concerned might assemble and harmonize the authority of Governments with the free energies of the farmers.

"I am convinced that the nobility of the aim will suffice to overcome the difficulties of the enterprise.

"And in this faith I sign myself,

"Your affectionate cousin,

"VICTOR EMANNUEL.

"ROME, January 24, 1905."

In consequence of this letter the International Institute of Agriculture was founded by act of the international treaty of June 7, 1905. The treaty was ratified by 40 Governments and 12 others have since adhered to it, so that at the present time almost the whole civilized world is included.

The seat of the institution is at Rome. According to the treaty it is a "Government institution in which each adhering power is represented by delegates of its choice." It is administered by a general assembly and by a permanent committee. The president is the Marchese Raffaele Cappelli, delegate of Italy; the vice president, Mr. Luis Dop, delegate of France; and the general secretary, Prof. Giovanni Lorenzoni. The staff now numbers 97.

The revenue of the institute is derived from contributions paid by each of the adhering nations according to the group in which the nation is inscribed as established by the treaty. In accordance with the provisions of the treaty the present revenue will be increased from 810,000 to 1,150,000 francs (including 300,000 francs a year contributed by His Majesty the King of Italy).

Mr. FLETCHER. I should also like to put into the RECORD—and it will save the time of the Senate and save some discussion of this matter—as outlining the work of the institute what appears in its monthly bulletin in 1912, setting forth very briefly the purpose of the organization and the scope of its work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The International Institute of Agriculture was established under the international treaty of June 7, 1905, which was ratified by 40 Governments. Eleven other Governments have since adhered to the institute.

It is a Government institution in which each country is represented by delegates. The institute is composed of a general assembly and a permanent committee.

The institute, confining its operations within an international sphere, shall:

(a) Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, vegetable, and animal products, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets;

(b) Communicate to parties interested, also as promptly as possible, the above information;

(c) Indicate the wages paid for farm work;

(d) Make known the new diseases of plants which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the diseases, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective;

(e) Study questions concerning agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit in all their aspects; collect and publish information which might be useful in the various countries for the organization of works connected with agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit;

(f) Submit to the approval of the Governments, if there is occasion for it, measures for the protection of the common interests of farmers and for the improvement of their condition, after having utilized all the necessary sources of information, such as the wishes expressed by international or other agricultural congresses, by congresses of sciences applied to agricultural societies, academies, learned bodies, etc.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like merely to call the attention of the Senate to the report made by the delegates to the last general assembly of the institute, signed by Alfred C. True, David Lubin, Charles W. Pugsley, Spencer Ewing, and Thomas J. Brook, and which is embodied in Senate document 196, and I should like to have inserted in the RECORD some extracts from the report, which I shall submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the request will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

The bureau of general statistics collects, collates, and publishes statistics of production and commerce in agricultural products, both animal and vegetable, throughout the world.

The bureau of agricultural intelligence and plant diseases collects and publishes information regarding the progress of scientific and experimental investigations and practical experience in agriculture throughout the world, and, as a branch of this work, gives special attention to the diseases of plants and to entomology.

The bureau of economic and social institutions collects and publishes statistics and general information regarding agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit, together with other matters relating to the economic and social organization of rural communities.

Those publications of the institute which have a bearing on the formation of the price of the staples (such as crop reports and data on exports, imports, and stocks) are based exclusively on official information, supplied direct to the institute by the adhering Governments.

The other publications are produced from the following sources:

(a) Information officially communicated by the Governments.

(b) Original articles contributed by eminent authorities designated by the adhering Governments.

(c) Excerpts and abstracts of articles translated from the 2,225 official and unofficial periodical publications of the world received by the institute.

The institute prints and publishes two annuals and three monthly and one weekly bulletins, together with a considerable number of monographs on special subjects. The annuals are on agricultural statistics and legislation, respectively; the monthly bulletins are on (1) agricultural statistics, (2) agricultural intelligence and diseases of plants, and (3) economic and social institutions; and the weekly bulletin is bibliographical. The monthly bulletins are published in the French, German, English, Spanish, Italian, and Hungarian languages. French being the official language of the institute, the editions in that language are paid for from the funds of the institute. Provision for the edition in the other languages is made by the countries interested. The Congress of the United States has made an annual appropriation of $5,000 for translating and printing the English edition, the rest of the expense being borne by Great Britain and her colonies. This is considered a fair arrangement by the delegates from the United States, and they recommend that Congress should be asked to continue this appropriation.

* * * * * * *

One of the most important, and at the same time the most difficult, tasks which the institute has undertaken is the selection and summarizing of important articles appearing in current scientific and practical journals and the publication of these summaries in the monthly Bulletin of Agricultural Intelligence. Such work can only be done most effectively by persons thoroughly trained in the different lines of agricultural science and practice, and who have at the same time a high degree of editorial insight.

* * * * * * *

To meet these requirements the assembly voted to ask the adhering Governments to raise the unit of their contributions from 1,500 francs to 2,500 francs, as provided for in the treaty of 1905. Since the contribution of the United States is on the basis of 16 units, the amount which Congress should be asked to appropriate toward the current expenses of the institute should be increased from 24,000 francs ($4,800) to 40,000 francs ($8,000). The desirability of this provision for the growing needs of the institute was so apparent that the delegates of all the adhering countries voted for the increase in the budget and undertook to recommend their Governments to enlarge their contributions.

This was one of the many evidences that the countries which are supporting the institute are now firmly convinced that the work which it is doing is important and valuable. There being no longer any question on these fundamental points, the Governments are more and more interesting themselves in plans for strengthening the institute and developing its activities along the most useful lines.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to call attention to the recommendation of the commission, and I ask the chairman's attention, especially upon this particular point, to what our delegates to the International Institute of Agriculture, in their report dated September 26, 1913, say:

Since the contribution of the United States is on the basis of 16 units, the amount which Congress should be asked to appropriate toward the current expenses of the institute should be increased from 24,000 francs ($4,800) to 40,000 francs ($8,000). The desirability of this provision for the growing needs of the institute was so apparent that the delegates of all the adhering countries voted for the increase in the budget and undertook to recommend their Governments to enlarge their contributions.

That is the recommendation our delegates made after the general assembly which was held last year at the headquarters of the institute in Rome, Italy. I am quite sure when the importance of this work is considered, the appropriation asked is certainly modest enough as coming from our Government. The International Institute of Agriculture is now participated in under treaty by 54 nations, and is doing a work which is growing in significance and importance. Our Government ought to recognize it decently, and $8,000 is a very small appropriation to make. I have no question but the other larger countries make much more liberal appropriations than that toward this institute. I wish the chairman of the committee could see his way clear to accept the House provision as to that item.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the vote by which the amendment was agreed to been reconsidered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Florida to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the Senate, on page 15, line 26, struck out the sum of "$8,000" and inserted in lieu thereof the sum of "$4,800."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am willing to compromise the matter with the Senator from Florida and to restore the sum of $3,600 which was stricken out on page 16, in line 3, and $2,500 inserted in lieu thereof, but I am not willing to restore the $8,000 which was stricken out on page 15, line 26, and $4,800 inserted in lieu thereof, because $4,800 is the amount which the United States has been contributing for years for that purpose. I am not willing to make this change simply because some delegate requests that the allowance be increased. Our quota is $4,800. Every civilized country in the world gives its proportionate part, so that the various contributions will make a very large sum for keeping up this bureau in Rome. It is now proposed to give $8,000 by the United States when we do not know that whether other countries will contribute a cent. If the Senator is willing to accept what I suggest, I will make a motion to recede from the amendments on page 16, in lines 3 and 7.

Mr. FLETCHER. The question, then, comes first on the committee amendment in line 26, on page 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senate committee proposes to amend the bill, on page 15, line 26, by striking out $8,000 and inserting $4,800. Following that amendment, on page 15, in line 3, the amount appropriated for this service was reduced from $3,600 to $2,500, and on the same page, in line 7, it was reduced from $5,000 to $2,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the committee amendment, on page 16, line 3, changing the sum from $3,600 to $2,500.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to disagree to the amendment as to the item on page 16, line 3.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment, on page 16, line 7, reducing the appropriation from $5,000 to $2,500.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question for information. I have heard no explanation of the amendment, on page 25, providing for the "acquisition of consular premises at Shanghai, China." The appropriation made for that purpose is $375,000, and on the two preceding pages the appropriations for buildings at Mexico City, Tokyo, and Berne have been stricken out. Why was this large appropriation made for Shanghai and the other appropriations not agreed to?

Mr. OVERMAN. The representative of the Secretary of State, Mr. Carr, appeared before the committee and said it was more important to provide for the building in Shanghai than to provide for the embassy buildings in the other capitals mentioned. At Shanghai we have a peculiar jurisdiction, as the Senator knows. We have there a court, we have a jail, we have a post office, we have a marine hospital, and we have a board of health. Down on the wharf in Shanghai the countries of Russia, Japan, England, Germany, and France each have buildings. It is the most desirable property in the city. The United States has a lease on six houses, one of which is used for a courthouse, one for a jail and post office, one for a marine hospital, and so on. The lease expires in two years. We now have an option on the property at a certain price, and unless we take that option we lose that property and will be ousted. If we are compelled to go back to the city we shall not be able to find so good a site as the present one on which to establish our post office, courthouse, jail, and so forth.

We found that it was more important to buy this property now than to buy property in other countries and to erect buildings for embassies. In fact, in Japan we can not acquire title to any property; we have a ground rent there and lease the property; we can not acquire the fee-simple title to land in Japan. We have a building there now. We saw no purpose to be accomplished by providing $50,000 for an embassy building in Mexico City under present conditions. Therefore we struck all those provisions out and appropriated for the purchase of the property now occupied by the United States on the water front at Shanghai, and on which, as I have said, the United States has an option.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to offer an amendment, on page 32 of the bill, in the clause appropriating $40,000 for the International Congress Against Alcoholism, particularly in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that a part of this appropriation was to be used for banquets. At the end of the paragraph I move to insert:

Provided, That an itemized account of all expenditures shall be reported to Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15280) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15280) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions without amendment.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $169,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1915, $150,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered, and then I will yield.

Mr. KENYON. I know there are a number of Senators who desire to be present when this bill comes up, and therefore I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Iowa suggested the absence of a quorum, and I think nothing is in order but to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Iowa suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. KENYON. I did, but I did not want to interfere with the request of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bankhead	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Hughes	Norris	Smoot
Bryan	James	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Burleigh	Jones	Owen	Swanson
Burton	Kenyon	Page	Thornton
Catron	Kern	Perkins	Tillman
Chilton	La Follette	Pittman	Townsend
Clapp	Lane	Reed	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Shafroth	West
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	White

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is absent on official business and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. MYERS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JAMES. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and to say that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. ASHURST. I now ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, such will be the order. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $150,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose, and to remain available until expended.

And insert:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, allotment, and disposal of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey, allotment, or disposal of Indian lands, $200,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That hereafter no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, or allotment of any land in severalty upon the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona, who was not residing on the public domain prior to June 30, 1913: Provided further, That the surveys shall be made in accordance with the provisions for the survey and resurveys of public lands, including traveling expenses and per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence to those employed thereon; and when necessary the Secretary of the Interior may employ in the city of Washington, D. C., such assistants as are required in the preparation of the final returns of the surveys of Indian lands made under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arizona, why is provision made in the amendment for the resurvey of these lands? They have been surveyed once, have they not, and the expense incurred has been taken out of the money belonging to the Indians? Now, what is the necessity for a resurvey, with the consequent additional amount for the Indians to pay?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is the formal language which has always been used in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator correct that this is the language that has always been used? I understood it had not been used previously.

Mr. CLAPP. It was evidently used by the House, because the paragraph the Senate committee struck out on page 2 reads:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887—

And so forth.

Mr. KENYON. What is the purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are so many Senators on the floor that the Chair will have to enforce the rule. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is a claim that some of the original surveys have been found to be incorrect, and it is desired to have a resurvey, so as to allow corrections to be made in the original surveys.

Mr. KENYON. Is it applicable only to the original surveys?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not.

Mr. KENYON. It covers the whole thing, so that an entirely new survey can be made?

Mr. SMOOT. They can resurvey the whole territory.

Mr. KENYON. It simply means that out of the money belonging to the Indians can be taken such sums as may be needed for an entirely new survey. I do not understand it myself. It may be all right, but it does not seem so.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator from Iowa that the grant of authority embodied in this provision is very much complained of by the Indians. They claim that a great deal of injustice has been done to them in the past by the right which is given to the department to go upon their lands and resurvey and reallot them. The Indians in some instances have claimed that after they had secured a good piece of tillable land, made improvements upon it, worked on it perhaps for two or three years, put up fences, built their homes and other buildings, they have found themselves, as a result of the operation of such provisions as this, resurveyed out of their land and placed among nice, good, thrifty sagebrush, where water can never be placed on it, and where you can raise nothing but horned toads. They say that this has happened to them a great many times in the past, and they object to it, and claim that none of these resurveys should be made without at least their having been notified of the fact and their consent secured to resurvey their allotments.

In other cases the complaint has been made, and it is no doubt true, that as a consequence of these resurveys the Indians' territory has been diminished and large bodies of good and valuable timberland has been lost to them by resurveys and got into the hands of their paleface brothers. They do not like that.

It is not a purely formal provision, as the distinguished chairman of the committee thinks it is, but a real, active, and live provision. I objected to it last year as a member of the committee and have no great confidence in it at this time; but we are assured by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he will resurvey, if he does any resurveying, very righteously, and it is in the hope that he will do so that I think this provision has been allowed to stay in the bill by the committee. Would the Senator like to move to strike it out?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LANE. I yield for the Senator to answer that question.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would be governed a great deal by what the Senator from Oregon might say about that. If he believes that the term "resurvey" is a term which may in the application of the survey and with reference thereto result in wrong to the Indians, I would move to strike it out.

Mr. LANE. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that there are instances, no doubt, where it would be necessary to have a resurvey; but, in the main, I think such resurveys have been to the disadvantage of the Indians. They are bad for the Indian and he loses by them, I think, more than he gains. The Indians think they would not have lost in the past hundreds of thousands of acres, and probably more than that, if such a word had never been put in the bill. I do not know what ingenious gentleman discovered it, but it would be a good thing for the Indians if it were stricken out.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator know when it was discovered?

Mr. LANE. No. It has been contained right along in several bills. I discovered it last year, among many other things, when I came here, and I objected to it because of the complaints made to me by the Indians.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KENYON. As the committee amendment is now presented would a motion to strike out a word in the amendment be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the committee amendment may be amended at this stage.

Mr. KENYON. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out, in line 15, page 2, the word "resurvey."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa proposes an amendment to the committee amendment by striking out the word "resurvey," where it appears in line 15, on page 2.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I largely agree with the statements made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. I, too, objected to this word in the last year's appropriation bill, because it did not seem to me at that time that we had a sufficient explanation, or that the explanation we had answered the complaints which were made.

I am satisfied, however, so far as I am concerned, that there are lands which need resurveying. I think if this word should go out it is probable that it might be provided for in some other method under the title "surveying," and yet I am not clear about that; and I am inclined to believe that there is a legitimate use for that word in the bill at this time.

There are lands which have not been properly surveyed. Mistakes have been made. The very fact suggested by the Senator from Oregon, that resurveys have been made which have changed the line which the Indians originally held as their line and as marking their property, I contend shows that some of those lines should be resurveyed, that they should be redetermined, because already there have been set on foot some provisions for determining frauds, which I think were clearly frauds against the Indians by the fact that they were improperly and illegally located.

It is contended, and I think with some force, that there should be power somewhere to resurvey lines or lands which have not been properly located. It is for that reason that I consented, as a member of the committee, that the word should be retained in the bill. Unless some provision is made to accommodate the necessary conditions that may arise, I fear we may perhaps be inflicting a wrong upon the Indians, and we may be imposing upon the department a condition which we have opposed, namely, that it is exceeding its authority.

Among the things I have contended against are certain things that have been done by the commissioner or by the department, which have not been clearly defined. We have sought, in certain provisions of this bill, to have the department render an account for the things they do. I dislike to be a party to a provision which would deny them the right to do something which is absolutely necessary; whereas if they report on these provisions as the commissioner or acting commissioner claimed they should report, and the things that should be done, I imagine many of the evils which have existed in the past will disappear.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say, for the information of the Senator from Iowa, that this word is carried in the bill, and it is in the nature of a large grant of power which has nowhere any restrictions placed upon it. If the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had come before the committee, or had presented to the Senate a schedule or list of the resurveys which it was important or necessary to have attended to, it would be a different matter; but there has been no list in detail submitted, and, in addition to that, it does not confine the authority to those resurveys, even though he had presented a list of them. It allows him to go out and resurvey any portion of the Indian lands anywhere in the United States. It is a grant at large, and that is the objection to it.

If it said "resurvey in conformity with the schedule of such plans as have been submitted to the Indian Affairs Committee," or "to the Senate," there would be no objection to it, and there could not be any objection on the part of anyone; but it is a grant at large, and that is the objection I have to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be very brief in reply to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Oregon yielded the floor?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the observations made by the distinguished Senator from Iowa, I will say that an examination of the bill for the current year will show that the last appropriation bill carries the same language. The committee had some protracted discussion over this item. As was observed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], if the word "resurvey" were stricken out, the department would be impotent and powerless to correct an erroneous survey. Doubtless, as has been pointed out, some erroneous and improper surveys have been made; but shall we, by striking out the word "resurvey," deprive the department of the opportunity and the power to correct an erroneous survey?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is a matter of absolute indifference to me whether this word is stricken out or not; but, of course, the department could not place before the committee of either House a detailed statement of the lands which probably would require to be resurveyed. It is as the cases come up in the experience of the department. The only thing the department could do in such a case would be to make an estimate as to the probable amount within which they would be able, as occasion arose, to meet the occasion and make the resurveys. No department could anticipate every tract of land which years of experience might demonstrate the necessity or expediency of resurveying. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the only way they could do would be to estimate as they did, although, as I said, it is a matter of absolute indifference to me whether it is put in the bill or left out.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, they can ascertain during the period of one year all the titles which are questioned, all pieces of land which they think ought to be resurveyed, and submit that list to the Senate in time for the succeeding year's work.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, Mr. President, it is only as the population keeps crowding about that the occasion or the suggestion of an erroneous survey and the occasion for resurveying arises. It is different from some other things which can be estimated absolutely, for the idea is to give them this fund in order that as these occasions arise during the coming year they may have a fund from which they may make resurveys without any question as to whether or not the authority is included under the original term "survey."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. KENYON. The thought that was in my mind was this: Here is a survey that has been made under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians."

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. If that survey has been, as suggested here, erroneous in any particular, does not the Senator from Minnesota believe that the term "survey" is sufficient to cover a resurvey, to right any erroneous things there may be in the original survey, and that the term "resurvey" as used here means an entire resurvey under this act of Congress, to take the place of the original survey? It seems so to me.

Mr. CLAPP. There could be no line of demarcation as to the extent of the proposed resurvey. If the word "survey" is sufficient, then every wrong that can be committed under a resurvey can be committed under the word "survey." Out of extra caution, in order that there might be no question with the auditor and comptroller when they came to pass upon these accounts, the word "resurvey" was put in. I am inclined to think myself that probably the word "survey" would cover the subject, as I say. That is why I said at the outset that it is a matter of total indifference to me whether it is retained or not. I was simply explaining how it would be impossible to anticipate what will be needed. You might as well undertake to anticipate all the disputes between landowners as to their lines. It is only as settlement comes, it is only as the claim is made here and there that the line has been improperly run, that we have to resurvey among ourselves. These things can not be anticipated.

Mr. KENYON. I appreciate the force of that argument, of course.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I simply wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that precisely the same term was used in the Indian appropriation act for 1911 and in the Indian appropriation act for 1912. It was found necessary, I apprehend, that there should be some resurveys after these original allotted lands were surveyed; so provision was made for the resurvey in the appropriation act of 1911 and again in the appropriation act of 1912, and it appears again in the appropriation act of 1913.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether or not the Indian, having secured his allotment under the act of Congress and the survey in pursuance thereof, can have it taken away from him by this resurvey?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Unless the survey included some lands that are afterwards found not to belong to the Indian, he can not be deprived of his allotment. This can not affect his title at all. It is simply a question of making the lines right if they are found to be wrong. I do not think any injustice has ever been done to an Indian under the provision for resurvey. I think the provision for resurvey is simply to correct errors that occurred in the original survey from time to time as the errors are discovered.

Mr. KENYON. I had understood from the Senator from Oregon that great injustice had been done in the resurveys.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Injustice has been done to the Indians; there is not any doubt about that. But I do not think any injustice was done to them by any resurvey.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, that is exactly how the Indians claim it was done—by the act which gives to the department the power to go out and readjust, make new lines, and reapportion certain tracts of land which are under an irrigating system. There are Indians who claim that they have been resurveyed off of their homesteads and allotments as many as five times, and finally have landed on land which is nonirrigable and never can be irrigated. I refer to Indians who had allotments on irrigable lands, which they had improved to a certain extent. That is the identical complaint which they do make, and it is this identical provision which they claim does them injustice. They may be mistaken about it. This other language, the right to survey, may cover it, but it never happened to them, they tell me, until after this grant allowing this general right to resurvey and reapportion, which apparently carried that privilege with it. That is the identical item which they do claim is the cause of this injustice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, some one must be intrusted with the administration of the Indian appropriation bill. If it can be assumed that the Indian Office will so use the power conferred upon it by act of Congress as to defraud these Indians of their lands, then it is high time Congress knew that, and knew it in a definite way, and not in some vague, general charge made here on the floor. It is high time they had the precise information, the instances pointed out, and then Congress might provide for some other agency than the Indian Office to administer the law.

Up to the present time, however, we have had to rely upon the Indian Office to make the surveys of these Indian lands. If errors are committed in surveys of Indian lands, as errors always appear from time to time in the surveys of any lands, surely there ought to be some provision for some one to correct those errors. I do not know of any authority to which to commit that duty other than the Indian Office. At least we have no other officer designated under the law to take charge of that work.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, I want to say that last year I brought to the attention of the committee such facts as I had at hand, and they discussed the matter fully there, and then I brought it again into the Senate.

I have here a copy of the remarks I made last year when this bill was under consideration. At that time I said:

The first item of appropriation in the bill confers the right to survey, resurvey, and classify, and so forth, the lands.

Now, that is the item here.

In this connection I present for your inspection at this time the blue print of a map which shows one of the said "resurveys" for which a similar appropriation was made. By an engineering feat which is not accounted for in the primitive system of logic current among Indians, they find themselves separated from much of their best and most valuable timber lands on one well-known reservation.

I submitted a specific instance, with a map and with the testimony of the engineer who had surveyed it. I presented that to the committee. I do not know what more I could do with the committee or Members of the Senate, unless I took them out personally on a personally conducted tour over the lands. There are other instances, of which I have not such full proof, but there are many that can be found. The complaint has been quite general; and I think the Senator will find, if it is ever investigated, that that is true. The proof of it is unquestioned.

Now, it is merely a question here as to whether we want to pass this item. I do not want to do anything to hamper the Indian Office, and, like the Senator, I see that it will be necessary in some cases for them to resurvey lands. That is proper, and I am willing to trust them; but in a general way this grant has been used not for the benefit of the Indians. I make that assertion on the strength of the statements which have been made to me, and I can produce instances which confirm the statement.

I have them, and they are of record. I have already submitted them not only to the committee but to the Senate. I di[d] not know the item was coming up to-day. They are in my office, and I could bring them here now, but I did not know this objection was going to be raised to this particular item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, dams, etc., on page 5, line 10, after the word "prescribe," to insert "and annually thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress a cost account in detail of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended on each such irrigation project for the preceding fiscal year, including a résumé of previous expenditures, which shall show the number of Indians on the reservation where the land is irrigated, irrigable area under ditch, irrigable area under project (approximate), irrigable area cultivated by Indians, irrigable area cultivated by lessees, amount expended on construction to June 30 of the preceding fiscal year, amount necessary to complete, and cost per acre when completed (estimated); value of land when irrigated, and such other detailed information as may be requisite for a thorough understanding of the conditions on each system or project," so as to read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apportion the cost of any irrigation project constructed for Indians and made reimbursable out of tribal funds of said Indians in accordance with the benefits received by each individual Indian so far as practicable from said irrigation project, said cost to be apportioned against such individual Indian under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and annually thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress a cost account in detail of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended on each such irrigation project for the preceding fiscal year, including a résumé of previous expenditures, which shall show the number of Indians on the reservation where the land is irrigated, irrigable area under ditch, irrigable area under project (approximate), irrigable area cultivated by Indians, irrigable area cultivated by lessees, amount expended on construction to June 30 of the preceding fiscal year, amount necessary to complete, and cost per acre when completed (estimated); value of land when irrigated, and such other detailed information as may be requisite for a thorough understanding of the conditions on each system or project.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question with reference to the text of the bill in lines 8 and 9, on page 5. It seems to provide that where an irrigation project is constructed, the cost of which is reimbursable out of the tribal funds, the charge may be assessed against the individual Indian for the benefit which he receives.

I take it that the benefit he receives is derived from the benefit to the lands that have been allotted to him. It seems to me that it would be wise to have a provision there making this cost a charge against the land as well as against the Indian; at least, that any amount that may be unpaid when the Indian disposes of the land should be a charge against it. I desire to ask the chairman whether the committee has considered that phase of the matter at all?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, the committee had protracted hearings. This item was the subject of some considerable discussion. While there might be force in the observation made by the Senator from Washington, nevertheless, after full discussion, the committee agreed that this would be a more suitable and appropriate way of legislating upon this matter.

Mr. JONES. I think probably at the proper time I shall offer an amendment embodying my idea. I wanted to call it to the attention of the chairman, so that he might give it such thought as he would have time to give it.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator wish to reserve this item?

Mr. JONES. No; this is a part of the text of the bill. We are now considering the bill for committee amendments, as I understand. After we get through I can offer an amendment to that part of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 6, line 5, after the words "Indian homes," to strike out "$260,000" and insert "$310,000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection, equipment, and maintenance of camp and pavilion hospitals for the use of afflicted Indians, and especially for the treatment of Indians afflicted with tuberculosis and trachoma. No hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $12,500. Said sum to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Said hospitals to be constructed in the open market under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs," so as to read:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, correction of sanitary defects in Indian homes, $310,000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection, equipment, and maintenace of camp and pavilion hospitals for the use of afflicted Indians, and especially for the treatment of Indians afflicted with tuberculosis and trachoma. No hospitals shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $12,500. Said sum to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Said hospitals to be constructed in the open market under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation to relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, etc., on page 7, line 1, after the word "designate," to strike out "Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment"; and in line 9, after the word "herein," to strike out "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, employ physicians regularly licensed to practice to aid in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph without requiring such employed physicians to pass any civil-service examination."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, in line 18, after the word "isolate," to strike out "remove"; in line 20, after the word "such," to strike out "force" and insert "means"; and in line 21, after the word "isolation," to strike out "removal"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find any Indian afflicted with tuberculosis, trachoma, or other contagious or infectious diseases, he may, if in his judgment the health of the afflicted Indian or that of other persons require it, isolate or quarantine such afflicted Indian in a hospital or other place for treatment. The Secretary of the Interior may employ such means as may be necessary in the isolation or quarantine of such Indian, and it shall be the duty of such Indian so afflicted to obey any order or regulation made by the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out this provision.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, objection is made to that word "isolate."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will pardon me, it was the word "remove" that was objected to and stricken out largely at his instance.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The word "isolate" was agreed upon.

Mr. LANE. Yes; and I was about to say that since then I have heard considerable objection to that, for the reason that they think it gives too large a grant of power to imprison. They are satisfied with the word "quarantine."

Mr. ROBINSON. As I view the matter, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the effect of the word "isolate" could not be broader than the power conferred under the word "quarantine," and, unless the chairman of the committee knows of some reason for retaining the word "isolate" in the bill, I myself should have no objection to striking it out, if the Senator desires.

Mr. LANE. I think if you will allow ordinary quarantine methods to be practiced, without putting a more rigid construction on it, it will give satisfaction and accomplish exactly what the committee desired.

Mr. ASHURST. As the Senator well remembers, of course, the use of the word "remove" was deemed by the committee a little harsh, and therefore it was stricken out. As was suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], however, it was considered that in order to equip the department with sufficient means to enforce a quarantine, the word "isolate" would be better employed. It was rather agreed in the committee that the word "isolate" should remain there, in order further to strengthen and equip the department in carrying out the quarantine.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it was the object of the committee to provide proper quarantine methods. A word will do it. The word "isolate" might be stretched.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Oregon propose to do?

Mr. LANE. Strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order at this time, because it is not a committee amendment. The bill is not open at this time to amendments offered by individual Senators. The proposed amendment is out of order at the present time. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is the force and effect of the words in line 22—

> And it shall be the duty of such Indians so afflicted to obey any order or regulation made by the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out this provision.

Suppose an Indian refuses to obey the order, what punishment would be meted out to him? Is it intended to permit some unusual punishment to be inflicted upon him?

Mr. ASHURST. That provision fixes the rule of law or conduct of the Indian described in such cases as fall within the purview of the proposed statute.

Mr. JONES. Suppose an Indian refuses to obey a regulation; what would be done to him?

Mr. ASHURST. That would be for the Secretary of the Interior, within proper legal limitations, to prescribe.

Mr. JONES. Will this permit him to do something to the Indian that he would not be authorized to do if it were not here?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is a profound lawyer and will have to draw his own conclusions. In my judgment it would not.

Mr. JONES. So in the opinion of the chairman this language is really superfluous?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Arizona will pardon me, the language has a certain moral value and effect which I think the Senator from Washington will perceive. While it does not carry any penalty it does fix an obligation upon the Indian, who is under the control of the Government, to obey the regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES. It is more the moral effect that the Senator thinks would come from it that will really be the benefit of this provision?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 1, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1,440,000" and insert "including the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children, $1,500,000"; in line 5, after the word "treaties," to strike out "shall be paid any employee in any position in the Indian school service who does not hold a certificate showing that such employee has passed the necessary examination required by the Civil Service Commission for such position, except such employees as are exempt under civil-service rules, and no part of it"; and, in line 12, before the words "the State," to insert "of," so as to make the clause read:

> For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, including the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children, $1,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 23, after the word "buildings," to insert "and sites," and in line 24, after the words "lighting plants," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$480,000," so as to read:

> For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of schools and agency buildings, and sites, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, $480,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 13, after the word "employed," to insert "for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for such farmers and stockmen," and in line 16, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to read:

> To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits; for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for such farmers and stockmen, and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $500,000: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the proviso on page 10, in line 19, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

> Provided further, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to ask the chairman or some member of the committee why this reduction is made from $25,000 to $5,000? As passed by the House it reads:

> That not to exceed $25,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to my distinguished colleague, I will say that when the committee was considering this item the reduction was believed to be proper, but without attempting to speak for the committee, which I have no authority to do, it is my personal opinion that the sum provided by the House is the proper sum. That is only my personal view, however.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I understand that a certain amount of this money has been applied to experiments in Egyptian cotton, and that these Indians can raise it with some profit, and it gives a ray of hope to me at least, and I see some evidence that real aid is being extended them. I shall move, therefore, that the House item be restored.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How does the Senator get the impression that the appropriation would authorize any expenditure of money for experiments in cotton? It is confined to trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true; but there are some little cotton experiments made with it and very justly. Of course, they did not confine themselves to any particular root, vegetable, or other growth, and while the appropriation bill may have carried that language it was believed that its purpose included a slight investigation as to the matter of cotton. After restoring the sum, I should like to add the words "and also for experiments in the raising of cotton within Indian reservations." I move to insert the word "cotton" in the bill at the proper point and also to restore the appropriation to $25,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Arizona will not prevail. The bill provides, as will be discovered by reading it, for great help to the Indians along the lines of agriculture, having in view all the time the condition of the Indian himself. We have appropriated large sums for industrial agricultural education to the Indians. It was believed that $5 000 was all that could be properly expended for the benefit of the Indians. It was thought at least that no part of the Indian appropriation money should be used for the purpose of making demonstrations for the benefit of the white man. We have carried large sums which, perhaps, are more properly for the benefit of the white man than for the Indian in the Indian appropriation bills.

From the testimony that was before us and from the investigation that was given this subject it was believed that in view of all the large appropriations for the real benefit of the Indian, teaching the rudiments of farming, putting him on his farm and giving him the tools and the implements with which to farm, we were going about as far as we could go now.

The Indian is a child who has been neglected in the past. The proposition now is to teach him some things in reference to the scientific culture of certain products. We have employed farmers and made provision that they shall be experts in the business. They can teach the Indian and will teach him the things that it is necessary and possible for him to learn now.

Therefore I hope that this appropriation of $25,000 for experimental purposes will not be restored, and that the provision of $5,000 shall remain in the bill for the express purposes mentioned in the item.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, just a word in response to what the Senator from Michigan has said. He seems to bewail the fact that white men might possibly attain some advantage by some appropriation that has been made directly for the Indians. That is a misfortune, probably, from his standpoint, but from mine it does not affect the value of the appropriation that it could possibly aid the whole country in which it was carried on, no matter by whom it was carried on.

But it is a fact which has been demonstrated, that Egyptian cotton grows there with greater luxuriance and of a better quality, probably, than in any other country in the world. The ancestors of many of these Indians were raising cotton before any of the people of this country raised cotton. Many of them were experts in cotton fields. This appropriation, or any appropriation that will help them in that development, offers the greatest possible aid that could be given them. It is a pretense to say that it is not helping the Indians because it is to be applied to some other purpose than the growing of corn or the raising of beans, and therefore the House appropriation should not be restored. These Indians, by the use of a small amount of water—and they have a very limited amount—can do more for themselves where they are located with Egyptian cotton than with all you have in your bill or will have in the next 25 bills as to teaching the Indian by experiment how to raise different fruits, flowers, vegetables, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state where the long-staple cotton can be raised on Indian land?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; on the Pima Reservation, right there south of Mesa, between Mesa and the Gila River.

Mr. SMOOT. Are they raising it now?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; they are raising it now, the finest quality in the world.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not the Senator from Arizona understand that in the appropriation for the Pima Indians, and in the appropriations for all the Indian tribes, we give annually large appropriations to assist them in the processes of agriculture? That money can be used on that reservation for the express benefit of those particular Indians under the conditions in which they live, with the soil and climate and everything else taken into consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where does the appropriation for that purpose for the Pima Indians occur in this bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have forgotten the term that is used in all cases, but the actual work already in existence of the Indian Department shows what that money is used for and what the purposes are. I think this whole item is out of place entirely in the bill. It was finally agreed that $5,000 might possibly be used to some advantage in this experimental work.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I shall not take any longer time, but, on account of the condition of my voice, I ask the Secretary to read a memorandum on agricultural work on the Indian agency farms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the Secretary proceeds, I will state that I understand that those facts were ascertained by the Representative from Arizona now serving in the House of Representatives with such ability and distinction.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON EXPERIMENTAL AGRICULTURAL WORK ON INDIAN AGENCY FARMS.

In the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 12579, Calendar 453) as reported to the Senate on May 14, on page 10, line 20, the Senate committee recommends the reduction from $25,000 to $5,000 of the amount to be used to "conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grain, vegetables, and fruits."

Under this item a cooperative testing and demonstrative garden is conducted on the school and agency farm of the Gila River Indian Reservation, at Sacaton, Ariz., by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with the Office of Indian Affairs.

As a result of experiments carried on in this experiment station the culture of Egyptian cotton has been established in the Salt River and Gila River Valleys as a flourishing and profitable industry among both the white settlers and the Pima Indians. The development of this industry in Arizona is directly to the advantage of the Indians, who not only obtain handsome profits from the crops grown on their own farms but find remunerative employment in picking the cotton of white farmers, labor to which they are peculiarly well adapted.

Egyptian cotton, because of its fine quality, requires better handling than ordinary short cotton. The Indians pick carefully, with a minimum of injury to the plants, and also very cleanly, so that the grower who employs them usually escapes the depreciation caused by the presence of leaves and other "trash," which is very prejudicial in the eyes of spinners.

It is conservatively estimated that last year the Pima farmers received a total of $20,000 for the cotton grown by them on their reservation farms, and that about $25,000 was paid in wages to the Papago cotton pickers in the Salt River Valley. This year, with over 15,000 acres of Egyptian cotton planted, several thousand Papago Indians can find employment picking this cotton, and the pay roll will probably mount up to $100,000 or more.

The great importance of this new crop to both the white settlers and the Indians makes it desirable to conduct on a more extensive scale experiments in the breeding of new and superior strains of Egyptian cotton and in measuring exactly the amount of water needed for this crop. Money is also required for the construction of fireproof storage warehouses, in order to accumulate enough seed of a new variety now being bred to permit of sending it out for planting on a commercial scale in a year or two.

The new cotton above referred to, which has been bred on the Sacaton Cooperative Testing Gardens, is superior to any grown in Egypt, and if it can be selected to be as uniform as the sort at present commercially grown in Arizona will give the United States the same sort of supremacy in Egyptian cotton that it now has in the white-staples because of the sea-island crop.

Since cotton can be produced with comparatively little irrigation, it is peculiarly valuable for southern Arizona. It requires only about half as much water during the season as alfalfa, and the profits from cotton are often greater. The fact that a highly profitable crop like Egyptian cotton can be grown with but slightly more than 2 acre-feet of water is of the utmost importance, not only on the Indian reservations, where all water now available must be pumped, but also in the Salt River Valley, where every economy in the duty of water increases the area that can be irrigated. If the San Carlos irrigation project is carried out, it will be necessary to develop crops like Egyptian cotton that permit the highest economy of water, as the Army Engineers' Report (63d Cong., 2d sess., H. Doc. No. 791, p. 46) counts on a water right of only 2 acre-feet for the area to be irrigated. In order to determine accurately the water requirements of Egyptian cotton and other crops now under trial at the Sacaton experimental gardens, it will be necessary to put in concrete ditches and laterals and to install a number of water meters

Work almost as important as that on the Egyptian cotton has been done in introducing and establishing the new Peruvian alfalfa, which gives two additional cuttings a year in the Southwest. Both Indians and white settlers are rapidly adopting this superior alfalfa.

Experiments that promise important results are also in progress in breeding a new and superior type of Bermuda onion seed, in growing pecan nuts under irrigation, and in breeding heavy-yielding varieties of Indian corn suitable for culture in the hot, dry climate of the Southwest.

It will not be possible with the appropriation carried in the Senate committee report to carry on properly the work of selecting and breeding this new cotton, storing up seed thus bred, and determining the water requirements of this and other new crops now being tested at Sacaton.

The $25,000 voted by the House will be none too much to provide for the work here and for similar experimental work on a smaller scale on Indian reservations in New Mexico and southern California.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In line 23, after the word "fruits," I move to strike out the semicolon and insert the word "cotton."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the word "trees."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. After the word "trees" would be better, probably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In line 20, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "five" and insert "twenty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is involved in the pending amendment of the committee. It is not necessary for the Senator from Arizona to move a separate amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if the committee has made any estimate of the number of Indian school or agency farms? Here is an appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose of conducting "experiments on Indian schools or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil, climate," and so forth. I have been led to wonder after reading this appropriation as to the number of such farms. Can the committee give any information in regard to the number of farms in operation at the agencies and at the Indian schools?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not understand the Senator's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota is addressing an inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senator from South Dakota address his inquiry to me?

Mr. STERLING. The inquiry, I should like to say to the Senator from Arizona, was, Has he made any estimate of the number of farms at the Indian schools or agencies? The appropriation calls for $5,000 to be used in experimental work at such farms. What estimate or statement can the committee give in reference to the number of such farms?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the various Indian agencies throughout the United States have more and more, especially in recent years, adopted the policy of teaching the Indian farming, to the end that he may become, in a measure at least, self-supporting. I am not for the moment able to give the Senator from South Dakota the number of Indian farms. Is that the information the Senator sought?

Mr. STERLING. My inquiry relates to agency and Indian school farms. It is to those farms that the appropriation especially refers.

Mr. ASHURST. There are some 149 or 150 agencies, and I presume upon a large number of them some farming is done. In some climates under some conditions one class of farming and in other classes of soils another class of farming is done, but there is a distinct movement all along the line among all the agencies wherever possible and practicable to develop farming as far as can be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the appropriation of $5,000 or of $25,000, for that matter, for experimental work on Indian farms would be inadequate to conduct that kind of work along any broad lines. The motive which prompted the committee in reducing this item from $25,000 to $5,000 was that scientific experiments in agriculture ought not to be conducted at the expense of the Indians of the United States. The Government, through the Department of Agriculture, as everyone here knows, is doing very liberal work in that regard, and the results of those experiments are available for the benefit of both the whites and the Indians.

The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate thought that it was hardly fair to divert a large amount of Indian funds to the purpose of making experiments in scientific agriculture or kindred subjects. We thought that the liberal expenditure of Indian funds is justifiable for the stimulation of the industrial spirit among the Indians. Before the consideration of the bill is concluded it will be disclosed that the committee has gone a long way toward promoting a very liberal appropriation. A reimbursable or revolving appropriation was carried in this bill for that purpose, but we did not believe that it was best or that it was fair to charge up to the Indians a large appropriation for the purpose of conducting experiments in scientific agriculture. The Indians have not advanced to that stage in industry yet where that could properly be done. The Government, in the Department of Agriculture, already has adequate machinery and the necessary funds for conducting this class of experiments throughout the United States, and the result of those experiments are available for the benefit of all the citizens of the country, including the Indians.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In response to the Senator I will say I do not understand that this item is reimbursable at all. It is under the Secretary of the Interior. I am convinced if the Senator recognized the supreme importance of this particular appropriation to the Indians he would not hesitate to agree that the Senate amendment should be disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe the Senator from Arizona is right, and that this is a gratuity item. No one can justify himself in going further than I in promoting a spirit of industry among the Indians of the United States. I conscientiously believe that if ever the Indian problem is solved this will prove to be one of the chief instrumentalities of the accomplishment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am in sympathy, as well as in hearty accord, with the Senator's expression of opinion. I believe that this one particular item is of the greatest importance. With the Indians in a desert country and with scarcity of water, by the insertion of the word "cotton" and restoring the House appropriation, I do not think the money could be more profitably expended than in that scheme to carry out as rapidly as possible the hope of all of us for a better day and a better civilization among those people.

I hope that the Senate committee amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am induced to believe from the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that this was a reimbursable item in the appropriation bill. I had not recently examined the item. Since it is not a reimbursable item I am inclined to the opinion that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arizona should be agreed to. The result of these experiments, since the cost is chargeable against the general Treasury fund, will be available for both whites and Indians. The arguments at first directed against the insertion of the amendment on the theory that it was a reimbursable appropriation applies in my judgment with equal force to the adoption of the amendment since the argument of the Senator was based on the false premise that it was a reimbursable appropriation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the reason for my inquiry as to the number of schools was that I supposed there were quite a large number of these farms at the Indian schools and agencies; that very many of them would be entitled to the benefit of the experimental work on the farms; that the need for such work at one school would be as great as it would be at another school, and in view of that I thought $5,000 would not go very far in conducting this kind of work.

Hence I am inclined to agree with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that the appropriation should be $25,000 rather than $5,000 as reported by the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I recall very well the debate that was had on this question when the subject was before the committee. Unfortunately, we did not have a stenographer at that time, and the testimony was not taken down. I understood at that time that the sums taken from Indian funds were reimbursable. My understanding was, though I may be mistaken about that also, that if this money was all to be expended—and all the testimony was to that effect, at least—it was to be expended at one place, and that these experiments were to be conducted at one reservation; that was among the Pima Indians, as I understand. I do not think there was any evidence that it was proposed that any experiments should be conducted elsewhere. I may be mistaken about that, but that is my memory of the whole transaction.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will say to the Senator that as to these particular Indians it would be a dead letter, because they have not any funds anywhere on the face of the earth.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from Arizona know whether these experiments are to be conducted anywhere else except in this one particular place in Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have an idea that they will be conducted in many places, but I do not know of any Indians there that have any money in the Treasury of the United States. That is the reason they should appeal more strongly to our consideration.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, under the reading of this bill, it would apply to all farms at Indian schools or agencies.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It ought to do so.

Mr. STERLING. And I would not favor any proposition here to appropriate money for experimental work at any one particular agency or any one particular reservation. My understanding is that it would apply to all; that all who may reasonably need it, or where it may be reasonably beneficial, would share in this appropriation.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from South Dakota is correct in his opinion that it would apply to all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, line 2, after the date "nineteen hundred and twelve," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the unexpended balances of this appropriation for the fiscal year 1913 are hereby made available for expenditure by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in providing quarters for farmers and for such other industrial purposes as he may deem necessary: And provided further, That no money appropriated herein shall be expended on and after January 1, 1915, for the employment of any farmer or expert farmer whose salary shall be in excess of $50 per month, unless he shall first have procured and filed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a certificate of competency certifying that he is a farmer of actual experience and qualified to instruct others in the art of practical agriculture, such certificate to be certified and issued to him by the president of the State agricultural college or university of the State in which his services are to be rendered, or by the president of the State agricultural college or university of an adjoining State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge the amount of the unexpended balance referred to in the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. For last year?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I will find it for the Senator from Utah in just a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. While the Senator from Arizona is looking up this information I will say that this method of legislation is not good, and, unless there is some particular reason for it, I think I shall have to make objection to it.

Mr. ASHURST. The unexpended balance referred to in the amendment for the last year was $28,509.01. It is impossible, of course, to anticipate what the unexpended balance under this bill would be, but probably it would be about the same sum.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the committee think the unexpended balance ought to be used for this particular purpose?

Mr. ASHURST. The committee resolved it in that way; they reached that conclusion. There was discussion at some length over these revolving funds, and this was deemed to be good policy. I do not recall that there was serious objection made to it.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am concerned, I always favor making an appropriation direct for any particular object or undertaking which the department may desire to accomplish. This, however, looks to me as if the department, foreseeing that there would be an unexpended balance of $28,000 at the end of the fiscal year, is trying to find some way of expending that money. This amendment is for that purpose, or that is the way it looks to me. I wish to ask the Senator, if this class of work is necessary, why did not the bill itself, as it came from the other House, include this particular item?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, the Senator from Utah is a man of large experience, especially in matters pertaining to the western Indians, and he knows that in the transaction of business relative to many Indian reservations exigencies arise that may not be anticipated, and which prudence and foresight could not have anticipated, and that, if authority of law is granted to the department to use these unexpended balances, much money and much property may be saved, and, certainly, a loss of time may be avoided rather than wait for the next appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not complaining that there is an unexpended balance. That is such a rare occurrence in the affairs of the Government that it almost takes one's breath to find that there is an unexpended balance of any appropriation which has been made.

Mr. ASHURST. As the Senator will, of course, observe, the purpose for which the money may be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is limited to "providing quarters for farmers and for such other industrial purposes as he may deem necessary."

This amendment is in accord with the spirit which actuates the large movement which has been inaugurated in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in every way possible to teach the Indians to farm and to become self-supporting.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full accord with what the Senator says as to the object the department intends to reach; but what appeared strange to me was an appropriation made by a proviso to an appropriation bill, utilizing an unexpended balance for such a purpose. It seems to me that if this work is necessary and proper for the department to do—and I rather think it is—it ought to have been appropriated for direct and not by the appropriation of an unexpended balance to carry it on for one year. It ought not to be carried on for this year only, but it ought to be carried on right through all the years to come if the policy is a good one.

Mr. BRADY. Did the committee discuss this particular amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. The committee discussed it.

Mr. BRADY. Did they discuss it with the department?

Mr. ASHURST. The department approved this item. I wish to say, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me at this point—and this is for other Senators also—that in the Senate hearings you will not find a transcript of the testimony relative to this matter, because the committee did not authorize the employment of a stenographer until we had proceeded some 8 or 10 pages in the consideration of the bill. This is not included in the testimony; no stenographer took the testimony upon this matter. There was, however, a discussion relative to it, and the department asked for this legislation.

Mr. CLAPP obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the principal feature of the amendment does not relate to the unexpended balance, but relates to fixing the qualifications for so-called farmers engaged in the Indian Service. The joint commission heretofore established by Congress to investigate Indian affairs and the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate have found through the course of the investigations which have been made that the services of this class of employees have not been altogether satisfactory, due to a number of causes. Among those causes we have found the lack of particular qualifications for this work. A great many of the so-called farmers are doing practically nothing toward teaching the Indians how to farm. In the first place, on many of the reservations they have no quarters away from the agency where they can stay among the Indians and give them the advantage of their services; they are employed on purely administrative matters.

As a result of those investigations, the Indian Bureau has inaugurated—and that, too, with great spirit—a movement to vitalize this work of the farmer. They have asked the committee to insert this amendment giving them some latitude in the expenditure of this unexpended balance for the purpose of providing quarters for those farmers, in order that they may be able to perform the function for which they were appointed and employed. In view of those circumstances, and in view of the extension of the work and the improvement of the character of the work that has been done by these men, the Committee on Indian Affairs inserted the amendment at the request of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] does not object to the appropriation. As I recall, the unexpended balance was $28,000, was it not?

Mr. ASHURST. Twenty-eight thousand five hundred and nine dollars and one cent.

Mr. CLAPP. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that it is better form to name the amount in making an appropriation; and I would suggest that on page 11, in line 4, after the word "thirteen," there be inserted the words "amounting to $28,509.01"; in the same line to strike out the word "are" and to insert "is"; and after the word "hereby" to insert the words "appropriated and"; so that if so amended it would read:

That the unexpended balances of this appropriation for the fiscal year 1913, amounting to $28,509.01, is hereby appropriated and made available for expenditure by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

And so forth.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the committee has any authority in such matters, I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator's authority to do so. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 11, line 4, after the word "thirteen," it is proposed to insert "amounting to $28,509.01"; in the same line, to strike out "are" and insert "is"; and, after the word "hereby," to insert "appropriated and," so that, if amended, it will read:

For the fiscal year 1913, amounting to $28,509.01, is hereby appropriated and made available.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, the word "balances," in line 3, should be changed to "balance." If you change the word "are" to "is," the word should be "balance"; it should be in the singular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, that modification will be made. The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, line 24, after "$300,000," to strike out "Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of warehouses in the Indian Service," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 14, after the words "Board of Indian Commissioners," to strike out "$4,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent" and to insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 20, after the word "agencies," to strike out "$150,000" and to insert "$200,000: Provided, That hereafter whenever an Indian shall be incarcerated in an agency jail a report or record of the offense or case shall be immediately submitted to the superintendent of the reservation or such official or officials as he may designate, and such report shall be made a part of the records of the agency office."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the advisability of amending that so as to read:

Provided, That hereafter whenever an Indian shall be incarcerated in an agency jail or any other place of confinement a report—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move an amendment to that effect?

Mr. LANE. I move that amendment to the amendment, and hope it will be accepted by the chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before it is agreed to, I want to ask one question. Suppose an Indian is incarcerated in the county jail in another State or somewhere outside the agency jail, in that event I wonder if there should not be some provision made whereby if his arrest were not discovered or known that no censure should attach to the superintendent of the agency.

Mr. LANE. What I was aiming to accomplish——

Mr. SMOOT. I see what the Senator is aiming at, and I think it is a good thing; but I wonder whether it would not be better to confine it a little more closely?

Mr. LANE. I prefer to have as much latitude go with this as possible. Where it is impossible; of course the agent is not expected to do impossible things.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 12, line 22, after the word "jail," it is proposed to insert "or any other place of confinement."

Mr. LANE. If it is within the power of the superintendent to make the report, he should be required to do so. Frequently the Indians get off the reservation. White men induce them to go off the reservation, get them drunk, and secure their titles from them. They use duress upon them off the reservation. There are cases of that kind reported, which I desire to cover.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Why would it not be well for the Senator to modify his amendment by saying "agency jail, or other place of confinement therein," so as to fix the boundary?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think there should be no limitation. I think when an Indian has been arrested there should be a record made of it and kept on the reservation. I think the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is a good one without limitation.

Mr. LANE. I think that is what ought to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so myself, Mr. President, providing it can be carried out; but I doubt very much whether it can be carried out in very many cases.

Mr. LANE. Perhaps it can not; but in many cases it can be carried out where it is not now carried out, and it will do good to that extent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that I agree with the purpose of his amendment; but it suggests itself to me that possibly in order to keep a record of Indians confined and arrested, say, 100 miles away, the agent may think that this provision is a mandatory order to him to go out and ascertain the facts and come back and make his record in the reservation, and thereby squander much more money than Congress contemplates in acting upon this amendment. While we agree that such a record should be kept, there ought to be some limitation on it, at least to prevent an agent quitting his business and going 500 miles away, or, so far as that is concerned, a thousand miles away, to ascertain the facts as to an Indian who may be arrested and come back and record them in the archives of the reservation.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is the duty of the superintendent to go out to ascertain the facts. My understanding is that the facts are to be reported to the superintendent, and for that reason I do not think the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is any too broad. I think it covers the ground. When an Indian commits an offense, so far as possible the superintendent of the agency ought to be informed of that fact; but I do not believe that this provision would require the superintendent to go out and get the information. It is the duty, as I understand, of the man who arrests the Indian to make the report to the superintendent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May we have the amendment again stated? I was not in the Chamber at the time it was offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 13, line 11, after the word "available," to strike out "$116,450" and to insert "$125,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of not to exceed $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 13, to insert:

For the employment of six Indian Service inspectors, exclusive of one chief inspector, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum each and actual traveling expenses, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 18, to insert:

That section 2 of an act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe, to pay any Indian who is blind, crippled, aged, needy and destitute, or helpless, his or her share or any portion thereof of the tribal or trust funds in the United States Treasury belonging to the tribe of which such Indian is a member, and of any other money which may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of such tribe susceptible of division among its members, or to expend the same for his or her benefit: Provided, That all authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior by this amendment and by the act of which it is amendatory may be exercised in respect to any such Indian, competent or incompetent, independently of whether or not application shall be made for his or her share of such funds."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to ask as to the correct parliamentary procedure. I have a memorandum from the department on my desk indicating that there should be an amendment proposed to the committee amendment which has just been stated. Is it appropriate to offer it at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Oh, yes. Individual Senators can move to amend an amendment of the committee, and, of course, the chairman of the committee may do so.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, on page 13, line 25, after the word "Indian," I move to strike out the words "who is blind, crippled, aged, needy and destitute, or helpless."

In support of the amendment I desire to read from a letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressed to me under date of June 2, as follows:

JUNE 2, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: I am of the opinion that H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate should be changed by striking out the words "who is blind, crippled, aged, needy and destitute, or helpless," in lines 25 and 26, on page 13, for the reason that this limitation might prevent us from paying out to Indians their shares of tribal funds who should receive the same but who could not do so under the language now contained in the bill. I should be glad if you would have the bill amended accordingly.

* * * * * * *

Very truly, yours, E. B. MERITT.
Assistant Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, in reading the amendment I am reminded that in the committee we had a long discussion as to the authority which was to be conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior with regard to the distribution of Indian funds. Many were of the opinion that there were several amendments in the bill which tended to make it easier than heretofore to bring the funds of the Indians together and then distribute them at the pleasure of some Indian agent. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the language of section 2 which has just been read. It seems to me that it is general legislation and subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will state the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. It is general legislation, it seems to me, and I think I must raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Senator will withhold his point for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, cases are arising all the time where Indians, although they have funds, may suffer for the want of medicine and medical care, of food, and of shelter, and it does seem to me that some such provision as this is advisable. If we have made it too broad, that is another matter; but there ought to be some authority vested in the commissioner, through the Secretary of course, so that in such cases he can use the funds standing to the credit of the Indians for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Arizona, as I understand, has moved to strike out from lines 25 and 26 the words descriptive of the Indians in whose behalf such authority may be exercised. That leaves it so that funds can be paid to any Indian.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona has been presented because on page 14 we added a proviso:

Provided, That all authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior by this amendment and by the act of which it is amendatory may be exercised in respect to any such Indian——

Mr. TOWNSEND. "Such Indian." What Indian?

Mr. CLAPP. Any Indian—

competent or incompetent, independently of whether or not application shall be made for his or her share of such funds.

If Senators will bear with me a moment, I desire to express one other thought and then I will conclude as to this particular phase of the matter. There are Indians who have amounts standing to their credit in tribal funds which it is easy to ascertain. The sums due the individual Indian from such tribal funds will under no contingency ever be less than at this time. We have provided in this bill several funds appropriated by the Government which can be used to buy horses or seed or to help build a house for the Indian, taking his note and providing for its payment under a system which, so far as we have gone, has proven very efficient. Where the Indian has money standing to his credit as a part of the tribal funds, it occurred to the commissioner, and I think to some of the rest of us, that instead of taking the Government money and loaning it to that Indian, without even a special limitation as to what his share would be, he might have money advanced to him under the protection of the Indian Office, and of course under the personal supervision of the agent. I think the Senator is correct that the amendment is subject to the point of order if it is pressed.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator well knows that in our discussions before the committee, if I may refer to them, there were many of us who believed that the slideway down to the Indians' money was very well oiled for the white man. I for one believed that we were removing some necessary safe guards. Now, you will observe the great care with which this amendment was written. At the beginning of the section it authorizes the Secretary of the Interior "to pay any Indian who is blind, crippled, aged, needy and destitute, or helpless his or her share," and so forth; but at the end of the section it is provided:

That all authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior by this amendment and by the act of which it is amendatory may be exercised in respect to any such Indian, competent or incompetent, independently of whether or not application shall be made for his or her share of such funds.

I want to add just a word before I insist upon my point of order. The Committee on Indian Affairs has been obliged to sit on a great many of these important matters with only 1, 2, or 3 present out of the 15 members constituting the committee. I have personally sat in that committee while hearings were being had for two hours when I was the only member of the committee in the room. A motion was made and carried in that committee that any member of the committee might instruct another member to vote for him. I insisted to the best of my ability that that was a bad way to legislate on an important appropriation bill. If Senators will take pains to read this bill carefully, they will find that we have legislated upon pretty much everything in the decalogue.

I insist on my point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the observations made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I wish first to say that the committee had the bill under consideration a little over two months—two months and some ten days.

The Senator states that there were occasions upon which he was present for two hours while hearings were going on and no one else was present. I very well remember that, and the committee is under great obligations to him for that service.

The committee spent some 12 or 14 days investigating what might be called the Kickapoo item in this bill. The hearings were very protracted, and one witness testified some three or four days. The committee did the Senator from Vermont the honor to ask him to sit and listen to the hearings and see that the stenographer recorded what the witness said.

I wish, however, to make another observation, to the effect that no legislation was incorporated in this bill except by a quorum. It is true that the committee, by a roll-call vote, ordered the chairman to count the vote of an absent member on a particular subject when that member in writing indicated that he wished his vote counted in a particular way. Whether that be good or bad is open for discussion, but that is the record.

The remark of the distinguished Senator might indicate that there was a lack of diligence or patience in the work of this committee. I am a very new Member of the Senate, but I must not permit that remark to go unchallenged, because never in my experience have I seen a body of men who were more assiduous, more anxious to do the just and proper thing, than the Committee on Indian Affairs. I know that each and every member of the committee, including the distinguished junior Senator from Vermont—who was nearly always, if not always, present—neglected the work of other important committees. They were obliged, if they will pardon me for saying so, to be absent when other important committees were calling for their presence; and they sat from day to day for a period of nearly two months, trying with the light before them to bring out the best bill that could be brought out and brought to the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. ASHURST. In just a moment.

In regard to this item, I wish to say that the identical legislation which was incorporated in the bill passed the House of Representatives on May 5, 1914. Whether or not that would render it invulnerable to a point of order I leave for older and more experienced men to say. I might state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that if he will advert to page 870, part 4, of the hearings, he will see that Mr. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, made the following statement, referring to this legislation:

This does not apply to the Five Tribes, the Osage Indians, or the Chippewa Indians, because special legislation applies to those Indians.

I thought that information might be of some value to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should be recreant to a duty if I did not say that I have never sat on a committee with a man who was evidently trying more faithfully to do his full duty in regard to the bill before him than the chairman of this committee, the Senator from Arizona. I remember the bill to which he has just referred. An especial effort was made to have a hearing upon it, because it was said to be an important measure.

My recollection is that the most the chairman could bring together to consider that measure was three or four members. Perhaps I am wrong about that, but that is my recollection. I said at the time that I did not like the general trend of the measure, and I insisted as best I could that there should be more than three or four members there to pass upon so important a bill. The bill is not now before the Senate simply because we could not get a quorum in the committee to consider it.

In regard to this particular feature of this bill I wish to say that, while I may be wrong about it, if I err I think I am erring on the right side when I insist that general legislation should not go into this bill when it has been passed upon in the committee with only one, two, three, or even half a dozen members present. It may be true that when it was finally read a quorum was present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the point of order is not debatable. The Chair invited the expression of views of the members of the committee as to the merits of the point of order. He does not receive much enlightenment from observations as to what goes on behind committee doors.

Mr. PAGE. Just one word further, if the Chair will pardon me. There were, I think, some members of the committee that were never present but once or twice during the entire hearings on this bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has suggested the lack of attendance at the meetings of the committee to consider this bill. Does the Senator think, especially under such circumstances, that the bill should be passed with such a small attendance of the Senate as we seem to have for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Washington usually attends to those things very well.

Mr. JONES. I do not like to interfere with the——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a point of order pending. The Chair will dispose of that, and then we can proceed as we may be advised.

The Chair is of opinion that the provision is general legislation. It is an amendment of a special act of Congress defining the rights of the Indians and the allotments to which they are entitled. It is not an item of appropriation at all. It is distinctly a legislative proposition.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator from Vermont would like to have a larger attendance of the Senate during the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Washington any suggestion to make? If so, he will please address the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I wanted to get some information from the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is not interested in anything that has been disclosed to the Senate yet. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 14, after line 11, to strike out:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment, or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That hereafter any officer or employee appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior as special examiner in heirship cases shall have authority to administer oaths in investigations committed to him: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, in Oklahoma.

And to insert:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest, in any trust or restricted allotment, or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $20,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Indian Office in connection with the work of determining the heirs of deceased Indians, out of the $100,000 appropriated herein: Provided further, That hereafter any officer or employee appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as special examiner in heirship cases shall be authorized to administer oaths in investigations committed to him: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma: And provided further, That hereafter upon the determination of the heirs of a deceased Indian by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be paid by such heirs, or from the estate of such deceased Indian, or deducted from the proceeds from the sale of the land of the deceased allottee, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $10, to cover the cost of determining the heirs to the estate of the said deceased allottees; which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States and a report made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, on or before the first Monday in December, of all moneys collected and deposited, as herein provided: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to require the attendance of witnesses at hearings, upon proper showing by any of the parties, to determine the heirs of decedents, held in accordance with section 1 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 855), and the amendment of February 14, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 678), under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am rather inclined to submit a point of order upon the part of the bill which the Secretary has just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take that matter under advisement until the Senate convenes to-morrow. It is a much more complicated question than the other one. The Chair will make some investigations, and with the permission of the Senate the matter will be reserved. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before that amendment is passed over I must make the observation that it is one of the most important items in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the reason the Chair wants to consider it further.

Mr. ASHURST. If, however, the Chair wishes to defer the ruling until to-morrow I shall be glad to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If we are likely to get through with the bill or to approach the end of its consideration this afternoon, the Chair will take the responsibility of passing upon the point of order to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation is estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will dispose of it to-day if there is any likelihood of getting through with the bill this afternoon. Otherwise the Chair will ask the permission of the Senate to look into it to-night.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon may present his amendment.

Mr. LANE. It is to change a couple of words in the amendment and substitute "directed to compel" for "authorized to require."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may offer his amendment now, if he wishes.

Mr. LANE. Very well. On page 16, beginning in line 1, where it says "the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to require the attendance of witnesses," I wish to have it read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to compel the attendance of witnesses.

I offer that amendment for the reason that there has been complaint that some valuable rights of the Indians have been lost through the lack of such a provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the difference between "require" and "compel"? Perhaps the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I am now advised, I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "hereby," on page 16, line 2, in the committee amendment, the Senator from Oregon proposes to strike out the words "authorized to require" and to insert in lieu thereof "directed to compel."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Oregon also to move to strike out the word "authorized" and to insert the word "directed." Is that accepted, too, by the chairman?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "compel the attendance of witnesses" have been subsituted for the words "require the attendance of witnesses" in line 2.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Oregon also proposed the substitution of the word "directed" for the word "authorized."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been done.

The SECRETARY. The words "authorized to require" have been stricken out and the words "directed to compel" have been inserted.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, have we had the reading of the bill from line 14, on page 15, to the end of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All of that has been passed over under the point of order presented by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. My point of order was raised on the part which has been read, down to line 14, ending with the word "Oklahoma."

I wish now to raise a further point of order, because I feel quite sure I am right about that, as to the balance of page 15, commencing with the words "And provided further," in line 14, and going down to the end of line 10, on page 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all a single amendment. The Chair understood that the point of order was made to it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry at this point, even though the Chair has reserved the ruling? I should like to ask the chairman of the committee as to the proviso in lines 12, 13, and 14, on page 15, which reads:

That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

Why is that proviso inserted?

Mr. ASHURST. Because it is covered under another and special appropriation for that purpose in a different part of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 16, line 13, after the word "crops," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$100,000"; and in line 25, after the word "Indians" to strike out "And provided also, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of all moneys appropriated for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 3, to insert:

That from and after the passage of this act the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I believe the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should have an advance on the salary of $5,000, which he is now getting. I felt very certain at the time this matter was before our committee, however, that in increasing his salary to $7,500 we were making so important a change that it might interfere with the salaries in many different departments of the Government service and I urged $6,000 as the proper sum. I am going to move to amend by striking out "$7,500," in line 5, and inserting "$6,000" in place of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Vermont moves to amend the committee amendment by striking out the amount "$7,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,000."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I certainly shall not weary the Senate by any lengthy discussion of the subject.

I can well appreciate the desire of Senators to avoid raising the salaries of officials generally; but I respectfully submit, with regard to the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that it might be called sui generis. There is no other office that is entirely analogous to the position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for this reason: As is well known, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a trustee for over $1,000,000,000 worth of property. He has under his jurisdiction over 8,000 employees. In addition to that, he is not only dealing with questions of policy as affecting land and personal property, but he is dealing with over 300,000 persons, large numbers of whom are incompetent and require the special care and solicitude of one who has much experience in the business world.

Many worthy and able men might be qualified for Senator, or governor, or for various positions, but it requires a peculiar skill and large experience in dealing with human nature in its plastic and mobile form to become a successful Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the language of this paragraph, it not only provides that the salary shall be increased in the future, but it provides for the payment of a back salary at an increased rate. Is not that the proper construction? It provides for the payment of an increased salary for nearly a year past.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is what the amendment says on its face.

Mr. NORRIS. Conceding what the Senator said to be true—and I am inclined to follow his judgment—I wanted to inquire whether he thought it was proper legislation to have the increase apply to the year that is past.

Mr. ASHURST. As a general proposition, Mr. President, I would not favor such legislation; but familiar as I am and must be and ought to be with the duties required of this official, I unhesitatingly say that a man who faithfully and efficiently performs the duties of the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is poorly paid at $10,000 a year. As I said before, he is not only dealing with a billion dollars' worth of property that is increasing in value from year to year, and dealing with 8,000 employees, but he is dealing with over 300,000 incompetent persons whom he is trying to develop into citizens.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the bill we have just passed, the legislative bill, the salary of the commissioner is fixed at $5,000, and an appropriation of that amount is made for his salary, and that is the present salary.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. We would then have two appropriations—one of $7,500 for his salary and one of $5,000 for his salary.

Mr. ASHURST. The last legislation on the subject would be that which would govern, unless the two were in absolute conflict.

Mr. NORRIS. This does not appropriate $7,500. It appropriates only $2,500 for the present year. It is strictly and only a proposition of legislation.

Mr. KENYON. I presume it would be subject to a point of order as legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. The legislative bill appropriates $5,000. This simply increases the salary by the sum of $2,500. There is no conflict that I can see, and no double appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that this question was before the Committee on Appropriations. It was proposed before the Appropriations Committee when the legislative bill was before it. It was considered in the House, and they had hearings upon it. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] appeared before the committee in behalf of it, and the proposed increase to $7,500 was voted on in the Appropriations Committee and was refused.

I think this is a very, very unwise way of increasing salaries. Salaries should be provided for in the legislative bill. The salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is provided for in that bill, which passed this body only yesterday.

I sincerely trust the amendment of the committee will not prevail.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to supplement my statement by reading part of a letter written by the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, under date of April 13, 1914, addressed to me. He says:

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the bill 4164—

That was a substantive bill to increase the salary of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs—

I am very heartily in favor of an increase in the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as proposed in that bill, and of the provision found in section 3 providing for the appointment of three men who shall do certain work—

And so forth. I need not read all the letter. Sufficient it is to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs has ordered reported to the Senate a substantive bill, independent of this provision, increasing the salary to $7,500 a year. The committee was almost unanimous in its expression of opinion that the salary should be increased; that the burden of work laid upon the official who performs the functions and duties of the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a great burden and a great duty.

I could lay before the Senate, if I thought it proper and best, a vast amount of information giving the detailed work that is required in these 150 reservations. Here is a commissioner who must keep in constant touch with over 149 reservations, I believe, or agencies, situated in various parts of the country. It requires a man of great executive ability faithfully to perform those duties.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Have the duties of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs increased lately?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, vastly in the last seven or eight years, and they are increasing from time to time. If the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had supposed they had really decreased, because we are giving up these reservations.

Mr. ASHURST. The very reverse is true. They have increased during the last decade to an enormous degree.

For instance, in the year 1902 77,000 letters were received by the Indian Office, which, to conduct its correspondence, had 132 employees; but in 1911, or nine years later, 209,000 letters were received, and there were 227 employees. In other words, the volume of correspondence has increased almost threefold, whereas the number of employees has not increased twofold.

Not only has the correspondence increased threefold, but the work itself has increased threefold. I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Utah to this fact. He knows it, of course, but I will make the observation that the Indian Office is getting away from the ration system. It is attempting in every place and at every proper opportunity to teach the Indian how to earn his subsistence himself, how to farm, how to breed cattle, how to use improved machinery; and I am within proper bounds when I say that the work of this department has increased threefold in 10 years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The circuit judges of the United States, who preside over the circuit courts of appeals, receive salaries of $7,000 per annum each. Does the Senator think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should receive a greater salary than one of those judges?

Mr. ASHURST. I should be very happy indeed to vote for a bill increasing the salaries of the judges of circuit courts and the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think it is one of the reproaches of our Government that the judges of the Supreme Court and of the circuit courts are paid such small salaries; but the fact that we do not, or seemingly are unable, to increase the salaries of the circuit judges is no reason why I or any other Senator should decline to increase the salary of an officer who, in our judgment, ought to have his salary increased.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I simply wish to suggest that the work of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has grown to such an extent that the commissioner not only devotes all his days but half his nights to the work. There is not a more devoted man in the public service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator wants to act properly and rightly in this matter, and I am going to call attention at this time to one of the great reasons why the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was not increased.

I have before me the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. I will commence right with the Interior Department. What do we find? The Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; the Commissioner of the Indian Office, $5,000; the Commissioner of the Pension Office, $5,000; the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000.

I want to say that $5,000 is the salary of the head of each of these bureaus in the departments of our Government. I recognize the fact that the present Indian Commissioner is a splendid official. He is attending to his business as well as any man, perhaps, could possibly attend to it. I have no criticism of him in any way; but I want the Senate to understand that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, drawing $5,000, has, I believe, more letters—aye, twice as many letters—pass over his table every day as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is an office the salary of which should be increased if the salary of the head of any bureau in this Government should be increased. The business has increased by leaps and bounds.

I want to say to the Senator that it would not be right for us to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and leave the Commissioner of the General Land Office in that same identical department at what it is.

Mr. President, I feel that so keenly that I can not let it pass. I would rather have an appropriation made direct in the general deficiency appropriation bill or in the sundry civil appropriation bill for whatever the Senate felt like they wanted to pay the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the exceedingly heavy work that he has had to perform this year. A thousand times better that, Mr. President, than here to add in an Indian appropriation bill an increase of salary, which of course means that hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the Interior Department shall have $7,500 and the head of every other bureau in the department shall have only $5,000. It is not right; and it should not be done.

It is for that purpose, Mr. President, that I intend to make a point of order against the amendment. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] desires before I make the point of order to submit some remarks and I shall withhold it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield the floor?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ought to have this increase. The Government of the United States has obtained the services of a man who in private life can earn from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. He has earned that sum in private life as a practicing attorney. He was solicited to take this position. He was not an office seeker. He was requested by the administration to take this office in order that he might improve its management. Since he has taken it he has worked from 12 to 15 hours a day. He is always at his desk at night. It is a uniform practice on his part not only to work during the day but to work at night as well, and he has made great improvements in the methods of the department.

Moreover, the suggestion was made to him by those who solicited him to take this position that doubtless Congress would be willing to recognize the extraordinary service which he could bring to the department, and he had some reason to believe therefore that his sacrifice would be appreciated.

I know, of course, there are many men seeking office who would regard it as a great opportunity to get a position of this kind and who are willing to make the sacrifices, too; but I think under all the circumstances and in view of the enormous property which he must supervise and which he ought to bring into some productive form he ought to be encouraged to stay and do this work.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that a short while ago the present commissioner was offered a position in another department of the Government at $7,500 a year, but his devotion to this particular work is such that he declined it.

Mr. OWEN. The property which is within the management of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is not only of very great value, amounting to over a thousand million dollars, but a large part of it is unproductive. If this property were made productive by proper management; if the Indians who, in the State of Washington, for instance, have large areas of timberlands were taught there as they have been taught in Wisconsin to develop their own timber and learn to be self-supporting and to use the opportunities they have under wise direction, they would make themselves thoroughly self-supporting, and they would take the tax off the Government which now will be found in this appropriation bill in various ways. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is endeavoring to accomplish that end.

I think that the amendment proposes a very small reward for him, and that he should be allowed a sufficient amount on which to live decently while he is performing this public labor.

I hope that at least the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] will prevail, and that, even if we do not increase it, as is proposed, it may be increased to $6,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think this is absolutely the wrong way. This same question was considered by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and they had hearings on it. We had it before the Committee on Appropriations of this body, and it was voted upon there after all the reasons for an increase had been given.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to observe that in the Committee on Appropriations the members of the committee have no familiarity with the administration of Indian affairs. We have not the opportunity of seeing the infinite number of details with which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has to deal. That committee simply passed upon the matter in that way after probably a hearing of 5 or 10 minutes or some such time. Really I do not think it is quite fair to the commissioner to use that as a precedent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say this to the Senator, and I suppose the other members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations will bear me out. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] was present when we had this matter under consideration. We went into it very thoroughly. All that could be said for it I believe was said.

Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I dislike to make the point of order against the proposed increase in the salary of Mr. Sells; I know what his work is; but this is not the proper way to legislate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah insists on his point of order, I should like to make a brief suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I withhold it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state to his colleague that the Chair would like to have him address himself briefly to the point of order on this proposition to increase of salary. This view has occurred to the Chair heretofore. If the salary was fixed by the statute creating the office, independent of an appropriation bill, it can not be changed by an item in an appropriation bill. If the salary now drawn by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs depends for its existence on an item in an appropriation bill similar to this, the question would be somewhat enlarged. In that case the Senate might fix the salary as it might see proper to do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me, I will state in addition to the suggestion which the Chair has made that the Committee on Indian Affairs has directed that a bill increasing the salary to $7,500 shall be reported. It would therefore seem to me that the point of order would not lie.

I wish, however, to make a brief statement with regard to the reasons for the increase. Ordinarily I do not believe in increasing salaries. The Senator from Arizona, the chairman in charge of the bill, the Senator from Oklahoma, and other Senators have presented very fully and forcibly the extent of the duties that are discharged by this officer, the large amount of property which he has control of, the more than 300,000 Indians in the United States under his jurisdiction, and the approximately 8,000 employees who are engaged in the service of the Government under the Indian Bureau. In view of all these circumstances and the further fact that we now have in the service an eminent gentleman who, so far as he has been able within the limited time which he has served the Government, has sought to reorganize it and has extended the activities of the bureau and vitalized it, I believe this appropriation should be made and the increase should be accorded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call particular attention to the wording of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair ask the Senator from Utah if he knows whether under a former statutory enactment the present salary exists, or was it fixed by an item in an appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The salary is fixed by statute at $5,000, and we appropriate that sum every year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the statute creating the office?

Mr. SMOOT. By the statute creating the office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that circumstance admitted by those who insist on the increase of salary? If so, it is easily disposed of, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I was also going to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment also says that $2,500 is hereby appropriated——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing difficult about the addition of $2,500, because that is to pay for services already rendered and is a mere private claim and is not admissible to this bill at all. The point of order raised by the Senator from Utah is sustained as to the whole item.

Mr. ASHURST. Although the point of order has been sustained, I wish to incorporate in the RECORD at this time an article written by M. K. Sniffen, secretary of the Indian Rights Association, entitled "A man and his opportunity," being a résumé of the work and duties and responsibilities of the Indian Commissioner.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A MAN AND HIS OPPORTUNITY.

(By M. K. Sniffen, secretary Indian Rights Association.)

We have frequently been asked for an opinion regarding the administration of Hon. Cato Sells, the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Heretofore we have stated to all such inquiries that we believed the outlook for improved conditions under his management was more hopeful than it had been for many years. Before making any public statement on the subject, however, we preferred to wait until Commissioner Sells had demonstrated his worth. He has been actively in charge of the Indian Bureau for nine months, and his administration has therefore passed the experimental stage. During that time we have had abundant opportunity to closely observe the man and his methods, and we feel that it is now possible for us to give a mature, unbiased review of Mr. Sells's stewardship as an answer to the question: "What do you think of the present commissioner"? Unfortunately, there has been much occasion to criticize the Indian Bureau's management in the past, and it is a satisfaction to praise where that is possible—to give credit to whom credit is due. It affords us peculiar pleasure to submit for the information of our members and friends the following sketch of Commissioner Sells's masterful work, and also to record our thanks to President Wilson and Secretary Lane for putting the "right man in the right place."

* * * * * * * *

When the present administration came into power on March 4, 1913, there was a feeling of deep concern by the friends of the red man as to the kind of man who would be selected for the post of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This feeling was further intensified by our investigation of the record of a number of those who were seeking "to land the job," for it developed that in this group the "undesirable class" was decidedly conspicuous and aggressive.

THE PROMISE.

On March 15, 1913, a large delegation of the executive committee of the Indian Rights Association was granted a most courteous hearing by President Wilson and Secretary Lane, of the Interior Department, when attention was called to the importance of selecting a commissioner who would command the respect of the entire country. Our committee was assured that the best man obtainable would be selected. President Wilson said he wanted for the place "a man of affairs, because he has millions to administer; a man of imagination, that he may have sympathy for the Indian; and, above all, a man with the fear of God in his heart."

Secretary Lane tersely expressed the same thought when he said he wanted a "big man" for the place, one to whom it "would not be a job, but an opportunity."

THE FULFILLMENT.

This interview took place in March, but it was not until June that the place was filled by the appointment of Hon. Cato Sells, of Cleburne, Tex. To indicate the care exercised by Secretary Lane in selecting the present commissioner, it is interesting to state that before Mr. Sells was appointed his record was thoroughly investigated from the time he was 20 years old; he was literally "weighed in the balance" and not found wanting.

Mr. Sells brought to his office a well-rounded equipment probably never possessed by any former commissioner—that of lawyer, business man, and agriculturist—fully qualifying him to handle the bureau's various ramifications which involve every phase of human life and necessarily draw upon such an equipment every day in the proper performance of the duties of the office.

First of all, he is "a man of affairs," having served as mayor of La Porte, Iowa, when he was but 22 years old; two terms as county attorney; and as United States attorney under President Cleveland. Although active and successful in his profession, he became deeply interested in stock raising and farming, and for years was a member of the board of trustees of the Iowa Agricultural College, Ames, Iowa. In 1907 he moved to Texas and was successful in the banking business. In that connection he took such an active interest in developing the resources of the State that he was a member of practically every important agricultural board in Texas.

As to the qualities of imagination and sympathy, they are evident from the broad and humane way in which Commissioner Sells has been grasping situations and developing plans for the benefit and advancement of the Indian in a material and moral way. He has shown that he has that other requirement specified by the President—"the fear of God in his heart"—by "hewing to the line," and adopting methods that will have a salutary and lasting effect.

As was well stated by some Washington correspondent in commenting on Mr. Sells's administration

"The job of Indian Commissioner with him is a business proposition. He answered an altruistic call when he took the position, for he had retired from active business and had planned to settle down in Texas, the State he has lived in ever since he left Iowa after a brilliant career as a United States attorney.

"Secretary Lane let it be known that he wanted a man of ability, not a job seeker; a man of red blood and purpose, not a weakling. He heard of Sells and his fight against pension grafters in the Middle West, and he found that Sells was indeed a regular fighting man, with ability, altruism, and that's how to-day Secretary Lane has a man on the job of Indian affairs 14 hours a day, and that's why a new era is dawning in Oklahoma and the other Indian States."

* * * * * * * *

Commissioner Sells entered upon the duties of his office with no preconceived notions. He announced no policies, but began a thorough inventory of his "plant," with its 6,000 employees, and a careful survey of the whole field.

One of the first things that impressed him was the great value to the Indians of their grazing tracts. The breaking up of the big ranges in Texas and other States has practically eliminated stock raising on an extensive scale. The best and largest tracts available for cattle and sheep are on the Indian reservation, from which the Indian has received but small returns. Heretofore those advantages have been leased at a small annual rental to white men, who have grown rich, while the owners either remained stationary or actually retrograded.

Commissioner Sells believed that these natural advantages should be used for the benefit of the Indian owners. Within 10 days after taking his office Commissioner Sells inaugurated a stock census. The result showed, as against magnificent opportunities, a very poor equipment—bulls and stallions of low grade and too old for use. The sheep situation was similar. Useless pony stallions by the thousand were grazing on the ranges and bringing no return to the Indians.

The first real work of Commissioner Sells in this connection was to reduce the old "he stuff," and to purchase a sufficient number of good stallions, bulls, and rams to secure the best result with the "she stuff," both in the case of tribal and individual ownership; in short, to build up the Indian stock wherever money was available, for such purposes. For the Crow Reservation alone $450,000 has been expended for 9,250 white-faced Hereford heifers, bulls, and steers.

As a result of this plan there is now going on a process of upbuilding and equalizing the Indian stock and eliminating that which is bringing no return. As rapidly as circumstances will permit, the various reservation ranges will be stocked to the maximum limit with Indian cattle. If this can be done, not only will thousands of red men soon be in the industrious and self-supporting class, but they will be an important factor in helping to avert a meat famine, threatened by the white man's diminishing herds.

Where grazing leases are now made to white men, they are always on a competitive basis and for short terms. A revocable clause is part of the lease, to avoid overstocking the ranges and also to provide for the natural increase of the Indian herds. This plan under proper management should not take many years to make the Indian the American cattle king.

* * * * * * * *

Much is being planned for the Indians' industrial development by Commissioner Sells along practical lines. The value and necessity for "reimbursable funds" have been recognized in the past, but the amount heretofore granted by Congress (never exceeding $100,000 per annum) has been wholly insufficient. Commissioner Sells, with his broad experience in scientific agriculture and stock raising, believes in doing things in a way that will secure definite results, and he asked Congress for a reimbursable fund of $900,000 to use in cases where the Indians have no tribal money that can be applied for their benefit.

There has undoubtedly been in the past an indefensible, one-sided, unbusinesslike conception of the Indians' needs in various quarters. Extensive and expensive irrigation systems have been built on reservations, the Indians given individual tracts of land, and then left absolutely without any means for developing them. An irrigation system for the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., was authorized by Congress at a cost of $6,000,000 to be charged against these Indians. As their tribal property is only valued at $5,000,000, they will, under the scheme, be in debt to the Government for $1,000,000. The people mostly to be benefited by this are white men, who are to be allowed 15 years in which to pay for the improvement. By this plan their lands are brought under an irrigation system at the Indians' expense. Meanwhile, the Indian is without any funds with which to develop his allotment and make beneficial use of the water in time to escape the forfeiture provision.

The Uintah and Ouray Reservation in Utah was also brought under a reclamation project. It is 80 miles from a railroad. The Indians were placed on raw land with no equipment for breaking and improving it, but under obligation to get the water on their individual holdings within a few years or forfeit their water rights. This is expecting something that no white man could do under similar circumstances. Yet some people wonder why the Indian does not progress more rapidly toward self-support.

These instances are cited to show some of the situations with which the commissioner is dealing in an effort to hold for the Indian what he has, and also to indicate why a large reimbursable fund is absolutely necessary if the best results are to be accomplished. By its judicious use Commissioner Sells could help such people to secure farming implements, horses, and cattle, so necessary for agriculture; to build up comfortable and sanitary homes; to utilize their own timber and other resources which heretofore has been impossible.

Commissioner Sells is determined to bring about a radical and speedy change in the present unsatisfactory agricultural, stock, and industrial conditions generally existing throughout the Indian country. Instructions have been sent to all reservations that "every Indian Service farmer shall give his time to actual farming and under no circumstances shall he continue, as so generally has been done, making the office work the first consideration and the promoting of the farm work of the Indians secondary. These things must be reversed." Superintendents are also directed to devote the major part of their time to field work, in order that they may come in direct contact with the Indians and know actual conditions and stimulate individual effort. Heretofore the majority of reservation superintendents have devoted three-fourths or more of their time to office duties, much of which can be performed by clerks. The commissioner contends that "reservation employees should know the Indians and know them well, understand their condition, and substantially aid them in their forward march toward self-support and equipment for citizenship."

Another important question calling for vigorous attention on the part of Commissioner Sells was the probate situation in Oklahoma. This is summarized in a statement made by the commissioner to the Denver Times, in part as follows:

"The Indian children of Oklahoma are the richest average children in the United States; however, it is a lamentable fact that they have less statutory protection there than in any other State. In each of the 40 counties in eastern Oklahoma there are now pending from 800 to 1,500 probate estates, about 85 per cent of which are Indian children's estates.

"I have recently discovered that its costs about 3 per cent to settle a white child's estate and that it costs more than 20 per cent to settle the estate of an Indian boy or girl. This is the result of guardians having been appointed without regard to their equipment and the acceptance of bondsmen many times wholly insolvent.

"Enormous fees have been charged by attorneys and unconscionable fees by guardians, together with indefensible expenditures of their funds, which has frequently resulted in the dissipation of their entire property.

"It is not an uncommon thing when an Indian child reaches his majority to find that his guardian has absconded and that his bondsmen are wholly financially irresponsible. It is my determined intention to reform this indefensible condition, and to this end I have recently appointed a number of probate attorneys who will give their whole time under my direction to this work. I am now submitting a number of cases to the grand juries in Oklahoma looking toward the indictment and criminal prosecution of those who have embezzled funds.

"Last week we secured a ruling from one of the courts of Oklahoma, holding a guardian and his bondsmen responsible where the Indian children's lands have been sold for a grossly inadequate consideration. It is my great desire to cooperate with the State authorities, and particularly with the county judges, in effecting these results, and I have every reason to believe that this cooperation will be perfectly arranged and carried out."

Mr. Sells visited Oklahoma for a personal conference on this subject with the tribal attorneys, probate attorneys, field clerks, and county judges. In the past there was always a feeling of antagonism between the Oklahoma people and the Washington authorities. It was so intense that cooperation was practically impossible. As a result of the commissioner's trip a spirit of cooperation was developed, and there is now a disposition on the part of Oklahomans to accept the attitude of the Government and a desire to help reform conditions. As a result of these conferences a set of uniform rules governing probate cases was adopted by the county judges that are more complete than any statute of the United States. The outlook is very promising for a "clean up" and an elevation of the Oklahoma standard and an improvement in conditions that will be an everlasting credit to the administration and gratifying to everyone interested in Indian affairs. A complete reorganization has been effected, a good system adopted, and hearty cooperation of the county judges with the Federal Government has been established. Incidentally it is interesting to note that since Commissioner Sells visited Oklahoma there have been several convictions and sentences to the penitentiary for those charged with robbing the Indian minor children.

Before his trip to Oklahoma Commissioner Sells asked Congress for $50,000 for probate attorneys. Upon his return to Washington he appeared before the Indian Committee of the House and asked for more money. The amount was increased to $85,000 for this purpose—an indication of the forceful and convincing manner in which the commissioner presents to the Congress the needs of his bureau and the confidence his statements inspire.

The firmness and determination of Commissioner Sells to do things on business principles is indicated in his handling the oil situation in Oklahoma, where many leases had been made covering Indian lands. Heretofore the lessees had been allowed to do practically as they pleased; departmental regulations were ignored, which resulted in an enormous waste of gas. One company which held a lease on a Creek Indian allotment, had been warned of its violation of these regulations, but that produced no effect. Commissioner Sells thereupon imposed a fine of $1,000 on this company, and indicated very forcibly that failure on the part of others to respect their agreements would invite a cancellation of their leases.

Commissioner Sells's reorganization of the Indian Bureau has been the work of a genius. When he took charge it was badly torn by faction and strife. The personal ambition of a few people had produced a demoralized and chaotic condition, which often resulted in the bureau's real purpose—the welfare of the Indian—being lost sight of. The effect of this was not confined to Washington, but had spread throughout the field service. It was truly a "house divided against itself." By the use of tact and judgment, Mr. Sells has developed in the bureau a spirit of loyalty, harmony, and hearty cooperation that has not existed for a long time, if ever before. The employees were literally inspired by the magnetic personality of their chief; his activity and enthusiasm were contagious, and the responsiveness in efficiency has been little short of marvelous. The commissioner has aimed to so adjust matters that there would be no round pegs in square holes, and to assign the clerks to work that was not only congenial but to which they were adapted. As a result, the work is now nearer up to date than at any time in the bureau's history. This has been brought about by increased efficiency, by system, and the loyalty of the subordinates who willingly worked nights as well as days in keeping with the pace set by Mr. Sells. It is unreasonable, however, to expect them to do this indefinitely, and additional clerical help should be provided by Congress.

One noticeable improvement is in handling what are known as individual Indian moneys. Formerly when a request for authority to draw on these funds came in from the field, weeks and months elapsed before it was acted upon. Now, in most cases, these requests are disposed of the same day they reach the bureau, and reach the reservations within a week or 10 days after the original mailing date.

Another important advance step is shown in the reorganization of the inspection force. Commissioner Sells secured for his chief inspector Mr. E. B. Linnen, formerly attached to the office of the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Linnen's long and honorable record for honesty and efficiency in the Government service is of itself a guaranty that hereafter the bureau's inspection force will not be "weak in the head, weak eyed, and hard of hearing." The commissioner desires to substantially strengthen his inspection force by the appointment of a few specially equipped, high-grade, and dependable confidential men who can be relied upon to help in the work of "cleaning up" the service—men who will not be handicapped by previous personal friendship for the officials to be investigated. The Treasury and other departments have a secret-service corps, but nowhere is it more needed than in the Indian Service. It is believed that in the near future numerous changes will be made in the personnel of the service, which will greatly improve its efficiency.

In selecting Mr. E. B. Meritt as assistant commissioner Mr. Sells secured a man of honesty, efficiency, experience, and courage. Mr. Meritt's record in the Indian Bureau proves that he is thoroughly dependable; his fearless and practically single-handed fight to prevent a corporation from securing the San Carlos Dam site will long be remembered. The commissioner can leave his office, when occasion requires it, with no fear that his confidence will be abused, and with the assurance that his plans will be loyally and wisely adhered to by Mr. Meritt.

Commissioner Sells does not regard his post as a job, but an opportunity to help a race of over 300,000, whose property interests are valued at $900,000,000; and he has been seeking in every possible way to imbue his subordinates with the same thought—to emphasize the human side of the bureau's work. He believes in getting his workers together for conference as a means of promoting a clear understanding and unity of effort. He called into Washington every supervisor in the service and met with them twice a day for one week. They returned to their respective posts with new hope and ambition to accomplish things; to spread the spirit of cooperation throughout the entire field.

Commissioner Sells spent two days at Denver in conference with the liquor-suppression staff to organize a systematic procedure to secure the best results. The good effect of these personal relations with his subordinates are apparent in every direction.

Mr. Sells is a keen, intelligent listener, and has but little to say for publication. He believes in doing things rather than talking about them, and his actions tell their own story. When he does talk on a public occasion his remarks are forceful and direct, with a ring of sincerity about them. At the conference of Indian supervisors held recently in Washington Mr. Sells made an address, from which the following is taken:

"I believe that the greatest present menace to the American Indian is whisky. It does more to destroy his constitution and invite the ravages of disease than anything else. It does more to demoralize him as a man and frequently as a woman. It does more to make him an easy prey to the unscrupulous than everything else combined. If I say nothing more to you to-night that leaves an impression, let it be this one thought: Let us save the American Indian from the curse of whisky.

"We have a force of men engaged in the suppression of the liquor traffic. That is their special business. But it is my business, and it is your business, to do everything we can, without injecting ourselves offensively into the work of others or assuming a duty that is not properly ours, to create an atmosphere and suggest conditions that will be helpful in this respect, and, above all, to be a personal object lesson, inviting the Indian to banish liquor, rather than to be guilty of anything that may cause him to look upon one of us as a justification for doing that which leads him to the destruction caused by the use of whisky.

"There is nothing that could induce me, since I have taken the oath of office as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to touch a single drop of any sort of intoxicating liquor, and this regardless of my attitude on the prohibition question.

"As a matter of good faith to our treaty relationships, to legislative enactments, to the Congress, which appropriates $100,000 a year for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians, we should do everything reasonably within our power to justify this appropriation and insure the best results obtainable. This accomplished, we have laid a substantial foundation for all of our work in solving the Indian problem, and made a long step forward looking toward their equipment for the responsibilities of citizenship."

The nearest approach of Commissioner Sells to announcing any policy is given at the close of his first annual report, in which he says:

"I am emphasizing in every possible way the industrial education of the Indian pupils and the industrial development of the Indian population generally, and every effort is being made to improve the efficiency of the employees of the Indian Service, in order to accomplish more successfully the work in hand.

"I am also emphasizing the need of and doing everything possible to obtain for the Indians more sanitary homes, more adequate school facilities for the Indian children, to supply sick Indians with medical attention, and to take precautionary methods to prevent disease, to adjust more equitably the cost of irrigation projects constructed with reimbursable funds, to make larger use of the timber resources of the Indians for their industrial and social advancement, to take advantage of the extensive grazing land of the Indians and to build up tribal herds, as well as to promote among the individual Indians a large, more profitable cattle, sheep, and horse industry, and to utilize in every practicable way the resources of the Indians, both tribal and individual, in promoting and completing their civilization and economic independence.

"It is my fixed purpose to bring about the speedy individualizing of the Indians, and to this end I shall devote my best efforts."

That Secretary Lane found the man to whom the commissionership would be an opportunity and not a job is clear from Mr. Sells's refusal to accept an important and more lucrative post in another branch of the Government service. Commenting on this, the New Republic said:

"Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has the most difficult, annoying, nerve-racking, heart-eating job in the United States. He did not apply for the job or any other job. He was 'drafted' into the service as a public duty. He gets a salary of $5,000 per year.

"Recently the Interstate Commerce Commission, in quest of a high-grade man to put at the head of the work of making a physical valuation of the railways of the United States, offered the post to Mr. Sells at a salary of $7,500, a comparatively easy and comfortable position.

"Did this offer of comparative ease and $2,500 addition to the salary attract Mr. Sells? Not a bit. Three hundred thousand Indians were looking to him to relieve them from the results of a hideous maladministration and from a network of accumulated abuses. He had entered upon the task; it had taken a grip upon his heart and life that no offer of ease or increased salary could shake.

"And the squeals and howls of rage and pain that are going up from grafters and thieves around Indian reservations indicate that there is 'something doing.'

"Long live Cato Sells, and may he have the physical strength to carry out his program—a program that wrecked the health of two commissioners who honestly undertook the task."

It is understood that when Mr. Sells declined the first tender of this position a second offer was made with materially increased salary. His sense of duty and an appreciation of his opportunity were stronger than the selfish thought of material gain.

As a result of Mr. Sells's brief tenure of office, the standard of efficiency and honesty has been raised throughout the Indian Service, both in Washington and in the field. The work he has set out to do, however, is by no means completed. The big things, those demanding urgent consideration, are being disposed of as quickly as possible. When they are well under way other matters will, we believe, receive proper attention. What has been thus far done is a good indication of what may be expected in a general cleaning up of every part of the Indian Service.

It should not be overlooked, however, that Commissioner Sells's firm determination to preserve the vast resources of the Indian in land, timber, coal, and oil must sooner or later develop great disappointment and bitter opposition from selfish interests; and it is highly important that the true friends of an honest and efficient administration shall strongly support him in his patriotic and fearless course.

Our observation indicates that there has been developed a general feeling of confidence in Mr. Sells's ability, integrity, and courage on the part of the public and the press; and Congress, for the first time within our knowledge of Indian affairs, seems to be in sympathy with the commissioner and willing to grant the necessary appropriations to carry on the work.

Commissioner Sells has established a new mark in Indian administration, and his influence for good can never be eradicated. He has elevated the service to a plane from which he would not recede if he could, and from which he could not recede if he would. He has set the pace, and whoever may follow him—in the far distant future, we hope—will of necessity be compelled to live up to those established ideals or suffer by comparison.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator to approve the statement of the Senator from Utah that the salary now allowed was in point of fact fixed in the act creating the office?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not had access to the books.

Mr. ROBINSON. My recollection is that the act creating the office fixed the salary at $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will turn to the act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is disposed of on the statement of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, while the Chair has disposed of this question, I feel constrained to say that I hope the Committee on Appropriations will at the proper time take up the matter. I do not believe in discussing salaries when we compare one office with another. It is a limitation upon discussion. But I do believe that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should receive not less than $6,000 a year at least. The work has grown immensely in proportion as we eliminate the tribal relations and annuities and take up the personal equation of the individual Indian. That makes an immense amount of work, an immense amount of responsibility, and I do not believe the present salary is large enough. I hope the committee will at the proper time take up the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the bill. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 9, to insert:

That $1,500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended for the relief and for clearing the title to the lands owned or possessed by the Chettimanchi Band of Indians of Louisiana, and for the purchase of such lands as may be necessary to put them on a self-supporting basis: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, require that the legal title to all property purchased, or the title to which is to be cleared, with the funds hereby appropriated shall be in the name of the United States, for the use and benefit of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 19, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, to M. L. Mott, the sum of $472.22 for services rendered the Creek Nation from January 15 to February 18, 1914, inclusive, and $210.20 as reimbursement for actual expenses incurred in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease for mining, grazing, and agricultural purposes unallotted lands within Indian reservations established by act of Congress or Executive order in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions and under such regulations as he may prescribe, and may expend the proceeds received in the purchase of live stock for the benefit of the tribe occupying the reservation leased, or for such other industrial or beneficial purposes, not inconsistent with existing law or treaty provisions, as the Secretary of the Interior may direct: Provided, That no grazing lease shall be for a period to exceed 5 years and no agricultural or mining lease for a period to exceed 10 years: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Nation of Indians: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress on the first Monday of each December a detailed report of his action hereunder.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, we have in the general law a provision, I think passed in the early nineties, providing for the leasing for mining and other purposes of lands which the Indians have bought and paid for. That statute received a pretty broad construction. It was held under it that it not only applied to lands such as those of some of the Five Civilized Tribes, which actually had been bought and paid for with money, but that it applied to treaty lands, and I think it was held to apply to lands which had been set aside by Congress as well.

But however that may be, the operations of the department under that statute led to a good deal of scandal. I remember that in my own State the Uintah Reservation then was unopened, and the Secretary of the Interior granted to certain individuals a sort of roving commission to go out there and discover mines and then lease them. One set of individuals was incorporated under the name of the Raven Mining Co. and another under the name of the Florence Mining Co. They located some lands and obtained leases to them and began to operate them. They were, by reason of their close connection with the Indians, able to prevent the opening of that reservation for a great many years. Time and time again we came to Congress in an effort to secure the opening of that reservation, and we found ourselves always blocked by the attitude of the Indians, who had been influenced by these mining operators; and it was not until 1892 or 1893, I think—I was in the House at the time—that we finally succeeded in opening the reservation. Then in order to open the reservation we had to concede some rights to these mining operators which I always felt we ought not to have conceded.

I think the effect of this amendment, if it extends the operations of that law, will be in the same direction. I think these reservations ought to be opened up to settlement just as rapidly as possible; that those of them which contain lands that are suitable for cultivation ought to be settled upon and cultivated, and the lands should be allotted to the Indians and the tribal system and the reservation system and the ration system broken up and ended forever. We are never going to make responsible individuals of the Indians until that is done.

This makes the Indian a sort of a landlord, with some white men engaged in mining and in raising cattle as his tenants. I think it is a bad system. I think the Indian is just as incapable of development under that kind of a system as is the white man. He ought to be put upon his own responsibility as an individual just as soon as possible and compelled as rapidly as possible to work out his own salvation, as the white man is compelled to do.

All this sort of legislation tends to perpetuate the reservation system, it tends to perpetuate the tribal system and the ration system. Every time my attention has been called to it I have opposed amendments of this kind. I think it is open to the point of order that it is general legislation, and I shall make that point.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator withhold the point of order for a brief statement?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be very glad to hear what the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the committee, has to say.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I presume that out of frankness, which is common and proper here, I am bound to confess that the point of order is well taken as far as I know.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] states, however, that he believes the effect of the legislation would be to perpetuate in some way the ration system. The Senator points out an abuse that he wishes to eliminate, and very properly so, but in the opinion of the committee this legislation would tend to remove the abuses against which the learned Senator from Utah has inveighed.

For this reason, Mr. President, it must be obvious to Senators that from time to time it is becoming more difficult to open reservations for reasons that I need not go into at this time. The pressure upon western Senators by their constituents is great for the opening of Indian reservations. Western Senators are only human and are naturally and properly impressed, and so bills are introduced and passed to open Indian reservations. On many of the Indian reservations there are extensive and valuable deposits of the base metals, the rare metals, and the precious metals that during our lifetime, in all probability, will not be worked by the Indians themselves.

Senators have spoken eloquently of the propriety and advisability of teaching the Indian to become self-supporting. It was the intention of the committee and the belief of the department that if under certain safeguards and proper regulations certain mining properties in Indian reservations could be leased a royalty might be obtained and money thereby derived which would then be at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior, which he could use at his discretion, as he saw fit, to purchase cattle for the Indians, to teach them how to breed them, how to use machinery, how to farm, how to become self-supporting; and that would, in a large measure, tend to reduce the gratuitous appropriations which we make here in Congress.

Speaking for myself, I regret that the point of order has been made. I know, however, that the Senator who has made it has in view the same purpose which the committee has—the improvement of the condition of the Indians; but I believe that the point of order, if sustained, will ultimately result in no good to the Indian, but to his injury.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] made the point of order, and I should like him to recall it, if certain amendments can be inserted in this measure.

Take the Apache Indian Reservation in Arizona, for instance. The Apache has—I will not venture to say how much—land that is used for grazing purposes. The Indians get the benefit from that use, and the persons grazing the land get the benefit from it, especially so when the drought years come, and water is scarcer almost everywhere else than it is on the Indian reservation. It adds to the income of the Indians to the extent of whatever is paid.

I am, however, heartily opposed to the word "mining" being in the provision, and I would myself make the point of order against it rather than see it left in the bill. I contend—and I shall subsequently address the Senate at greater length on the matter when we have no appropriation bill before us—that in an Executive-order reservation the right of the miner to pursue his calling is just as open as on any other piece of public land. I do not want his right foreclosed by the suggestion of the right of the department to lease mining lands within an Executive-order reservation. In all Indian reservations where the title does not pass to the Indian by act of Congress the miner's right to the discovery of metal in lands belonging to the United States still remains. Those lands have never passed from under the acts originally dedicating them and holding them for the people. They differ somewhat from other lands, and in a measure are like the crown lands of other countries.

Therefore this provision in the bill giving the right to lease mining lands in an Indian reservation especially applies in those cases where the Indians have all the agricultural lands they need. It has been the habit in former administrations to extend these reservations without sense or reason into a mining country and then to put the mines desired to be developed within an Indian reservation, in order that they may place a tax, an impost, a duty, and a burden upon them. The same thing now is going on in the Parker Indian Reservation. They have extended it for miles and miles away from any possible farming land. They have got land enough to give four times the number of Indians the usual allotment of such lands. They have extended the reservation clear into the mountains over the mining claims that have been there since 1865—they have been there always, I presume—but since 1865, at least, they have been worked. Those miners have been turned away by a reservation newly created by an Executive order including their property. They can not proceed with their work; they can not sell their claims; they can do nothing with them. When you add to the rights of the Secretary of the Interior the right to lease mining lands in an Executive order reservation, you simply are dedicating land within the Indian reservation to everlasting silence, for nobody is going to work mines under any such provision or any such limitation as to time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I heard only a part of the speech of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] with relation to the benefit which the Indians would receive from such a leasing clause as that in the bill; but I want to call his attention to the fact that we have tried the leasing system in the United States with lead mines, and that the records show there was four times as much expended by the Government in supervision, for agents, and for officers to administer that system as was collected by reason of royalties upon the lead extracted from the mines, and the royalties were placed, I think, at one-eighth of the amount of the product.

Not only has that been the experience of the United States in that instance, but there has been an experience in reference to a policy which is right now in operation, which seems to me ought to convince anyone of its futility. We have what is called a forest-reserve system. Under that system there has been established the leasing, practically, of those lands by the imposition of what is called a grazing tax. That has been going on for 20 years. In addition to that, in all those reserves there has been sales of timber, and the proceeds have been put into the fund; yet, notwithstanding that fact, every year there is a deficit in the fund; every year the Congress of the United States has to appropriate millions of dollars in order to sustain the forestry system. How long is that going to continue? Are not those the best illustrations that a royalty system is unwise and inadvisable with relation to either mines or to grazing?

I want to call attention to the forestry figures for the year 1913, for I happened to come across them the other day. The amount received for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, from the sale of timber was $1,341,337.63; from grazing, $1,007,739.51; and from special uses, $118,012.73; making a total of $2,467,090.07. The total amount expended for the service was $5,442,000; and this year, in the appropriation bill which passed only a short time ago, I noticed that there was carried $5,558,256 for the Forestry Service. The difficulty in ever making the system pay arises from the fact that to increase the royalty or tax exacts from the people of the Rocky Mountain States additional burdens, which the people of the States of the East never paid, and violates the provision of the enabling act of each State, which reads that "the State, when formed, shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever."

Should not that teach us that we can not make a system of leasing pay? We know that the leasing system in the case of the lead mines of Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Arkansas was tested for 40 years, and Senator Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, made speech after speech in this body showing that the leasing system was very obnoxious to the people of his State and that it did not pay, but it took him nearly 25 years of his political career to get that law repealed.

I want to call attention to the fact that the people of the West who live in or near forest reserves—and it will be so as to people who live under a leasing system—do not regard the inspectors, the agents, and the foresters who come around as their friends. There is a natural antagonism between an agent or a landlord and a tenant. There always has been antagonistic feeling between them, and in a case where the Government is the landlord you will find that the antagonism between the tenants and those who administer the estates will be even greater than it is between private individuals. Why? Because the Government is more exacting than a private landlord. The agent of the Government will not waive provisions of the lease; he will be afraid of criticism upon the part of either some enemy to the party in power or to the bureau which has the matter in charge, and, consequently, he will refuse to waive the provisions of the lease; whereas a private owner is not subject to criticism; he can do anything that he desires with his own land; he can waive a provision without any impropriety whatever being suggested. Therefore you will find that the exactions upon the part of the Government are a great deal more severe than the exactions upon the part of private individuals. Difficulties have existed in all countries between landlords and tenants. The one which has existed in Ireland, it seems to me, ought to teach people that the relation of landlord and tenant is not desirable, and it is even worse as between the Government and tenants.

Mr. President, we have continually had difficulties in the western country on account of the various policies of the administrations with respect to forest reserves. The sentiment in those States as voiced by declarations in party platforms has been almost unanimous against a leasing system. I want to read you a provision that was contained in the Colorado State Democratic platform in 1912 with respect to a leasing system. It says:

> We denounce the policy of the Republican administration which, having retarded our development, now proposes to withdraw all the remaining agricultural, grazing, and mineral public lands from all forms of entry, with the expressed determination of imposing upon the West a permanent bureaucratic rule and Federal leasing system of all the Government resources within our borders and thereby disastrously retarding the development of our State and depriving our Commonwealth of its just and constitutional rights.

Not only that, but the Republican Party adopted a clause in its State platform which denounced the Government's policy with respect to forest reserves and the leasing system.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand that the Senator is using a quotation from the Democratic platform as an argument for the adoption or against the adoption of a measure?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am quoting the platform as an expression of the sentiment of the people out there, and I have no doubt that that is the sentiment which prevails there.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, was that plank put in inadvertently or purposely?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it was put in purposely, because it has been adopted by four or five successive conventions and it is expressed in clear language.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that that plank ought to be carried out ungrudgingly or grudgingly?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, it depends upon what is the character of the plank. The Senator must remember that the one to which he refers had some other clauses in it, which were to the effect—but there is no use going into a question which we have been discussing here so long. I am trying to show——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I understand that that is one of the planks which the Senator thinks ought to be obeyed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are no contradictory provisions in this platform, none whatever; there is nothing here that indicates that there was any different sentiment in the Democratic Party or in the Republican Party, because that party adopted a similar plank, and I have no doubt that in other Western States there are contained in Republican Party platforms declarations against a leasing system.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, am I to understand, then, that that is one of the planks that is not contradicted by any of the others?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not contradicted in the slightest by any of the others.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator whether that was a State platform or a national platform?

Mr. SHAFROTH. A State platform.

Mr. NORRIS. Of Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. President, I want to put into the RECORD, without reading, a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, which was approved by the governor of that State on March 8, 1913, and which expresses the views of that legislature with respect to the legislation as to the public domain contemplated at that time, and which is still being pressed in the various committees of Congress. I will not read it, because it is somewhat lengthy, but I should like to have it go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, permission is granted. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE JOINT MEMORIAL NO. 5, PASSED BY THE NINETEENTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF COLORADO.

PUBLIC DOMAIN.

To Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President United States of America, and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represents that under the present Federal policy of control of the public domain the following conditions obtain:

1. The people of Colorado are in favor of conservation in the meaning of prevention of waste and monopoly, but are unalterably opposed to it in the definition of preserving our lands and resources in their present state for future generations.

We agree that these natural resources belong to all the people, but this ownership is not now different from what it always has been, namely, subject to the right of the citizen to acquire the same under liberal laws to the extent necessary to satisfactory settlement and the building of permanent homes.

2. It has been charged that the Western States have failed in the past to do their duty in the conservation of these resources, but those who make these charges utterly fail to consider that any unlawful acquisition or waste was committed under Federal laws and on public lands, and that the States, having no control, were powerless to prevent it. They also fail to recognize the fact that the amount of lands unlawfully acquired was a mere trifle compared with that lawfully acquired by bona fide settlers and others.

3. The older States have had, and still have, the benefits arising from private acquisition of all the public lands within their boundaries, receiving revenue therefrom through taxation and otherwise, and it is therefore a great injustice that they should now seek to impose upon the Western States obstructions and burdens with which they themselves did not have to contend.

4. We deny that it is right or advisable for the Federal Government to retain the title to and lease the public lands for any purpose, as the history of the country shows that in 1807 Congress authorized the War Department to lease the lead mines in the territory afterwards embraced in the States of Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, reserving to the United States a royalty of one-sixth of the product.

This system was vigorously opposed by the residents of the region involved from the very beginning, and after a few years trial the Missouri Legislature and the governor of Illinois protested against it. Presidents Polk and Fillmore urged its abandonment. The Secretary of War condemned it, saying that the benefit to the Government bore "no just proportion to the injury done to the country, first by retarding the settlement of the country, and second by the demoralizing influence of the system."

Year after year congressional Committees on Public Lands reported against it. One of these reports concluded as follows:

"When the United States accepted the cession of the Northwestern Territory the acceptance was on the express condition and under a pledge to form it into distinct republican States, and to admit them as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of freedom, sovereignty, and independence as the other States. This pledge, your committee believes, would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface into States and giving them names, but it includes a pledge to sell the lands, so that they may be settled and thus form States. No other mode of disposing of them can be regarded as a compliance with that pledge."

5. For nearly 40 years this controversy was waged with increasing intensity until 1846, when an act was passed directing the sale of these lands.

This condemned and discarded policy is now sought to be resurrected, and in pursuance thereof, there have been withdrawn forest, coal, oil, phosphate, and power-site lands, aggregating in Colorado over 21,000,000 acres, equal to 33 per cent of the total area of the State; together with similar amounts in other Western States, so that, in all, the area thus withdrawn is greater than the combined area of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, both Virginias, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois, and thus nearly 300,000,000 acres are now and have been for several years practically out of reach of individual enterprise or taxation for the support of State government. This obstructive policy is a departure from the policy of the past 50 years and in violation of the rights of these States, as provided in their enabling acts admitting them into the Union, their constitutions and the fundamental principles on which the Union of the States is predicated.

The idea that the leasing of the forests and other public lands for grazing purposes to stockmen, reserving to the settler and miner a right to enter them, will give the latter adequate protection is a fallacy, for the reason that it is obvious that such entries will necessarily interfere with the proper handling of stock. Where a stockman has 1,000 acres or more under such a lease, and a homesteader should undertake to enter 160 or 320 acres of the best of it, it is a certainty that the stockman would in every way not positively unlawful discourage the settler, unless we credit the stockman with less than ordinary sense of self-protection. And it is equally certain that he would succeed in preventing the entry, even if he had to buy the settler off.

The inevitable result of such leases will be to substantially end homesteading and mining on the public lands.

6. We assert that the States are vested with the right to control the waters within their respective borders—subject only to the right of the Federal Government to protect navigation on those streams that are navigable—to dispose of them to those who will use them for beneficial purposes, and that all returns therefrom, direct or indirect, justly belong to the States and not to the Federal Government.

7. Reclamation of arid lands, when undertaken by the United States Government, should in all cases recognize the rights of the States to control the waters within their borders, and should also recognize the equitable rights of its water users and other competitive projects and those of private enterprises.

These projects and enterprises should not be made by officers of the Reclamation Service an excuse for the refusal to approve of rights of way and occupancy of lands under private irrigation projects; such delays seriously obstruct private enterprises and the development and improvement of lands belonging to the States, and we ask that any such refusals be revoked.

We further ask that the Reclamation Service take immediate steps looking toward the early completion of all projects now under way within this State, in order that early settlement under these projects may take place.

8. The rapid descent and general character of mountain streams gives such endless opportunities for water plants that any monopoly of the same is physically impossible. Indeed, the idea is growing rapidly that the small power plant is the coming one. When water has served its purpose for one power plant it continues its descent. It is not consumed nor does it vanish. Its volume is as great after as before, and therefore but a little lower down in the mountains another power plant may be constructed, and so on, while the stream shall last.

These delays have seriously obstructed not only these private projects, but have also interfered with the irrigation and improvement of several hundred thousand acres of land belonging to the State of Colorado and granted under the laws of the United States for the purpose of improvement and sale by the State.

We ask that these unlawful refusals be promptly revoked and further delays forbidden.

9. We recognize that some good has been accomplished by the Forest Service, yet at the same time its cost has been many times greater than its benefits. It has materially hindered the settlement and development of the country, chiefly because of the hard and fast rules made at Washington by chiefs unfamiliar with actual conditions and administered by subordinates, many of whom are equally unfamiliar with such conditions.

As to the scientific forestry promised, it is only necessary to refer to the reports of the Forester to show that his management in many respects is most unscientific. His reports show that billions of feet of timber in the natural forests are overripe, decaying and decayed, and are an actual fire menace to the remainder, and ought to be cut. Yet the high prices he asks and the rules and regulations enforced are greatly restricting sales and cutting.

We urge that a committee, congressional or otherwise, be immediately appointed to visit Colorado and investigate the conditions referred to above and report on the same. It seems necessary to have the committee pursue its investigation on the ground, as few of those who suffer by the methods in force would be able to advance the expenses of a trip to Washington. Besides, an actual view of many of these things will disclose features which it would be difficult to make clear by testimony.

10. An unjust discrimination is made between grazing and other agricultural lands. The major portion of this State is composed of what is termed grazing lands, and grass is the greatest agricultural crop known and the most indispensable. All lands at present chiefly valuable for grazing should be as freely open to entry as are "farm" lands, but in sufficient quantities to support families. More than three-fourths of our present cultivated area was originally located as pasture, and it was largely through this privilege that our present cultivated area was developed.

There is hardly an acre of grazing land on the plains that will not ultimately become agricultural lands with the development of storage of water and the economical use thereof.

11. Nearly all of our metalliferous lands have been included in the forest reserves, since which time not a single important mining camp has been opened. The unwarranted interference by the Forest Service is largely responsible for the falling off of millions of dollars in the annual metal output. The man who is willing to put his labor and money into the development of a mining claim is the person best fitted to classify the land, and should be permitted to acquire it.

We venture the assurance that if 40 years ago the forest reserves had been established, neither Leadville nor Cripple Creek nor a score of other mining camps would have been discovered or developed.

Although our lands are of great variety, they are open to entry for but few purposes and in unsuited quantities. For instance, a piece of land can not be taken merely for a home.

12. In Territorial days Congress gave us the water of our natural streams and confirmed that right in the acceptance of our State constitution. Certain Federal bureaus are trying to take away that right by denying rights of way over the public domain. The contention of Federal authority, as in the case of the Engle Dam, for the first storage of water at the lower end of the stream instead of near the source of supply, would prevent the repeated use of water for power and irrigation upstream, would uselessly deprive large areas of development, and would therefore be contrary to the principle of "the best use," as demonstrated by the experience of more than half a century.

The diversion and use of water when streams are high equalize the flow, furnish a better supply of water during the dry season, and by lessening floods save lives and property on the rivers below.

Special agents are permitted to protest against the validity of entries without any knowledge of facts relating thereto. They should be required to make their objections at the time of final proof, that the entryman might face his accusers.

13. The courts should be opened to land disputes, that citizens may be afforded an opportunity to enforce their rights instead of the system now in vogue of determination through star-chamber proceedings by administrative officers.

14. Under the express terms of the enabling act, Colorado was admitted to the Union on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States. To be on an equal footing we must have the power to tax the land and other property within the State, for without that power we can not maintain State and local governments and institutions. The present policy of the Federal Government is to place our lands and resources on a revenue basis, paying taxes in the form of royalties into the Federal Treasury, thereby seriously interfering with the means of supporting our needy growing institutions. The effect of the present policy is to permit local taxation only upon farm and city and town lands now privately owned. This might be less objectionable in Iowa or Illinois, where practically all of the land is tillable. More than half of the area of Colorado is not tillable under any known method, but is composed of mineral, grazing, and timbered areas, which take the place of farm lands, and which are just as expensive to govern, if not more so, than are the farm lands. The policy, therefore, which withdraws these from taxation is a serious handicap to the State.

While our resources are of great variety, they are not naturally ready for use. On the average there has been a dollar in expense for every dollar in precious metals taken from the mountains, and the value of our lands is measured by the labor required for their irrigation and development. Without the value the presence and industry of our people have added to them, there is not a dollar's worth of value in any of our natural resources. Every dollar, therefore, charged in the form of royalty on the products of these resources is a tax on human toil.

We can not hope to secure the best settlement of our lands nor development of our resources upon a tenantry basis. The man who is permitted to lease lands cheaply for grazing will try to keep them for pasture.

15. There is but one-third of our area on the tax rolls, with extraordinary educational requirements to equip our people to meet mining, industrial, irrigation, and other agricultural development. We must therefore increase the taxable area to include all the lands if every portion of the State shall bear its just share of this burden.

A large part of our territory is included in the Louisiana Purchase, in the treaty ratifying which it is decreed:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted, as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

If this provision were complied with the present bureaucratic government over large areas of our State would be impossible. Is there any reason why people who must live in and do business with the said reservations should be deprived of the same rights and privileges enjoyed by the citizens of the older States; and what reason is there to suppose that forests can not be grown and protected or monopolies prevented under the republican form of government?

The incentive of ownership is necessary to secure the best development of our mineral territory, and we can not expect the best citizenship unless people are permitted to own their own homes, no matter in what business they engage.

The private-owned land in the State is scattered promiscuously amongst the Federal-owned land, and there can be no hope of harmonious action or good feeling through the intermingled double jurisdiction over our territory.

The Government purposes, as a landlord, to go into almost every kind of business within the State on untaxed property in competition with private-owned and taxed property. The public business does not need to pay expenses, but the owner of the private property must pay taxes to make up the loss of his Federal competitor. The Federal Government engaging in business as a proprietor must necessarily occupy a contractual relation with the citizen under which the Government may enforce its contract against the citizen, whereas the citizen may not enforce his contract against the Government.

Under the present administration of the forest reserves the Government acknowledges the moral right of the State to tax the property by returning to the State 25 per cent of the proceeds from sales, rentals, and special privileges. It assumes the right, however, to dictate the disposition of this rebate by decreeing that it shall go to the support of roads and schools, two popular purposes, but ignoring the necessity of the State to protect in the courts the very lives of those living upon Federal-owned property and the necessity for the maintenance of educational, charitable, and penal institutions by the State.

16. The continued withdrawal of our lands and resources from entry and placing them upon a revenue basis to pay royalties into the Federal Treasury means their control by Congress, and that Texas, which never had any public lands, would in the House of Representatives have four times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves could exert, and that New York, which has no public domain, would have ten times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves possess, and that, too, without any adequate knowledge of local conditions and necessities.

The double jurisdiction over the territory of the State has led to strong opposition to Federal officials, against whose orders and rules there is no recourse in the courts, and employees of the Federal bureaus defending their position have been constantly doing missionary work in behalf of the general principle of Federal control of our lands and resources.

The Forest Service, for instance, through its numerous employees, has been able to enlist the eastern press in praise of its work and to create a sentiment against the West.

The Federal Constitution declares: "The United States shall guarantee to each State in the Union a republican form of government"—not a republican form of government over part of the State, but over it all. Certainly no one can contend that a republican form of government exists under the bureaucratic control already in force over a large part of our territory, and sought to be enforced over two-thirds of our area, with its arbitrary rules and regulations enforceable at the pleasure of the bureau with discretionary power, with its natural antagonism to State laws and State control, with a long list of special privileges to enlist support, and with all the evils, therefore, of a system of favoritism.

"Republicanism and bureaucracy are incompatible existences." (Century Encyclopedia.)

Our laws and customs are built upon experience, and our people are better acquainted with local conditions and necessities, and are more interested in building the State aright than are the people of the East. If there is fear of monopolization, Congress, in the act of cession, could provide effective means for reversion of title to the State whenever monopoly is attempted. The administration of our public lands and resources should be under the jurisdiction of Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture, familiar from experience with the local situation, in order that it may be for the settlement of our lands, the development of our institutions, and the betterment of social conditions.

17. We therefore earnestly request, under existing or more appropriate laws, such an administration as will secure the settlement of our public lands and the development of our resources, placing them upon the tax rolls, with effective provisions against monopolization and waste. We ask for no advantage or privilege not enjoyed by the older States, but feel we have a right to insist that we be placed on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States to own and use our lands and resources to build our State and support its government and institutions.

President of Senate.

Approved March 8, 1913, at 1.49 p. m.

ELIAS M. AMMONS,
Governor State of Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the legislatures and political parties of the Western States have been petitioning the Senate and House of Representatives and petitioning the President of the United States for years and years against the policy of leasing the public domain, and similar protests were made with relation to the leasing system which was adopted in 1807. That system provided for the leasing of the lead mines of the United States upon the theory that lead was a munition of war, and that the United States must in some way get hold of a large quantity of it, and it was thought that by a leasing system they could do so. The people of the States affected, through their legislatures and through their governors, protested time and again against the imposition of the leasing system upon them, and I want to read one protest, which is in the form of a memorial, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Missouri. It reads:

A MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The General Assembly of the State of Missouri respectfully represent that they have long witnessed with solicitude the policy of the General Government in withholding from sale lands lying in this State represented as containing lead and iron ore; but experience has fully shown the incorrectness of this policy and its inefficiency in accomplishing the object contemplated to be effected, to wit, the advancement in value arising from the increase of population and the discovery of ore; for the enhancement thus arising is more than counterbalanced by the depredations made on the mineral and timber. We would further represent that large tracts of fertile lands have been returned as containing mineral upon which no mineral has ever yet been found—

And I will state that of the lands that have been set aside for coal lands in recent years only a short time ago 3,000,000 acres, I understand, were returned to the public domain because it was found that they had been set aside erroneously—and we believe that the retention of those lands by the General Government will be against the interest of the Union and a material injury to the best interest of our State, in preventing large districts of our country from being settled by industrious cultivators of the soil. Your memorialists, relying upon the justice of their petition and upon your wisdom and liberality, pray that your honorable body will pass a law to authorize the sale of such lands lying in this State as have heretofore been withheld from sale on account of their containing lead and iron ore, upon the same conditions that other lands of the Government are now sold.

Resolved, That it be made the duty of the secretary of state to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of this memorial.

JOHN THORNTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
DANIEL DUNKLIN,
President of the Senate.

Approved December 11, 1828.

I want to say further that the governor of Illinois, taking the position that these lands in equity belonged to the people who made them valuable by settlement, absolutely advised the people of that State not to pay any royalty to the Federal Government.

It seems to me that in view of the fact that many years elapsed before the detrimental leasing system was repealed we ought to go into the matter only after the most careful deliberation. The reason the leasing system for mines will not pay is because men will not put money into expensive machinery so necessary to develop the mines unless they own the title to the mines. That we are going to have a leasing system under this provision that will prove a resource to the Indians is something that I think will not be justified in view of the experience we have had in the past. In other words, a leasing system is one that never has produced revenue to the Government, and never can produce revenue, because of the fact that the men will not develop the leased mines in the same manner that they will develop their own lands. That being the case, instead of it being a matter of profit to the Indians, and instead of it being a matter of great income to them, we shall find that it will be a loss to them if you take into consideration the expenditures necessary to be made.

Some people have said, "Why, Colorado has a coal-leasing law." It has a coal-leasing law, but what has been the experience in Colorado? Only 3 per cent of the coal lands of Colorado have been leased. Operators do not want to lease the land. They know it takes an enormous amount of money to develop a coal mine. They have to procure expensive hoisting apparatus and machinery to extract the coal. They have to build a railroad to the mine. People are not going to put in those large sums of money unless they own title to the land. For these reasons only 3 per cent of the coal lands of the State of Colorado have been leased, and only one-half of that amount has been actually developed or is being developed. That is the experience we have had there.

Take the grazing lands belonging to the State of Colorado. They have been leased at about 5 cents an acre per annum, and yet those lands sell very readily for $6, $7, and $8 an acre. Five cents an acre is less than 1 per cent upon the value of the lands, and that is not as much as the amount which the State, county, and schools would receive by imposing taxes upon the land. How can the State, county, and schools maintain good government if large areas are exempted from taxation? Our State can not perform the functions that are required of us by the National Constitution unless we have a right to tax those lands, and that can only be done by the Government continuing the policy contemplated by the Constitution of disposing of, instead of holding in perpetuity, the same.

Mr. President, this is a general leasing clause in an appropriation bill, and ought not to have been in here at all. If we are going to adopt the leasing system, it ought to be in a general bill reported to the Senate. I want to say, however, that it is not right that we should have one system as to the Indian lands and another system as to our public lands. In other words, we should pay to the Indians exactly the same amount that we pay to our own Treasury for the same character of lands, and on that account the system ought to be uniform. If the system does not pay, and the Indians are charged with a sum for administering it, then it is not right to the Indians. If it pays by not having any charges at all for administration, and the Indians get more money than the General Government gets out of similar classes of lands, then it seems to me they get too much. Consequently, the system should be under a general law, and the rights of the Indians ought to be identical with the rights of the citizens of the United States with relation to the disposal of the public lands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I submit the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concession made by the chairman of the committee relieves the Chair of the embarrassment of running amuck on this bill. Points of order have been presented very frequently this afternoon, and in nearly every instance they seem to have been well taken.

The Chair will agree with his friend the Senator from Arizona and sustain the point of order.

The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before proceeding with the items relating to the several States I should like to call attention again to the amendment beginning on page 14, line 24. I know the committee has adopted that amendment, but I am reminded of the fact that a good while ago I received pretty vigorous protests against the system of determining heirship among the Indians provided by the act of June 25, 1910, and I should like to have some little time to consider the objections I have received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that a point of order has been presented in opposition to that amendment, and the Chair has withheld judgment on it until to-morrow. In the meantime the Senator can follow it up.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. I was not aware of that.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," in section 2, page 19, after line 11, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide school facilities for the children of the Papago Tribe of Indians in Arizona, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, this amount to be in addition to any other funds available for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if there has not been a mistake made in the preparation of this bill in making, as we do, an appropriation, on page 7, line 25, as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, including the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children, $1,500,000.

And then saying, as we do here—

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide school facilities for the children of the Papago Tribe of Indians in Arizona, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, this amount to be in addition to any other funds available for that purpose.

Should not those different appropriations for the same purpose be assembled in one part of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. They are not in connection with reservations, and this is a special item.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They are not conflicting.

Mr. ASHURST. They are not conflicting, and this is a special item estimated for by the department.

Mr. PAGE. I approve of the appropriation; I do not object to that at all; but it seems to me in reading the bill that you should say, in the paragraph commencing at the bottom of page 7, "including $50,000," adding to the amount of that appropriation the special appropriation for the Papago Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. With due respect to the observation made by the Senator, there may be some force in it, but I think after the investigation of our hearings he will find that the department wished it this way for its own convenience, and that taking it all together it will be more appropriate in this form.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In that connection I will ask, as I was not here when the consideration of the bill was begun, being detained at one of the departments on official business, what provision, if any, is made in the bill for the isolation of Indians suffering from tuberculosis and trachoma?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if my colleague will indulge me, I will ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to answer that question. I should like, however, to make one preliminary observation.

In the Indian appropriation bill that was passed last year some $25,000 was appropriated for the purpose of holding hearings and making an investigation as to the health and other features of the Indians. That committee, composed of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and three Members of the House of Representatives, proceeded to a large number of reservations, and held hearings; and the result of their work can not be commended too highly. In fact, I am very certain that when the Senate learns of the vast value of their work to the Indians and to the general public, the Senate will feel under a special obligation to the committee.

I will ask the Senator from Arkansas to answer the question asked by my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the Senator proceeds I wish to call attention to the point I have in my mind. It is that great numbers of the Papago Indians, for whose benefit this $50,000 is appropriated, are suffering from the disease of the eye called trachoma. I have had quite a number of letters from a most estimable lady, Mrs. Wright, in the town of Tucson, and quite a number of citizens of the city, touching the necessity of an appropriation for a hospital that will isolate and take care of the patients or the children so affected. It is getting into the city schools. By reason of the free access of the Indian children suffering from the disease it is making its appearance in the public schools, and very naturally creates great alarm among our people.

I was expecting to find somewhere in this bill a direct appropriation for a hospital, properly isolated, about the city of Tucson, which has some twenty-odd thousand inhabitants, and the Indian reservation lying 8 or 10 miles away. If such a hospital is not provided in the bill I hope the Senator can show me that there is some provision in the bill whereby it can be built, or this isolation properly made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, on page 6, lines 6 to 25, and page 7, lines 1 to 19, are contained the provisions relating to the relief of distress and the treatment of disease among the Indians. Those provisions have already been approved by the committee. The item carries $310,000 for the general purpose of relieving distress and disease among the Indians. Of that $310,000, not to exceed $100,000 may be expended in the erection, equipment, and maintenance of camp and pavilion hospitals for the use of afflicted Indians, and especially for the treatment of Indians afflicted with tuberculosis and trachoma, and no hospital to be constructed shall cost more than $12,500. The sum is made immediately available, and the hospitals are to be constructed in the open market.

The joint commission, which made some investigations into health conditions among the Indians, found that both tuberculosis and trachoma are alarmingly prevalent among the Indians throughout the United States. In some localities practically all of certain tribes are afflicted with trachoma. In the case of some of the tribes as high as 40 or 50 per cent are afflicted with tuberculosis. The conditions are alarming.

After very careful consideration of the matter, we concluded that the best way to inaugurate a movement for the eradication of these diseases among the Indians was to provide for inexpensive hospitals where the Indians might be received for treatment, and for this purpose $100,000 is made available. Of course, it will be inadequate to provide hospitals for all reservations where they are needed, but it is the beginning of a work which must be extended in the future.

The bill contains the following proviso:

That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find any Indian afflicted with tuberculosis, trachoma, or other contagious or infectious diseases, he may, if in his judgment the health of the afflicted Indian or that of other persons require it, isolate or quarantine such afflicted Indian in a hospital or other place for treatment. The Secretary of the Interior may employ such means as may be necessary in the isolation or quarantine of such Indian, and it shall be the duty of such Indian so afflicted to obey any order or regulation made by the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out this provision.

I have here an itemized statement of the manner in which this $310,000 may be expended. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has gone into the subject somewhat carefully. The amount of $100,000, which is available for the construction of camp hospitals for the treatment of trachoma and tuberculosis, as I have already stated, will not begin to provide a sufficient fund to construct the necessary hospitals; but the bureau thought perhaps that was all that could be profitably expended during the next year; and it is contemplated by the committee that these appropriations shall be extended as the circumstances and necessities require.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I appreciate the labor of the committee, and especially the Senator from Arkansas himself, in this humane effort to relieve suffering; but situated as these poor Papago Indians are, near one of the largest cities in our State, I had hoped a direct appropriation might be made on account of the prevalence of the disease and the danger of its dissemination, and that a real hospital might be built.

Here is a large city and a short distance from it a very large Indian reservation. The Indians are constantly coming to town, and people are constantly driving, in their business, through the Indian reservation. I had hoped that the bill would be found to contain somewhere an item that would permit the construction of a permanent hospital, costing, say, twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars, that would stand for a good length of time. These mere open tents will do no good at all.

I will ask the Senator before he proceeds whether or not, under this appropriation, he thinks the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or whoever manages it, could build a more permanent hospital wherever he thought the exigency was greater?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, under the provision contained in the bill, the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may construct these camp or pavilion hospitals at such places as in their discretion they should be constructed.

There is, however, a limitation in this bill that no hospital to be constructed shall cost more than $12,500. That provision was inserted in the bill after very careful consideration of the committee. We thought it best; and it was the view of the members of the committee who had had personal experience in the treatment of tuberculosis, including the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], that it is best under all the circumstances to provide as many hospitals as practicable, and make them just as inexpensive for the present as circumstances will permit, so that the treatment may be brought as speedily as possible to the thousands of Indians of the United States who are suffering, and the many who are dying, from this dread plague.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 16, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, we would praise, magnify, and hallow Thy holy name, in the purity of our thoughts, in deeds sublime, by the rectitude of our behavior, in the manifold duties and relationships of life, that we may be worthy recipients of Thy care and protection, and thus hasten the coming of Thy kingdom, that peace, joy, and righteousness may fill the earth, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] to preside to-morrow as Speaker pro tempore.

FEDERAL AND STATE ELECTION LAWS.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD briefly on the conflict between the Federal and State election laws.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the conflict between Federal and State election laws. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OHIO RIVER.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, a week ago last Tuesday the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] was given 20 minutes in which to address the House. I desire permission to address the House for 20 minutes in reply to his unwarranted and vicious assault on certain items in the river and harbor bill appropriating money for the improvement of the Ohio River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on certain features of the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SWITZER. I have never made such a request of the House before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While the sundry civil appropriation bill is before the House I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

GRAZING HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the 640-acre grazing homestead bill, as applied to the arid lands of the West.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the 640-acre homestead grazing bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

KENTUCKY.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from this morning's Washington Post with reference to Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from this morning's Washington Post about the chivalry and beauty of Kentucky. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

THE HUMAN BREED IN KENTUCKY.

A eugenic law in Kentucky? Impossible! There must be some mistake in the announcement that Kentucky is worried over its human breed, and has enacted a law which requires candidates for matrimony to give full and satisfactory particulars as to their physical condition before a license will be granted.

Matters have come to a pretty pass if the State of handsome men and beautiful women must take measures to keep up the standard of perfection. What must be the conditions in other States, if the chivalry and beauty of the Blue Grass State are decadent?

No new-fangled law was necessary to make the manhood and womanhood of Kentucky great. Nature alone, working in the Eden known to mortals as Kentucky, developed a superb race. The men were mighty of thew, tall, impetuous in love and war, gifted alike for the forum or the field, carrying all before them. And the women—ah, the women of Kentucky! Poetry and tradition wove around them a halo of romance through which their beauty and charm shed a radiance that enraptured all mankind.

If Kentucky thinks she can improve upon the splendid type of humanity she has developed, she is vainly trying to gild refined gold and paint the lily. Let well enough alone, Kentucky! Repeal this foolish law, which stands as an admission that humankind in Kentucky is on the down grade. Stick to the old standards, and thus remain the envy of your sister States, which would be happy, indeed, to share the fame already achieved by Kentucky in rearing brave men and lovely women.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KONIG.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, June 28, be set apart for eulogies on the late Representative KONIG, of Maryland, and that there be a session of the House on that day for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] asks unanimous consent that on Sunday, June 28, 1914, there be a session of the House for the purpose of paying eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the late Representative KONIG. Is their objection?

Mr. MANN. At the regular hour?

The SPEAKER. At 12 o'clock noon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF RECORD.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, on May 28 last the House granted me an indefinite leave of absence on account of the serious illness of my father. That illness has had a fatal termination, and I have just returned to the House.

On June 5 the Clayton antitrust bill came to a vote. On page 9911 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I am recorded as paired against the bill. I had not then had an opportunity to study the bill or to follow the debate, and the pair was made without my knowledge and evidently under a misapprehension. I was paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE], and I should not like to embarrass him in any way; but, if it is possible, I should like to be relieved from that pair, because I am inclined to think, after such study as I have since been able to give to the measure, that I should have voted for it.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman will go into the RECORD, of course. The Chair is of the opinion, just guessing at it, that it is too late to correct the RECORD of that date.

Mr. ROGERS. I supposed that any time within 10 days or 2 weeks would not be too late to correct the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the correction will be made both in the RECORD and Journal.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to make a further correction in the RECORD. The vote on the Rayburn bill to regulate the issue of railway stocks and bonds immediately followed the vote on the Clayton antitrust bill just referred to. It appears upon the page of the RECORD which has already been cited. At the close of the vote on the Rayburn bill two pairs are listed under the caption: "The Clerk announced the following additional pairs." My name does not appear as one of those separately paired on the Rayburn bill, and I feared that in view of the use of the word "additional" there might be an implication that I was paired against the Rayburn bill as well as—though in error, as above stated—against the Clayton bill.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. If a pair is general, it carries no implication whatever.

Mr. ROGERS. The previous pair was not general. It was specifically, though mistakenly, a pair against the Clayton bill, and under the language of the RECORD there is, I think, some ground for the inference that a pair against the Rayburn bill also was intended. As I should certainly have voted for the Rayburn bill, I desire to clear away any possible uncertainty upon the point.

Then, on June 8, there was a call of the House, and on that call, on page 10030 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I was not recorded as among those who then failed to answer to their names. I should like to be recorded as absent, because I was in fact absent, and indeed have only to-day returned to the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the correction will be made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. DIES, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. STRINGER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BELL of Georgia, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. WINGO, indefinitely, on account of illness.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 828).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 14, 15, 16, 42, 43, 44, 50, 54, 66, 70, 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 39, 41, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "only," insert the following: "and officers of the Construction Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment, after the word "officers," insert the following: "not exceeding five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert the following: "June 30, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Under authority of the House granted to change totals not in conference, the committee on conference amended the bill as follows: Page 20 of the bill, line 21, strike out "$170,000," and in lieu thereof insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md.: Toward extension of powder factory (cost not to exceed $500,000), $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "for fuel-oil storage, at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "to be available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Line 7 of said amendment, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "men," insert the following: "of the Navy and Marine Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to upkeep and to industrial work at navy yards and stations. The total sum so charged shall be distributed in accordance with the work done in the various yards and stations in order that the cost of work may be determined."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"A committee is hereby appointed, to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives and one naval officer to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy, at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant. Said report shall contain the estimated cost of a plant and site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons, and also a plant having an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee, payable upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 33, 34, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, and 71 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Provide for an increase of $104,000 in the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to provide a fund for entertaining the officers and crews of foreign fleets which may be sent to attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority contained in the joint resolution approved February 15, 1911, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: Provides that tolls shall not be assessed against or collected from any war vessel of any foreign nation which may pass through the Panama Canal en route to or returning from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, provided such vessel has been sent by its Government to attend and participate in said exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to define and establish suitable anchorage grounds in Hampton Roads and San Francisco Bay for the combined fleets of the United States and foreign Governments which may rendezvous in these waters during their attendance at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: Provides that officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them, and the House recedes, with an amendment by which officers of the construction corps and the officers above named are eligible for any shore duty to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them.

Amendment No. 6: Increases the appropriation for recruiting from $130,000 to $150,000, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 7: Permits the employment of more than one advertising agency in advertising for recruits, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 8, 9, and 10: Extend to the Revenue-Cutter Service the right of any alien of 21 years of age and upward who may, under existing law, become a citizen of the United States and has served or may hereafter serve for four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service and receive therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, to be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 11: Increases the appropriation for gunnery exercises from $100,000 to $115,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: Provides for the producing of American charts and sailing directions to replace those of foreign production which now have to be purchased abroad, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office. The House recedes with an amendment restricting the number of officers to be detailed to that office to not exceed five.

Amendment No. 13: Provides that the pensions of beneficiaries of the naval home shall be disposed of in the same manner as prescribed for inmates of the soldiers' home, except that in case of the death of any beneficiary leaving no heirs at law nor next of kin any pension due him shall escheat to the naval pension fund, subject to certain provisions, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 16: Make certain appropriations in the Bureau of Ordnance "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 17: Makes the appropriations for "torpedoes and appliances" "available until expended." The House recedes with an amendment making that appropriation available until June 30, 1917.

Amendment No. 18: Includes the Naval Observatory in the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," without increasing the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 19 and 20: Strike out the House provisions for building slips and equipment at navy yard, Boston, Mass., to cost $148,000, and the provision whereby the unexpended balance under the appropriation "Marine barracks, Boston, Mass.," for the fiscal year 1914 is covered back into the Treasury, and provides that the unobligated balance under the appropriation "Marine barracks, Boston, Mass.," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, not exceeding $148,000 is made available for building slips and equipment at Boston, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 21: Increases the appropriation to complete Pier D from $12,000 to $25,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 22: Increases the limit of cost of Pier C from $130,000 to $150,000, with no increase in the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 23: Provides an appropriation of $8,500 to extend the second floor mold loft in the navy yard, New York, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 24: Is a change of total and an increase of $21,500.

Amendment No. 27: Provides for a fireproof general storehouse, Washington Navy Yard, D. C., cost not to exceed $225,000, with an appropriation of $100,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 30: Increases the appropriation for dredging at navy yard, Charleston, S. C., from $10,000 to $20,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 31: Makes the sum of $207,000 for improvement of hydraulics, Mare Island Straits, "to be immediately available," and provides an appropriation of $20,000 for dredging and diking Mare Island Straits, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "to be immediately available."

Amendment No. 32: Is a change of total.

Amendment No. 35: Provides for an appropriation of $500,000 toward the extension of the powder factory at the Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md., and the House recedes with an amendment whereby an appropriation of $200,000 is made and a limit of cost of the extension to the powder factory is fixed at $500,000.

Amendment No. 36: Provides for a fuel-oil storage, San Francisco, Cal., to cost $100,000, and for a fuel-oil storage at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to cost $150,000, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the provision for oil storage at a point accessible to Texas and Oklahoma.

Amendment No. 37: Is a change of total and makes the whole appropriation "available until expended," and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "to be available until expended."

Amendment No. 38: Provides an appropriation of $150,000 for naval disciplinary barracks at Puget Sound, Wash., and Port Royal, S. C., and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the appropriation to $75,000.

Amendment No. 39: Places the Naval Observatory in the appropriation "Repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations," without increasing the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 41: Allows the expenditure of $40,000 from the naval hospital fund for the erection of such temporary structures and equipment of the naval hospitals at Mare Island and Puget Sound as may be necessary to relieve the crowded condition of those institutions and make special preparation for the sick of the Navy and visiting fleets at the time of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 42: Makes appropriation for "Transportation of remains" available until expended, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 43: Provides for an increase of pay of the dental surgeon at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of $200 per year based upon 15 years' service at this institution as a civilian dentist, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 44: Excludes the men of the Navy that are detailed for duty with the Naval Militia in being counted in the enlisted strength of the Navy, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 45: Provides that the number of enlisted men of the Navy shall be construed to mean the daily average number of enlisted men in the naval service during the fiscal year, and the House recedes with an amendment making the provision apply to the enlisted men of the Marine Corps as well as the Navy.

Amendments Nos. 46, 47, and 48: Provide for an increase in the Corps of Chaplains in the Navy by allowing 1 chaplain to each 1,250 of the total personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, which increases the number now allowed by law from 24 to 52 and also provides for a probationary period in the grade of acting chaplain of three years' sea service on board ship before a commission is granted. The amendment provides for no increase in the pay of chaplains, but only increases the number, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 49: Permits the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow the members of the Nurse Corps the amounts which have been checked against them for commutation of subsistence under the decisions of the comptroller dated December 21, 1912, and April 29, 1913, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 50: Provides that the amounts credited to the Naval Supply Account from stores, equipage, and supplies turned in from ships be "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 51: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized in his discretion to issue free of cost the national flag used for draping the coffin of any officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps, whose death occurs while in the service of the United States, upon request, to the relatives of the deceased officer or enlisted man, or, upon request, to the school, patriotic order, or society to which the deceased officer or man belonged, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 52: Is a change of verbiage without any change of effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 54: Provides that unobligated and unexpended balances of the appropriation "Steam machinery" shall be "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 55: Provides that there may be appointed annually from the enlisted men of the Navy who are citizens of the United States and not more than 20 years of age, and who have served not less than one year, 15 enlisted men to the United States Naval Academy, to be selected in the order of merit by competitive examinations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and such men so selected are required to pass the physical and mental examination now required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 56: Strikes out the provision which provides $200,000 for building slips and equipment in order to equip a navy yard for building a battleship, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 58: Is a change of verbiage without any change of effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 59: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy in estimating the actual cost of a ship built by the Government may deduct from the estimated cost of such ship as built under the appropriation therefor any sums which he deems not to be just to be charged thereto, and the House recedes with an amendment whereby the various appropriations for the support of the naval establishments may be charged with the overhead charges incident to upkeep and industrial work at navy yards and stations, and the sums so charged to be distributed in accordance with the work done at the various yards and stations so that the cost of work may be determined.

Amendment No. 60: Is a change of verbiage, owing to a previous amendment, without any change in effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 61: Strikes out building slips and equipment under the appropriation "Construction and machinery," and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 62: Strikes out the word "steam," making the appropriation apply to all kinds of machinery as well as steam machinery, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 66: Provides an appropriation of $8,600 for the correction of acoustics of the United States Naval Academy chapel and auditorium, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 67: Provides for a committee to investigate the cost of the erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, and gives said committee authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and appropriates the sum of $5,000 for the expense of said committee, and the House recedes with an amendment whereby the committee is to be composed of the chairmen of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and one naval officer, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant of both 20,000 and 10,000 tons capacity to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel. The committee is given authority to sit during the recess of Congress and to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths. The sum of $5,000 is appropriated to defray the expenses of the committee.

Amendment No. 69: Is a change of total, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 70: In the paragraph in the House bill which limited all appropriations for the procuring of any vessels, armament, articles, or materials, which the navy yards, gun factories, or other industrial plants operated by the Navy Department are equipped to supply, to procuring them from Government plants, the Senate struck out the requirement that Government plants be "operated approximately at their full capacity for not less than one regular shift each working day, except when contract costs are less than costs in said Government plants," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 72: Makes all appropriations contained in the bill immediately available, and the Senate recedes.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the following amendments:

Amendment No. 28: Navy yard, Norfolk, Va. New dry dock (cost not to exceed $3,000,000), $200,000.

Amendment No. 29: In all, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., $225,000.

Amendment No. 33: Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Toward construction of breakwater (limit of contract, $600,000), $100,000.

Amendment No. 34: The limit of cost of the dry dock at the naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, is hereby increased to $4,986,500.

Amendment No. 40: Change of total.

Amendment No. 53: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the use by the Government of dry docks at Hunters Point, San Francisco, Cal., one of which docks shall be capable of docking the largest vessel that can be passed through the locks of the Panama Canal, for a period not to exceed six years from completion of such dock, at a compensation of $50,000 per annum during said period of six years, the right of the Government to the use of said docks in time of war to be prior and paramount: Provided, That the construction of the large dock shall be undertaken immediately upon entering into this contract and shall be completed within 24 months thereafter: And provided further, That said contract shall provide for docking rates not in excess of commercial rates and for such other conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy prior to entering into such contract: And provided further, That in the event, during the said contract period of six years, the necessities of the fleet require the docking of vessels which will necessitate a charge greater than $50,000 per annum, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to have said vessel docked at a rate of charge not greater than price stipulated in said contract.

Amendments Nos. 57, 63, 64, 65, and 68 are amendments making appropriations under "Increase of the Navy," "available until expended."

Amendment No. 71: The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale, in such manner, at such price, and upon such terms as he shall deem proper, of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall, after payment therefrom of the expenses of such sale, be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury, and shall, until expended, be available for the construction of such other vessel or vessels, at least equal for the purposes of offense and defense to the most modern vessels of the same class now projected here or abroad, as the President may in his discretion authorize: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold, exchanged, or conveyed under this authorization unless such sale, exchange, or conveyance, or the agreement therefor, shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915: Provided further, That any vessel constructed from the money received from the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho shall not be included in the annual appropriation for the increase of the Navy.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the conference report. On amendment 59, on page 60 of the bill, the conferees agreed to an amendment in lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senate. I desire to get the chairman of the committee to explain the meaning of this change which has been proposed by the conferees on this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in the present management——

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair get the matter straightened out as to time. The gentleman from Illinois is not making the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but what good does it do to reserve the point of order unless the gentleman has one?

Mr. FOSTER. I may have one.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order, the Chair desires to know?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I was waiting until we had an explanation from the chairman of the committee. The language is quite different, and I may not make the point of order after I have heard the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has an hour. The point of order is one thing, but interrogating the gentleman from Tennessee as to the meaning of certain language in the conference report is another. The gentleman from Illinois, however, will not be cut out of his right to make the point of order. The hour of the gentleman from Tennessee begins to run now.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that the time would not run out of my hour on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. No; the argument about the point of order will not be taken out of the gentleman's hour, but answering questions as to the meaning of the language is taken out of the hour.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well. Mr. Speaker, in the present management of the navy yards, in the construction of battleships in the navy yards, it is believed that too much of the overhead charges is charged to the construction of the ship. This is an effort to arrive as near as possible at the exact overhead charges that should be charged to a ship. Under certain rulings of the Department of Justice and the Comptroller of the Treasury various overhead charges can not be charged to specific appropriations that are made to the various bureaus, and the language that is in the bill in the Senate amendment does not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, and gave the Secretary entirely too much power and discretion, in the opinion of the conferees on the part of the House, allowing him to charge just what he pleased and to refrain from charging what he pleased, and to fix no rule of action so far as charging or declining to charge is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does this amendment propose to do?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, this amendment proposes that hereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to the upkeep and to industrial work at the navy yards and stations. For instance, to illustrate, it takes so much to maintain the navy yards, whether there is a battleship building there or not. Light, heat, power, transportation, and various general charges that are known under the general head of overhead charges amount to so much, but suppose a battleship is directed to be constructed in one of the navy yards. Assuming that conditions were the same and that construction of the battleship added so much additional to these overhead charges, we feel that the amount that should be charged to the battleship would be the amount of increase incident to the construction of the ship, and not a percentage of the whole charge of overhead charges in the navy yard. As it is now, they charge against the construction of the ship a certain percentage, arbitrarily fixed, of light, and a certain percentage, arbitrarily fixed, of transportation, of heat, and of power, and of all these matters.

This amendment is to allow them to distribute these overhead charges to the several appropriations, so that the construction of the battleship would be chargeable only with the amount to be ascertained with which it should be charged. I think this is very beneficial legislation. It is done for the purpose of enabling the department to reach a more just and fair and equitable distribution of the overhead charges.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman this: In his judgment does he believe the Navy Department will do this, and that the construction of battleships within the navy yards will not have to bear an extra burden of overhead charges?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman very frankly that this is intended by the Secretary of the Navy to enable him to reduce the overhead charges on the construction of battleships, so that the charges will not be so great, and that a portion of these charges that are now charged to the construction of the battleship may be distributed to the several appropriations of the different bureaus.

Mr. FOSTER. And not charged to the construction of the battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. So that if this amendment be adopted, the effect would be to charge only the actual amounts to the battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. And it is to enable the Secretary to do that that this is put in.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, is it not only a matter of bookkeeping?

Mr. PADGETT. It is more than a matter of bookkeeping. Of course, it is a matter of bookkeeping, but it is intended to place the charges where they properly belong, and under the method that is now pursued it charges to the construction of the battleship too much of the overhead charges and too little to the other appropriations in the work in the navy yard.

Mr. DUPRÉ. What is the ultimate effect on the Public Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, the Treasury would pay the same, but the Treasury does not want it shown that it costs so much to construct a battleship in a navy yard, when, as a matter of fact, the charge shown is exorbitant.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation of the gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the committee, I shall not make the point of order I reserved.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE. I may want to ask two questions, if the gentleman pleases, on this point the gentleman from Illinois has raised. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the Secretary of the Navy to so adjust the figures for the construction of a battleship that he will not have to charge against construction of a particular ship certain overhead charges that are in the nature of permanent charges?

Mr. PADGETT. And should not be borne by that particular ship.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and the effect would be to reduce the cost of a ship so far as the direct shipbuilding appropriation was concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. In contrast to the figures presented by the independent shipyards, perhaps the Government has suffered in that charges may have been made against the construction of a battleship, including heat, light, and so forth, and the salaries of certain permanent officers attached to the department, and certain other overhead charges that would raise the price of the ship itself?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the belief of the department and the Secretary, and the purpose of this amendment is to remedy that defect and allow a proper distribution of the overhead charges.

Mr. MOORE. If we were to establish a shipbuilding yard at the Pensacola Navy Yard, for instance, we would erect building ways, with other facilities for building ships. Entering into the nature of overhead charges, we would erect buildings and other facilities, and we would have to employ labor to maintain them. The gentleman desires by the amendment to relieve a particular ship of that kind of a charge?

Now, may not that account somewhat for the cost of maintaining an independent shipyard or an armor-plate establishment which receives periodical orders from the Government? You build a ship once in a while, and you are going to relieve the construction of that ship of the overhead charges which are still being paid by the Government. You propose in this bill also to establish a Government armor-plate factory. May it not be that if you do not want to make armor plate all the year or only a few months you will find yourself carrying a very large institution and being charged with labor and construction and overhead costs that are now being maintained by armor-plate establishments?

Mr. PADGETT. I assume that if the Government establishes an armor-plate factory, it will operate it practically the whole year, and such a condition as the gentleman states will not exist.

Mr. MOORE. If I may be allowed to ask this question now, it will save asking it when the armor-plate item comes up. If the Government should decide to establish an armor-plate plant at a cost of ten, twelve, or fourteen million dollars, which it probably would cost, would it not then be in exactly the same position in regard to overhead expense that individual operators are to-day—the Government would have to maintain a complete plant every year and all the year, with all the expense attached to it, although it might have an opportunity to use it only once in a while when we build a battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. I presume that the Government would run it all the year, and if it did not, it would discharge the force.

Mr. MOORE. Would not the overhead charges continue just the same, though we only build a battleship once in a while?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a matter to be determined upon. I suppose if we manufacture armor plate we would manufacture it in good faith.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman what reason there was on page 27, amendment 39, for adding an appropriation for repairs to the Naval Observatory in the item of navy yards and docks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Also amendment 18 for the maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. PADGETT. That is included in two places in the bill. It was suggested by the accounting officers that it would be proper to insert it here so that it would be explicit in the bill. It has been heretofore paid for under this appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; it is a specific appropriation included in the legislative bill. The gentleman has included an appropriation of over a million dollars.

Mr. PADGETT. This appropriation for buildings and grounds has been carried heretofore in the naval bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was a specific appropriation to clean up the naval grounds and observatory of $5,000. The appropriation for repairs to the buildings is a specific appropriation carried in the legislative bill. The legislative bill has always made an appropriation for repairs in the Naval Observatory buildings, fixtures, fences, and other matters.

Mr. PADGETT. I will call the gentleman's attention to the language of the act of last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; you had $5,000 for cleaning up the grounds.

Mr. PADGETT. And for the upkeep of the grounds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the first time; and now you appropriate in two places without any limitation on the amount that may be expended, one an appropriation of $1,600,000 and the other $1,100,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that the legislative bill provides for the Naval Observatory. We have given in the legislative bill every dollar that was estimated for by the Navy Department for the upkeep and maintenance and repairs of the Naval Observatory. This naval appropriation bill, by the amendments adopted by the Senate and agreed to in conference, transfers the Naval Observatory to a lump-sum appropriation which is for yards and docks, and that appropriation is more than a million of dollars, and there is no limitation whatever in this amendment as to what amount can be used in Washington.

Now, this trouble has existed for a number of years, and in 1910, in order that there might not be any encroaching of one committee's jurisdiction upon the other committee, there was written into the legislative bill, with the consent of Mr. Foss, who was at that time the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, this provision on page 98 of the legislative bill:

> No part of any appropriation made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for or on account of the Navy Department at Washington, D. C., except for personal services in certain bureaus as herein expressly authorized.

In addition to having provided in the legislative bill every dollar that the Navy Department asked for for the Naval Observatory we also provided on pages 92 and 93 for all the money that was asked for for the Hydrographic Office, yet they have given in the Senate, in amendment No. 12 of the naval bill, an appropriation of $90,000 which is made available in the Hydrographic Office here in Washington.

Mr. PADGETT. That is for ships which make hydrographic surveys and none of it is for the local office here. It is for hydrographic surveys, and so forth, and then the rest is for purchase of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. All of which we provide for.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the gentlemen do not. This has been in every bill for years. We have not increased it a single penny.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It never carried this proviso which is on page 12. It increases the amount available for the expenditure for the preparation of charts for the Hydrographic Office for which provision is made in the legislative bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say to the House we have not cut the Navy Department one dollar in its estimates for the Hydrographic Office. We gave it every dollar they asked for. Now, the evil of this kind of appropriation is this: If you permit one department to go to the legislative committee and ask for a given sum of money and the legislative committee grants that sum of money and that department then goes to the Committee on Naval Affairs and asks that they may be allowed to use a lump-sum appropriation for the same purpose, you can never keep any track upon the expenditures of that department. All of the expense ought to be in one bill or the other.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman's statement in reference to this I desire to say this $90,000 has been carried in the bill time out of mind. We have not added one cent to it. It is limited to the same purpose, except that we add this proviso:

> Provided, That as much of this appropriation as practicable shall be used in producing and preparing, by survey or otherwise, American charts and sailing directions to replace those of foreign production which now have to be purchased abroad.

In other words, we are dependent absolutely upon the British Admiralty for our charts and sailing directions, and this permits the use of money that has heretofore been appropriated and is carried in this bill to be used in making our own sailing directions and not be dependent upon buying them from the British Admiralty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not every maritime nation in the world purchase sailing charts and directions prepared by other countries of their own coasts? Do not we sell to Great Britain, the British Admiralty, the sailing charts and sailing directions of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we sell our coast-line charts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And we purchase them from all these other nations.

Mr. PADGETT. Those are not our coastwise——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Otherwise we would be compelled to send a vessel to make a survey of many coasts in order to obtain the information required. We must perfect a system of naval maritime observations and reports in order to get information about changes that are made from time to time. In addition to that, the gentleman did not read all of that proviso. He did not read the part that provides:

> And for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. PADGETT. Not exceeding five.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a limitation now upon the number.

Mr. PADGETT. It is limited to two. We have increased it to five, for the simple reason we are seven years behind in our work in preparing sailing directions, and we have now authorized an increase of the present law from two to five.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When did we become seven years behind?

Mr. PADGETT. We had that information. It has been going along, and that is the report that comes to us.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been in the Hydrographic Office and examined it and heard from the officials in charge of it, and I have never heard the suggestion that they were seven years behind in the preparation of our charts and sailing directions, and whoever furnished that information drew very vividly upon his overheated imagination.

Mr. PADGETT. I should say not. Capt. Washington came to see me personally and also filed with us a letter, and he stated to me personally that we were seven years behind in the preparation of our sailing directions, and that is why we authorized an increase; nothing indefinite, but from two to five, a whole increase of three.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. If I may return to amendment numbered 59, which was discussed a moment ago, but we could not hear very well what was said on that side of the House. How is the phraseology of this amendment as compared with existing practice? What change will be made if this amendment were enacted into law over what it now does?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the present practice, on account of rulings of the Department of Justice and the Comptroller of the Treasury, there are certain overhead charges which can not be charged to specific appropriations that are made for support and maintenance of the different bureaus.

Mr. MANN. How are these charges paid? If they can not be paid, how are they paid, and what are they paid out of?

Mr. PADGETT. They are paid out of the increase of the Navy for new construction.

Mr. MANN. They are charged to something.

Mr. PADGETT. For instance, they take and estimate the cost of the light and charge a certain percentage of that, a certain percentage of the heat and the power and transportation and various things, and charge that to the ship out of the increase of the Navy. They do not charge it up to the different appropriations made for the bureaus, except in case of repairs to ships.

Mr. MANN. Well, they must charge it to something, because they can not pay it without having the appropriation. Now, here is an appropriation for the increase of the Navy, torpedo boats; increase of the Navy, equipment; increase of the Navy, armor and armament; for instance, carried in this bill. These overhead charges are paid out of those appropriations, are they not?

Mr. PADGETT. So I understand; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. They must be charged to that, and charged to something now. How will that practice be changed?

Mr. PADGETT. It will be changed by the Secretary ascertaining, as nearly as he can, what is the exact cost on account of the building of that ship, and charge only what the ship occasioned in the increase of these overhead charges, instead of a percentage of the whole overhead charges of the yard.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is just as clear as mud to me. Is this a change that is recommended by the accounting officers?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The paymaster?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would yield me five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there were 72 amendments proposed by the Senate to this bill. It seems to me that the House conferees were a little easy when they went into conference, because I notice that on 37 of these 72 amendments the House promptly receded in the conference. On 12 the Senate receded, and of the 12 where the Senate receded 6 of them were where the Senate had proposed to make the appropriation available indefinitely and the House had proposed to make it available for a certain fixed time. So that on practically all of the amendments which amounted to anything at all, which covered anything that could possibly be in dispute, the Senate had its own way, and the House receded except as to the 12 amendments which were brought back into the House, and a number of those are simply as to whether the appropriation shall be made available indefinitely. On some of the amendments outside of the 37 the House conferees receded with amendments. For instance, there is a provision for the appointment of a committee on the subject of the manufacture of armor plate. The Senate had proposed the appointment of a committee to consist of one member to be named by the Senate chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, one member to be named by the House chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and one member to be named by the Navy Department. The gentlemen on the conference committee, consisting practically, or very largely, of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, changed this amendment so that they would not name members of this committee, but would themselves be the members of the committee. I suppose out of due modesty they did not wish to name themselves. Now, this committee is to report at the next session of Congress. Of course, we know that the Senator and the Member of the House, the chairmen of these committees, will be pretty well engaged this year, and will not have very much time to devote to this purpose, and practically the committee will be constituted of the one person in the Navy named by the Secretary of the Navy, which is granting a quite broad power to the Navy Department in reference to a matter of this importance.

There are other provisions, one of which has already been referred to, in reference to the Hydrographic Office. It is seriously proposed that we, instead of purchasing sailing charts and sailing directions, shall produce and prepare, by the survey or otherwise, all of our sailing charts and sailing directions. What an idiotic thing it would be if Great Britain would refuse to purchase our sailing charts and our sailing directions in reference to our own coast. How foolish it would seem if France and Germany should send surveyors or somebody over here to survey our coast and make sailing directions in reference to those matters. And yet it is proposed, solely for the purpose of providing shore duty for additional naval officers, to add to the number of naval officers who will engage in preparing these hydrographic charts.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has called attention to amendment No. 18, for general maintenance of yards and docks, $1,600,000, and the Senate has added an amendment to that to insert "the Naval Observatory." Now, nobody can tell what it will cost to maintain the Naval Observatory under this provision. For years we have been trying to put some limitation upon the Naval Observatory, which ought to be taken out entirely from the control of the Navy Department and transferred to one of the other departments of the Government. The Naval Observatory has nothing to do with the Navy, and yet here is a proposition, in spite of all that has been done for years, to limit the cost there and to require Congress to make specific appropriations for it—to give to the Navy Department $1,600,000 to use as it pleases at the Naval Observatory. I think it is a scandalous way to appropriate. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, this part with reference to the Naval Observatory I wish to say is not increased one cent under the appropriation. It is the same appropriation that has been carried for years, and is to carry all the items that it has heretofore carried, and out of this appropriation all that has heretofore been paid will have to be paid for—the maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, for general maintenance of yards and docks, and then we just simply added to it the Naval Observatory and make the appropriation the same, and make that fund pay all of the others and this also.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that the appropriation has been carried in this manner in naval appropriation bills which have heretofore passed Congress?

Mr. PADGETT. I said the appropriation in this bill is just the same as it has been all the time, and we have just included in it the Naval Observatory, requiring out of this same fund to be paid what it has always paid and the Naval Observatory in addition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And by adding that proviso the gentleman has given the authorities the right to use, if they desire, $1,600,000 for the Naval Observatory without any limitation at all.

Mr. PADGETT. We have not done anything of the kind.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is there any limitation on the use of any portion of this fund so far as the Naval Observatory is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. There is nothing expressed here, and nothing, so far as that is concerned, has been carried heretofore. Heretofore there was nothing limiting the appropriation for maps, or models, or drawings, or purchase and repair of fire engines; nothing limiting it for fire apparatus or for machinery or for the purchase and maintenance of horses and driving teams. The Navy Department had this sum for all these purposes, and we have simply added to these purposes the Naval Observatory, the maintenance and care of the grounds.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, will the gentleman yield to this question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of the fact that the legislative bill, which passed this House, granted every dollar that the Naval Observatory asked for by way of repairs and preservation, why have the conferees seen fit to add a provision in this bill giving the Naval Observatory unlimited funds for the same purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. You did not provide for that. This says:

For general maintenance of yards and docks and Naval Observatory, namely: For books, maps, models, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire engines; fire apparatus and plants; machinery; purchase and maintenance of horses and driving teams; carts, timber wheels, and all vehicles, including motor-propelled vehicles for freight-carrying purposes only for use in the navy yards; tools and repair of the same; stationery; furniture for Government houses and offices in navy yards and naval stations; coal and other fuel; candles, oil, and gas; attendance on light and power plants; cleaning and clearing up yards and care of buildings; attendance on fires, lights, fire engines, and fire apparatus and plants; incidental labor at navy yards; water tax, tolls, and ferriage; pay of watchmen in navy yards; awnings and packing boxes; and for pay of employees on leave, $1,600,000.

In other words, the whole maintenance of these things in these establishments throughout the length and breadth of the Navy has been cared for, and must be cared for, out of this appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me read to the gentleman a provision in the legislative bill in regard to the Naval Observatory:

For fuel, oil, grease, pipe, wire, and other materials needed for the maintenance and repair of boilers, engines, heating apparatus, electric lighting and power plant, and water-supply system; purchase and maintenance of teams; material for boxing nautical instruments for transportation; paints, telegraph and telephone service, and incidental labor.

Now, if that does not cover the same things contained in this bill, I am unable to understand the difference between the language.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not, and that has been carried in your bill for years, and this bill has carried this identical language for years, and the only thing we have added to it is the Naval Observatory as an incumbrance on the appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And that is the only complaint we offer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman state the amount of the unexpended balance left over last year from the maintenance appropriation for yards and docks?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was $110,000; so that if that language—"Naval Observatory"—had been included in that paragraph last year, after paying all the charges for maintenance of yards and docks, they could have expended $110,000 for the maintenance of the Naval Observatory.

Another thing: This is the appropriation out of which the Navy Department has been buying certain automobiles, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman had read the report of information furnished to Congress at the request of the Senate committee, he would have ascertained.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not seen the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a very voluminous one. For instance, at the navy yard here at Washington they have certain automobile delivery trucks which carry subsistence supplies purchased by naval officers from the commissary and deliver them to their houses in town. Now, if the Naval Observatory is included in this appropriation there is nothing to prevent the superintendent of that observatory from having purchased for him as a matter of convenience between the observatory and the city an automobile for his use, just as an automobile has been purchased for the personal use of the Secretary of War out of the appropriation for transportation of the Army, to be used in the city of Washington.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not, because it says here "including motor-propelled vehicles for freight-carrying purposes only for use in the navy yards," and it limits the motor-propelled vehicles for freight purposes in the navy yards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, the purpose of this is to give more money for the Naval Observatory than has been specifically provided in the legislative bill, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then why is it included here?

Mr. PADGETT. So that it can be accounted for under yards and docks and go under the supervision of that bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It should not be under that bureau, because two years ago I addressed a communication to every prominent astronomer in the United States connected with every institution of learning, and every one of them agreed that the Naval Observatory, in order to be effective and have any standing at all in the scientific world, should be taken out of the Navy Department and put either in the Smithsonian Institution or in some other institution wholly devoted to scientific purposes. To put the Naval Observatory under the Bureau of Yards and Docks would be a farce of the worst character.

Mr. PADGETT. The maintenance of its property ought to be under yards and docks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the maintenance of its property ought to be under the officials who maintain and control it. Some independent bureau official should have nothing to do with its maintenance.

Mr. TAVENNER and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee for a little more detailed information respecting amendments 46, 47, and 48, in relation to chaplains in the Navy. I have a number of circulars here, which seem to be based on statements made in the hearings. I would like to have some information concerning the increased number, also concerning the rank——

Mr. PADGETT. The number of chaplains in the Navy was fixed in 1842 and has not been increased since. The House committee reported out the provision that has been put in the conference report. It went out in the House on a point of order and was inserted in the Senate, and the conferees agreed to it.

I will say to the gentleman that every Protestant denomination in the United States has indorsed and approved and asked for the incorporation of this amendment. I will state also that the Catholic Church has indorsed and approved it. There has been no sectional or partisan or religious bias or feeling on the matter at all. All the churches are cooperating upon it. The representatives of 31 of the Protestant churches and the Catholic representative, and the Episcopalian representative who was not in the 31 that I mentioned, appeared before our committee and unanimously joined in the request and approved it.

I will state further that since that time the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church, the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church adopted resolutions indorsing and approving this legislation and asking for its enactment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. One question more. These circulars seemed to indicate that the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, in his report asked the Naval Committee of the House for 24 welfare secretaries, and said he would not advise any rank for chaplains and for the religious officers and workers, and so on.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary asked for an increase of chaplains and also asked for 24—I believe it was—welfare secretaries. The committee reported the provision with reference to the chaplains, but did not approve that for welfare secretaries.

As Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, suggested before the committee, enlisted men of the ship can well be used. Deserving, worthy young men already in the service can be used to better advantage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This circular also says that Rear Admiral Victor Blue opposed giving such high rank and authority to the chaplains, and——

Mr. PADGETT. We do not change the rank. We leave it just as it has been since time immemorial.

Mr. HOWARD. Is there any provision in the naval regulations requiring an enlisted man who has a certain religious belief to attend the services on board ship? For illustration, is there any provision that requires a member of the Catholic Church to attend a Presbyterian meeting or a Presbyterian to attend a Catholic meeting or vice versa?

Mr. PADGETT. Since the gentleman talked with me personally I have made some inquiry, and I was informed that there are no compulsory regulations.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand, every enlisted man in the Navy is allowed to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience and heart.

Mr. PADGETT. I so understand it.

Mr. HOWARD. And there is no enforcement of attendance upon religious services?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand the men are allowed freedom of choice.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if the chaplain does not make his own regulations relating to religious service, and does not the gentleman know that he does?

Mr. PADGETT. No; there are certain regulations made by the department.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman produce any departmental regulations or any regulations made by anybody except the chaplain?

Mr. PADGETT. The chaplain conducts his service on board ship as any other minister would, but the chaplains are under naval regulations as well as other officers.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The private and subordinate officers are under the control of superior officers, and they should be, but there should be no ranking and superior officer who could encroach upon the religious freedom of the enlisted men. Will the gentleman tell this House how many religious denominations have passed resolutions against this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard of any.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have not? I have.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that the committee has not given these chaplains additional authority and given them $5,000 a year salary?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then you have changed it since it was before the Naval Committee?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not change it in the House. We left the rank and pay the same as they have been all the time. We simply increased the number.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If I understand you, then you have materially improved the bill since the House struck it out. Did not Admiral Blue say he thought chaplains should have no rank whatever?

Mr. PADGETT. He said he did not think the chaplains ought to have rank, but they have had rank ever since 1842.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if Secretary Daniels did not make a statement to the same effect—that he did not think they ought to have rank?

Mr. PADGETT. Secretary Daniels said if it was an original proposition he did not think chaplains, doctors, and various others should have rank in the Navy; but they have had it for generations, and we are not attempting to interfere with that. We have left all that just the same, and have simply increased the number.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think they ought to have naval rank, giving them official authority.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The bill before the House reads as follows:

The total number of chaplains and acting chaplains herein authorized, 10 per cent thereof shall have the rank of captain in the Navy, 20 per cent the rank of commander, 20 per cent the rank of lieutenant commander, and the remainder to have the rank of lieutenants and lieutenants, junior grade.

Mr. Chairman, a chaplain who has been located at Washington Navy Yard, where every man knows there is no necessity of placing a chaplain, stated before the Naval Committee as follows:

The chaplain asks for no favor; he simply asks only for a fair chance to do his work, and that which is essential to his position in the Navy, rank, pay, and allowances up to and including the grade of captain. The chaplain is now deprived of the pay of his rank in the grades of commander and captain.

Mr. Chairman, please note the importance this chaplain places on the word "rank." For the word "rank" insert the word "authority," as the words are synonymous in the Army and Navy. Now, Mr. Chairman, following that statement, which truly explains this bill, I read you the Constitution of the United States, which says:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

I contend that what I have said about giving chaplains rank and authority is justified by the Constitution. When this question was being considered before the Naval Committee I made the following statement:

Mr. TRIBBLE. We do not have at other colleges where young men are brought together such religious services provided, and I do not see why the United States Government should undertake to provide the religion of the people. I have been raised in Sunday schools and churches and have been taught to go to church all my life, and I expect to keep it up. I am here to help provide fighting forces, but I think churches of the country ought to take care of the religious part of it. I am perfectly willing to provide chaplains aboard ships, who should have no rank and authority, but I shall resist any other movement on the floor of the House.

When the provision was considered in the House, it went out on my motion, but it was replaced in the bill in the Senate. I am pleased to see this House return the bill to conference without accepting the Senate amendment. Admiral Blue is one of the best officers of the Navy—reared in South Carolina. He appeared first before the Naval Committee and was questioned closely by the committee in regard to chaplains. I will read part of his statement:

Admiral BLUE. I have never believed in military rank for chaplains. I believe that the term "chaplain" ought to be a rank in itself, and not qualified by a military rank or title. A chaplain should bear the same relation toward the officers and crew of the ship that a priest or pastor of a church bears toward his congregation. The idea of military rank is, to my mind, inconsistent with such a relation. In the British Navy a chaplain has no military rank.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is not that commission more for the purpose of fixing his pay and status?

Mr. TALBOTT. You could do that without giving him rank.

Admiral BLUE. The status of a chaplain is well understood in all military services and there is no question as to the consideration and respect given him on account of his cloth and high calling. It needs no military rank to fix it. The pay could be based on length of service. A chaplain has no military authority.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would he be given any more respect aboard a battleship if his rank were higher?

Admiral BLUE. I do not think so. I think the question of military rank should be left out. I do not wish to speak in derogation of our chaplains generally, but I have seen in the past some of them who do what we call "stand on rank"; and rank, of course, especially high rank, is conducive of a spirit of superiority, which is incompatible with a proper relationship between a clergyman and his congregation. A chaplain should, of course, have dignity, but not such as to lessen the mutual sympathy that should exist between him and the crew.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does the rank of captain carry the pay of captain?

Admiral BLUE. It does; it is the same thing.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that I have done my full duty on this question. It was not my purpose to inject denominational questions, nor have I done so. No reasonable man can criticize anything I have said. Being a member of the Naval Committee, I felt called upon to present the facts before the House, and my remarks have been entirely based on the written record. I did not raise the question, nor did I make the record; but, Mr. Chairman, I have planted myself squarely on the Constitution and no man has assailed that position.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes——

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman reserve one minute for me?

Mr. PADGETT. I will reserve one minute for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and five minutes——

Mr. HENSLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question or two. I want to inquire about the item concerning Pearl Harbor.

Mr. PADGETT. That is not in conference. That is before the House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman has just said that there were 32 religious denominations who appeared before the Naval Committee to ask for this change.

Mr. PADGETT. I said the representatives of 32 denominations.

Mr. TRIBBLE. There were three men who appeared before the Naval Committee. Is not that a fact?

Mr. PADGETT. No; there were half a dozen.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And one of those men purported to represent 31 religious denominations?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and he had his credentials.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Who gave these credentials to him, the naval chaplains?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the Confederated Council of the Churches of Christ in America is the organization of which he is the official secretary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not going to have any five minutes to yield——

Mr. PADGETT. How much time have I now?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER].

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, even if I am the only Member to do so, I intend to vote against the adoption of this conference report, because it provides for an investigation of the cost of an armor plant instead of providing for the plant itself. An armor plant will save to the people from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 annually; an investigation only will leave the Government still at the mercy of the armor ring and save nothing. There have been nine investigations of the cost of armor, one of the inquiries having been made only last year. Whenever the sentiment of the country has been in favor of a Government armor plant, Congress has provided only for an investigation. All the armor manufacturers want to do is to escape a Government armor plant for the present and they will always be able to take care of it for the future.

The first investigation was in 1896. Secretary of the Navy Herbert and a board of naval officers investigated the cost of armor, and they reported that armor could be manufactured for $247 a ton. Ten years later there was another investigation by four different officers and boards, and they reported that the average cost of a ton of armor was $230. The average of nine official estimates as to the cost of manufacturing a ton of armor is $247. We have bought 192,000 tons of armor, and have paid an average of $441.42 a ton, or about $200 a ton more than nine official investigators have reported that it would cost to manufacture armor. If we can have this conference report rejected, we will get the first opportunity this House has ever had to vote on the proposition of a Government armor factory.

If we can vote the conference report down, I intend to offer this amendment:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels heretofore or herein provided for at a price which, in his judgment, is reasonable and equitable, he is hereby authorized and directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor and gun forgings; and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory and the purchase of a site therefor.

Now, that is the same provision that was in the naval appropriation bill for 1900, and it gave the Secretary of the Navy, if he could not obtain a square deal from the armor-plate manufacturers, the authority to manufacture armor. What was the result? Why, it saved the Government millions of dollars.

The price of armor plate had been $658 in 1893, and Senator TILLMAN, by fighting this price, finally got it down to $413. When this provision was put in the naval bill, the Secretary of the Navy was able to demand a square deal from the armor-plate people, and they ultimately reduced the price from $413.42 in 1900 to $345.92 in 1906, which is the lowest price we have ever had. When that provision was not continued in the naval bill, the moral effect of the provision wore off, and the companies gradually have been increasing the price ever since 1906, until now it has got up to $454.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, who is the first Secretary of the Navy, in my opinion, who has ever shown complete independence of the armor ring, should have what he asked for—an armor plant—instead of an additional unnecessary investigation. Here is what the Secretary of the Navy asks. He does not ask for an investigation, but, in his last annual report, he says:

> I desire to recommend the passage at the earliest moment of a sufficient appropriation to begin the construction of a Government armor plant to relieve a situation which, in my estimation, is intolerable and at total variance with the principle of economy in spending Government money.

Now, while the armor-plate manufacturers were selling armor plate for $249 a ton to Russia, they were selling it to the United States for $616 a ton. We do not owe the armor-plate manufacturers anything. We have thrown them $140,000,000 and more, and Mr. Carnegie has himself said that he has made millionaires out of 43 men.

So there must be huge profits in the armor-plate business; and, now that the Government has generously permitted a considerable colony of steel manufacturers to lay up sufficient millions to keep the wolf from their doors through the remainder of their days as a reward for their thrift and genius, Congress should, instead of creating a fresh colony of steel magnates at the expense of the people, seriously begin to think of saving some of these millions to the American taxpayers.

I hope that the Members will take advantage of the first opportunity that we have had to vote on an armor-plate amendment, which, however, does not provide for an armor-plate factory unless they do not give the Secretary a fair and equitable price. There will not be a factory built unless they refuse to give the Secretary of the Navy a fair price; and if they do not, there ought to be a factory built. I believe that this amendment, if adopted, would save the Government millions of dollars a year, whether we build the plant or not, by the mere fact that the Secretary of the Navy has the right to establish a plant if he can not obtain fair treatment. I agree with the Secretary of the Navy, who says that if we build a plant and put a padlock on its doors as soon as it is completed, and never operate it, it will save to the people its entire cost simply by enabling him to get a fair and reasonable price from the manufacturers of armor plate. Now, as I have said, there have been nine investigations; and I hope that the House will vote this conference report down and give us a chance to vote on this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I can not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] as to the troubles which seem to afflict him. I can not quite agree that everybody has been robbing everybody else. I can not agree that all the business men of this country are the thieves that modern critics would seem to make them out to be. I do not believe the War Department is corrupt as has been intimated. I do not believe that the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance has been such a crook as might be inferred from what has been said here in debate. I do not believe that amendment 59, which gives direction to the Secretary of the Navy to adjust his figures minus overhead charges on battleships so as to put private yards out of business, ought to be passed, as indicated; nor do I believe that amendment 67, which proposes to erect a Government armor-plate factory should be passed if the purpose of it is to put outside armor-plate manufacturers out of business. Independent shipyards and independent armor-plate factories have their uses. I believe a man who makes an investment in a business which employs labor and serves the Government as well, ought to have a show for his white alley, just as the man who is aggrieved ought to have the right to go into court for justice or protection. Men who have the capital, invest millions in shipyards and armor-plate factories and apparently they are encouraged to do so, but after they have done so the Government proposes to enter into competition with them, and by this legislation would give the Secretary of the Navy the power, in his discretion, to mark down charges for the construction of a battleship in a Government plant, to such an extent that all competition would be out of the question. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask leave to extend my remarks briefly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. I do not contend that Federal provision for shipbuilding or the making of armor plate might not promote a healthy competition, but I believe if the Government in any competition with private manufacturers has the right to mark off certain overhead charges it will not only have the power to control competition but it may eventually destroy it. No shipbuilding plant can be started without money, nor can any armor-plate factory, and where the work is intermittent some allowance must be made for the carrying charges of the plant. I question whether it would be a good thing for the Government to build all of its own ships or all of its own armor plate. The Government should receive fair treatment from shipbuilders and armor-plate manufacturers, and if it is too weak to obtain fair treatment in this respect it is a grave question whether, so far as the people are concerned, it would do any better by setting up business on its own account and throwing out of employment the thousands of men who are now engaged in independent enterprises. It has been said with respect to one or two battleships recently built by the Government that they cost more than if they had been built in private yards. It is generally believed that Government construction of ships is more expensive than if built by independent yards. Those yards have to be fully equipped and must carry maintenance and overhead charges in order to fulfill Government contracts, even though the latter are not continuous. If the Government, entering into competition with such yards, is to be permitted to bid so that maintenance of plant, heat, light, power, and attendance, inspection, oversight, and regular salaried officers and men impressed into the service are to be checked off because they are paid for out of separate appropriations, it is plain that independent builders having to carry all these expenses would soon be eliminated, while the public would be deceived as to the kind of economy thus attempted.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the statement was made some time ago that this amendment was intended to provide berths and shore stations for naval officers. I want to state that the increase is only three; the present law provides for two and this authorizes an increase to five because we are seven years behind in our work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. Must this report be voted upon as a whole or can it be segregated?

The SPEAKER. It is to be voted upon as a unit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what became of the point of order that was made by the gentleman from Illinois?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. He withdrew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois never made any point of order. He reserved the right to make a point of order and then withdrew the reservation. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division there were 27 ayes and 81 noes.

So the conference report was not agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. There are certain amendments on which no agreement was reached Will the passing of this motion in any way affect the status of those amendments on which there has been no agreement or interfere in any way with the agreement the chairman of the committee made the other day that we would have a separate vote on these amendments on which no agreement has been made?

The SPEAKER. This motion has nothing to do with that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendments Nos. 28, 29, 33, 34, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, 71, and 12.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman include 72?

Mr. MANN. Twelve and 18.

Mr. BRYAN. That is all I wanted, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty-nine goes with 18.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and 39.

Mr. FOSTER. And 72?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Senate receded on that.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendment No. 67.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for a separate vote on amendments Nos. 28, 29, 33, 34, 39, 40, 53, 57, 63, 64, 65, 68, 71, 12, and 18 and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] asks for a separate vote on amendment No. 67.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker I desire to affer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The time has not yet arrived for that. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to disagree to the Senate amendments, except those that have been named by the Chair, and ask for a further conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire whether it is now in order to ask that there be a separate vote on amendment No. 59?

The SPEAKER. That amendment has been disagreed to in the motion just agreed to. The Clerk will report amendment No. 12, on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, amendment No. 12, after the figures "$90,000," in line 1, insert the following:

"Provided, That as much of this appropriation as practicable shall be used in producing and preparing, by survey or otherwise, American charts and sailing directions to replace those of foreign production which now have to be purchased abroad; and for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 12 and agree to the same with an amendment, by adding, in line 7, after the word "officers," the words "not exceeding five."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 7, after the word "officers," insert the words "not exceeding five."

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair will state the motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 12 and to agree to the same with the amendment which has just been reported by the Clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me a few minutes on that.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail. A few years ago it was ascertained that the Hydrographic Office was a place where a number of naval officers were very comfortably assigned for shore duty. As a result of the investigation that was made a limitation was placed in the law prohibiting the detailing of more than two naval officers to the Hydrographic Office. There has been a continued attempt to increase the number of men assigned there. The Senate proposed that there should be no limit at all upon the number of naval officers assigned to the Hydrographic Office. It is now proposed that there shall be not exceeding five. The appropriations for the Hydrographic Office are carried in the legislative bill. Ninety thousand dollars has been carried in the naval appropriation bill to pay for the work of the Navy in connection with the soundings in places away from the United States so as to prevent a conflict between the Hydrographic Office and the Coast and Geodetic Survey. We have been purchasing, as all other nations purchase, our sailing directions and charts issued by similar offices of other nations. If the purpose of this amendment is, as it is expressed, to prepare, by survey or otherwise, these charts and sailing directions that we are now purchasing, it needs the establishment of a vast system of observation and report that will enable the information to be kept current as to the condition of various channels and coasts.

We maintain some such system as that in this country, and we have reports made by navigators of merchant vessels to the Hydrographic Office in order to keep our charts and sailing directions up to date. It would take a sum that can not be readily computed to organize such a force and to obtain such information from places beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. It seems to me that it would be the height of folly to propose that we should attempt to reproduce these foreign sailing charts and sailing directions in such a manner.

If it were merely the production by photolithographic process of charts that might be purchased, it would be one thing; but to do as the amendment provides, by survey or otherwise reproduce these charts, would be to start us upon a line of work that will very largely increase our expenditures and will make practically impossible, in my opinion, the obtaining of charts that are desired. The British Admiralty relies upon the sailing charts and sailing directions issued by this Government for the coasts of the United States. We rely upon the work of other nations. In time of war not only will they be withheld, but all the aids to navigation will be eliminated as far as possible, so as to prevent foreign navies entering in safety our harbors or invading our waters. I hope this motion will not prevail.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to state under existing law the Hydrographic Office have on detail two naval officers. This provision allows an increase to five, an addition of three. I want to call attention of the House to a memorandum which I have, which is as follows:

MEMORANDUM TO ACCOMPANY PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL IN RE DETAIL OF OFFICERS TO THE HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1914.

The legislative, executive, and judicial bill, enacted June, 1910, restricted the number of naval officers detailed or employed in the Hydrographic Office to two, the number detailed to duty at the time of passage of this act being eight. It is impossible, with this reduced number of naval officers, to properly carry on the work of that office.

The following work had to be stopped as a result of the reduction in number of officers: Old sailing directions requiring revision; compilation of new sailing directions (43 different volumes being purchased abroad); compilation of station catalogues of charts; and inspection of branch hydrographic offices.

The following work can not be properly supervised on account of lack of officers: Ocean surveying, chart drafting, chart correction, chart printing, and chart issue.

In general, much of the work fails to receive proper superintendence and supervision, and the administration work suffers from the hydrographer's attention being necessarily directed too much to details.

The naval bill appropriates under "Ocean and lake surveys," $90,000, enabling the Hydrographic Office to produce metallic chart plates of oceans and harbors of the world to replace such foreign charts as now have to be purchased abroad. To properly carry out this work, it is absolutely essential that the Hydrographic Office should have a proper complement, or at least a sufficiency of officers.

The work of the Hydrographic Office has been crippled as a result of the reduction of naval officers on duty to two in the following respects:

It has been necessary to put one officer in charge of two divisions of said office (such as the Division of Sailing Directions and the Division of Chart Supply). There had been heretofore assigned an officer to each main division of the office. A single officer in charge of more than one division is physically unable to give the personal attention and supervision required to any one of them to produce the best results from either.

The compilation of new volumes of sailing directions for the coasts of the West Indies, east and west coasts of Mexico, Central America, and South America has been greatly delayed, due to the lack of officers to edit them. And a further consequence of this lack of officers has made it necessary to purchase from the British Admiralty copies of 43 different publications of sailing directions covering various parts of the world not covered by American publications, and which are absolutely necessary for the safe navigation of the vessels of our Navy and merchant marine.

It is absolutely necessary that these British Admiralty publications be replaced by publications from this office covering the same parts of the world, since in war time it might be impossible to procure them at all, and would be absolutely impossible to procure them on short notice when outfitting our vessels. Congress has already appropriated for the reproduction in this office of all British Admiralty charts, and it is fully as necessary that the necessary officers should be assigned this office to reproduce and edit the British Admiralty sailing directions.

The system of inspection of branch hydrographic offices and the incidental instruction of officers of the naval militia in the use of charts and in navigation generally had to be given up, as there was no officer available for this duty.

There being but two officers in the Hydrographic Office, the hydrographer had to take up details of work, which seriously interfered with the time he should have devoted to the administration of the office. There being but two officers on duty, it was impracticable for either one of them to get the usual vacation in the summer, and if either had been taken sick there would have been no one to have taken up his work.

The work of the Hydrographic Office is essentially technical and naval in character, and for that office to maintain its well-earned reputation it is necessary that there should be an adequate number of officers assigned to duty therein. In spite of every effort to maintain the standard of its work, if errors have not crept in it is due largely to good luck rather than to a sufficiency of force.

The assignment of additional officers to duty in the Hydrographic Office will enable a greater output of work, an ability to meet the need of the Navy and mercantile marine, and will involve not a cent of additional expense to the Government.

The Senate adopted an amendment for an indefinite detail. The conference committee reported a limitation of five, restricting the increase to three, which is clearly demanded, and I hope that the motion will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 19, after the word "docks," insert the words "and Naval Observatory."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 18 and 39 be considered together, as both affect the same thing.

The SPEAKER. What are the numbers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Eighteen and thirty-nine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 18 and 39 be voted on together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report amendment No. 39.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, at the beginning of line 16, insert the words "and Naval Observatory."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the indication of the wishes of the House, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to these two amendments.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman satisfied with the disposition of the House?

Mr. PADGETT. I am.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 28, page 24, line 4, after the word "Virginia," strike out the word "repairs" and insert "new dry dock (cost not to exceed $3,000,000), $200,000; repairs."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment No. 28.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 28.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 28 and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to be heard?

Mr. HOLLAND. I made the motion to recede and concur, and I would like to discuss that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour in which to discuss it if he wishes to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. I have the time.

Mr. HOLLAND. I would like to discuss the motion.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOLLAND. It will not take very long.

Mr. PADGETT. Ten minutes?

Mr. HOLLAND. I will try to finish in 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I regret I should feel that the House Committee on Naval Affairs has been hardly fair with the Norfolk Navy Yard. I am not going to attribute it to any political or sectional consideration. I would regret to believe that it was due in any sense to the fact that Virginia has no representative on the committee while Massachusetts and New York each has one member and Pennsylvania certainly three, if not four. I do not know the reason for this apparent discrimination against the Norfolk Navy Yard. I do know, however, that the Committee on Naval Affairs has substantially followed every recommendation of the department as to Boston, as to New York, and as to Philadelphia, and has substantially ignored every recommendation of the department as to the Norfolk Navy Yard. One of the items included by the Secretary of the Navy in the estimates submitted by him for the current year was an initial appropriation of $200,000 for a dry dock at the Norfolk Navy Yard. That recommendation of the Navy Department the House Committee on Naval Affairs declined to follow. When the bill went to the Senate it was so amended as to include this item. I believe that the amendment is just and fair and should be concurred in.

By whom, Mr. Speaker, has this dry dock been recommended? In 1911 the Joint Army and Navy Board reported to Secretary Meyer that additional docking facilities ought to be made at the Norfolk yard. In his annual report for the year 1912 Secretary Meyer asked that provision be made for one additional dock on the Atlantic coast and one additional dock on the Pacific coast. He made no recommendation as to the place, but I am reliably informed that both he and Secretary Winthrop favored the location of this dock at Norfolk.

The General Board of the Navy has for the past four years repeatedly urged the construction of a new dry dock at Norfolk. The Board of Inspection for Shore Stations, composed of Admiral Edwards and other distinguished naval experts, only recently reported that additional docking facilities were needed at Norfolk. The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and, in fact, all the naval experts, without a single exception, so far as I can now recall, have recommended that a new dry dock should be located at the Norfolk Navy Yard. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt, has expressed himself strongly in favor of it. The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, has declared that the location of a new dry dock at Norfolk is a military necessity. These constitute the naval experts and authorities of the department. Not one of them, so far as I can recall, lives in my district or in my State. They can therefore have no local interest or local bias in this proposition. They are the men upon whom we rely for advice as to all matters affecting the Navy. They are the men upon whom we depend in time of war. They are the men that we hold responsible for the condition of the Navy, the condition of the navy yards, and the condition of our ships. They are the men upon whose recommendation and upon whose advice every single item of appropriation in this bill has been made.

Now, if we are willing to follow the recommendations of the experts and the authorities of the Navy Department as to all other yards, why should we not also be willing to follow them as to the Norfolk yard?

Mr. Speaker, why was Norfolk selected as the place at which this new dry dock should be built? In the first place, the Norfolk Navy Yard, with Hampton Roads, possesses all the requirements for a great navy yard and a great naval base. The Norfolk yard is superior to all other yards on the Atlantic coast. That, Mr. Speaker, is not my statement. It is the statement of a joint Army and Navy board, made in its report to Secretary Meyer.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. Just for a question.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That is all I want.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Very well.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. You stated this was a fine place for a navy-yard dry dock. Do you think we ought to have one because it is a fine place for it——

Mr. HOLLAND. Not at all.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Wait a minute, until I ask you the question. Or do you think we ought to build a dry dock there when it is necessary?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think, Mr. Speaker, that a dry dock ought to be built there when it is necessary, and I believe it is necessary now. I wish to say further that the Norfolk yard was recommended because more naval ships and vessels visit this yard for repairs and necessary dockings and Hampton Roads for coal, ammunition and supplies than visit all the other yards on the Atlantic coast combined. In 1912, 1,137 naval vessels visited Boston, Philadelphia, and New York, and 1,304 visited Norfolk and Hampton Roads. In 1913, 914 vessels visited Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and 1,392 visited Norfolk and Hampton Roads. This yard was also recommended because Hampton Roads is the naval rendezvous for the fleet. The fleet's southern drill grounds are near the Capes. Vessels pass and repass it in going to and returning from all points south of Hatteras. Vessels in distress on the Atlantic coast invariably seek this yard because it is easiest to reach. During the years ending in August last there were docked at this yard 144 naval ships and vessels. There were docked at the other yards on the Atlantic coast, including New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, only 187. More than 40 per cent of all the ships and vessels of the Navy are docked at this yard.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me a little more time?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLAND. I regret, Mr. Speaker, I will not have time to discuss this question fully. Some objections have been made to the location of the dock at Norfolk that are not real objections, but mere pretexts for opposing the improvement. Suffice it to say, the General Board of the Navy knew what the exact conditions of this yard were when they recommended that a new dry dock should be built there. You must, therefore, reach one of two conclusions, either that these conditions will be satisfactory to meet all the requirements of the Navy when the dock is completed, or else that the members of the General Board are incompetent and ought to be removed from office. Certainly they would not recommend Norfolk as a fit and suitable place at which to locate the dock unless they honestly believed it.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have not time to yield. I have not time sufficient to go into the matter fully now. Is a new dry dock needed at Norfolk?

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] asked me if I wished to build a dry dock at any point unless it was necessary. I wish to say to him that if he will follow the advice which a majority of this committee seem to have followed in making other appropriations in this bill he will reach the conclusion that a dry dock at Norfolk is necessary. Why, all the experts——

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOLLAND. One minute. I can not yield.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. You should not misrepresent a man.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not wish to do so, and will not intentionally.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I do not want you to misrepresent me.

Mr. HOLLAND. All the experts of the Navy, without exception, have recommended the dry dock at Norfolk, and have declared that a new dry dock is needed there. The Board of Inspection for Shore Stations in its recent report declared that the most important improvement needed at the Norfolk yard, and the one which should be provided at the earliest possible time, is a new dry dock of the largest dimensions. The General Board of the Navy has declared that a new dry dock at this station is one of the Navy's needs.

The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt, has said:

> The necessity for this dock has been strongly represented to me by the General Board of the Navy and by all the experts and authorities of the Navy Department.

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, has declared:

> I would not have urged this action upon Congress were I not convinced that it was a real military necessity that ought to be made available as soon as possible.

Now, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] says that no dry dock is needed there. Possibly he will say that it is not needed because one of the dry docks at Norfolk was occupied only 278 days last year. It is true that the docks are not occupied every day in the year, but that is no proof that the docking facilities at the yard are adequate. If my friend were a surgeon and had a hospital with only three rooms in it, he would add no more until every single one of those rooms were occupied every day in the year by patients, although he might be called upon repeatedly during the year to turn patients away for lack of room.

The disabled warship Vermont was recently docked at the Norfolk yard. The battleship Delaware, which convoyed the Vermont to Norfolk, was found to need examination. There was only one dock there in which the Delaware could be docked, and that was occupied by the Vermont. It was necessary to undock the Vermont before any repairs on it had been made and dock the Delaware. In the meantime the Louisiana and the New Hampshire had reached the station, and it was necessary to delay the docking of these warships until the repairs on the Delaware could be completed. Just the same situation is liable to occur at any time. Injuries to ships requiring prompt dockings are also liable to occur at any time. Such delays might be dangerous, although unavoidable.

It must also be remembered that the large dock now there may be damaged at any time and may have to be repaired, or that it may have to be used for a considerable time by some ship undergoing extensive repairs. What facilities would you then have at the yard for the actual needs of the fleet? Can you say that it is not wise to provide for such contingencies? The experts of the Navy say that such a dock is needed at this yard. They know more about the needs of the Navy than we do. They have studied these questions carefully and have reached this conclusion after the most painstaking investigation. They have given their best years to the service of the Navy, and are supposed to recommend what, in their judgment, is best for the Navy. Their experience makes them safe advisers. Shall we take their advice or follow the advice of the committee? I believe it is safest to follow the advice of the naval experts and authorities. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee kindly yield to me half a minute?

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman half a minute for a question.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] to state to the House where they would locate the proposed dock at Norfolk?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not a naval expert, Mr. Speaker. That will be left to the experts of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The half minute is up.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this dry dock, because there is absolutely no necessity for it, and everybody who has ever studied the American Navy and knows the conditions and the facts surrounding it would be forced to admit that we do not need it. The only effect and use of it is to squander $3,000,000 of the people's money.

Now I want to state a few facts to you about it. Last year the Committee on Naval Affairs visited every navy yard and every naval station from Panama to Frenchmans Bay. We saw every dry dock on the Atlantic coast. My recollection is that every one of them was vacant, every one of them was absolutely idle, so far as battleships were concerned. There was not one in use at the time by a battleship, and there are about 20 such docks, I believe. However, in one dry dock there were a couple of old target frames that had been injured and had been put in there for repair. In another one there were a couple of destroyers that were being repaired, and in still another one there was one small battleship that was being painted. All the balance of them were idle and useless.

When some of these fellows appeared before the Naval Committee, who were urging us to squander $3,000,000 at Norfolk and $3,000,000 at Philadelphia and everywhere else, I asked them how it happened that when the Committee on Naval Affairs visited these dry docks they were not being used. One of them said, "Well, you just happened to be there at a time when they were not using them." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, will my friend permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will you be kind enough to tell the House how many days the present dry docks at Norfolk are occupied during the year?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. No; but I can tell the House that they are vacant a large part of the time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Wait a minute; I can not yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Now, the facts are given by the naval experts that it takes 25 hours to dock a battleship and take it out of the dry dock. We have 39 battleships. The Norfolk dock is large enough to dock any battleship we have, and every battleship in the Navy can be docked at Norfolk in 40 days. We have three other dry docks that are large enough to dock the largest battleship that we have besides Norfolk, and a great many other smaller docks. I believe they all amount to about 20.

I talked to a very intelligent naval officer about that. I asked him to explain to me why they had so many dry docks when they were idle and not used.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wondered whether it would not be wise to have a lot of docks, even if we never used them, so that we could use them when we wanted to use them in case of need.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That is not involved here. We have already got 20. Why do you want to squander $3,000,000 more for another one?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not saying what I would do.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Well, you made a suggestion that meant that.

Now, I asked a naval officer who knows what he is talking about to tell me how many dry docks, in his judgment, it would take to do all the work of the American Navy; how many it would take to serve every ship we have got; and he said six would be the greatest abundance.

This dry-dock business is just like all the other sinister features of this Navy—it is to squander the public funds. We do not need any more dry docks. We have already got more than we can use; and if you will take the tables furnished in the report of the Secretary, you will see that our dry docks are idle at every navy yard that we have during a large part of the time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything at all about the merits of this particular dry dock; but I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] ought to be corrected in some of the statements that he made.

To begin with, the gentleman stated that it took just 25 hours to dock a battleship and take it from the dock. That may be true; but the fair assumption is that a battleship does not go into dry dock merely to go in and be taken out; that she goes into a dry dock for a given purpose; and it is not safe to assume that she can be taken out in 25 hours.

Now, the fact that we were not repairing ships in the dry docks when the gentleman saw the docks is not evidence that we do not need the docks. It would be wise to have them, even if we never had to use them at all. It would be an evidence of the proper navigation of the ships if the ships were never called upon to be put into the docks. But if perchance a condition arose when a ship had to be docked, and we had no dock, we would be in a rather awkward predicament.

Now, I am not particularly concerned with the question as to how many docks we have and what use we have for them or whether there is any merit in the proposition before the House; but I do want to call attention to the fact that if we are to have a Navy, dry docks are essential; and the less we are required to use a dry dock the better it is for the American people. The fact that we are not using our dry docks at any particular season of the year is only another evidence of the fact that the ships are in a condition where they do not have to be repaired. And to say that because the dry docks were not being used at a particular time, that is a reason why we should have no dry docks, does not appeal to me, and would not appeal to the people of America.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Did you understand me to say that we did not need any dry docks?

Mr. PADGETT. I understood the gentleman to say that we had more dry docks than we need.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes. Now, I want to ask you this question.

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. We have 380 ships in the American Navy and about 20 dry docks. Can you tell this House that there has ever been one single day in the history of the Navy when the present number of dry docks has not been sufficient to serve every ship? Do you know of any instance of that kind?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not arguing that question at all. I am not pretending to say that I know anything about the merits of the case before the House. I am simply endeavoring to show the fallacy of the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON], that because a dry dock was not in use when he visited it, therefore we do not need a dry dock.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Do you advocate this amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I just said to the House that I did not pretend to know anything about the merits of this particular amendment.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. I should like to know how the gentleman stands on this question?

Mr. MADDEN. I will tell the gentleman when the time comes for me to vote.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Then I can not ask the gentleman the question I wanted to ask him.

Mr. MADDEN. But I will simply say it is to the great advantage of the American people to have the dry docks unused the greater portion of the time, and yet it is a great advantage to have the dry docks ready to use when we need them.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House for but a few minutes. I occupy a little singular position with reference to this matter. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND], in a good-humored way, seemed to criticize the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House for not reporting this provision. I desire to be entirely frank with him and with other Members. I can not agree to all the statements that have been made here, particularly the statement that we do not need dry docks in the Navy. We do need some, and they are very important to have. Personally I was in favor of the Norfolk dry dock. The committee were overwhelmingly in favor of the Philadelphia dry dock, and if the matter had been submitted to the House committee they would have voted in favor of the Philadelphia dry dock being placed in the bill. The matter was kept out——

Mr. HOLLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether any dry docks other than the dry dock at the Norfolk Navy Yard have been recommended, either by the naval experts or the Navy Department, to the gentleman's committee?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember any now. The Navy Department very earnestly insisted upon the Norfolk dock, but the committee were going to put in the Philadelphia dock. In order that there might be none at all in the bill, the committee decided not to report any provision for docks at all, and the House committee made no recommendation.

The Senate committee have put in a provision for the Norfolk dock. I did not feel, in good faith to the committee or to the majority of the committee who were opposed to the Norfolk dock, that I could agree to it in conference. Again, the House had not considered the matter, and I felt that it was a matter of such importance that it should not be agreed to in conference.

I want to say further that the committee having taken the action it did, I felt that we could pass the whole matter over at this session of Congress, and therefore I have made the motion to further insist upon our disagreement.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the chairman of the committee, was it not on account of the naval bill carrying so much money at this time that the committee voted not to have a dry dock at either place?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I said we left it out. There were other things in the bill that we regarded as more important, and we left out the provision for both docks, and I have made the motion to further insist upon our disagreement. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] moves to recede and concur.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. In reference to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] that six dry docks would be a great abundance for the Navy, and that a naval officer made that statement, does the gentleman think it necessary to explain that to the House?

Mr. PADGETT. I disagree with that conclusion. I think we do not have to use a dock every day of the year, but if we have a disabled ship we want a dock in that neighborhood to take care of it. It might be very necessary in an emergency.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 28 and concur in the same.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 71.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 16 Members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to further insist on the disagreement of the House.

Mr. MANN. The vote just taken was equivalent to a disagreement.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is true. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 29: Page 34, line 10, after the figures "$450,000," insert the words "in all, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., $225,000."

Mr. PADGETT. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 29.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33: Page 26, after line 2, insert the following:
"Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Toward construction of breakwater (limit of contract, $600,000), $100,000."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 33.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 33.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 57 ayes and 7 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read amendment numbered 34, as follows:

After line 11, page 26, insert:
"The limit of cost of the dry dock at the naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, is hereby increased to $4,986,500."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 34 and concur in the same.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were 43 ayes and 25 noes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 136, nays 111, answered "present" 5, not voting 181, as follows:

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY. I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BOOHER was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, whom I understand did not vote. I voted "yea." I desire to withdraw that vote and be recorded "present."

The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DERSHEM. I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The name of Mr. WALTERS was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote on the motion to recede and concur was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 40.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, that is the mere changing of a total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 20, change the total from "$2,897,000" to "$4,140,500."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 40.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 53.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 25, after the figures "$958,100," insert the following: ": Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to enter into contract for the use by the Government of dry docks at Hunters Point, San Francisco, Cal., one of which docks shall be capable of docking the largest vessel that can be passed through the locks of the Panama Canal, for a period not to exceed six years from completion of such dock, at a compensation of $50,000 per annum during said period of six years, the right of the Government to the use of said docks in time of war to be prior and paramount: Provided, That the construction of the large dock shall be undertaken immediately upon entering into this contract and shall be completed within 24 months thereafter: And provided further, That said contract shall provide for docking rates not in excess of commercial rates, and for such other conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy prior to entering into such contract: And provided further, That in the event, during the said contract period of six years, the necessities of the fleet require the docking of vessels which will necessitate a charge greater than $50,000 per annum, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to have said vessels docked at a rate of charge not greater than price stipulated in said contract.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53 and concur in the same.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me five minutes, as I desire to be heard in opposition to the motion.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Washington five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, we have here a proposition to make a contract with a private plant for the docking of vessels on the Pacific coast. We have out there an arrangement, or adequate arrangements are being perfected, at Panama, and then we have at Puget Sound an arrangement for docking the larger vessels. We have the Mare Island Navy Yard and we are going to have the Pearl Harbor dock and yard. The purpose of this is to expend $50,000 a year as a minimum for six years and pay it over to the Charles M. Schwab plant, the Union Iron Works, for this private purpose, or at least to this private enterprise. I believe that is wrong. I believe it is bad policy. I believe it will be a bad precedent to establish. The Puget Sound yard is the rendezvous now for the largest ships. It is true we have no large ships out there at this time, no real battleships, but it is provided that when battleships do come, they are supposed to make the Puget Sound yard their home port. We are equipped for it, and under the special estimates and pleas of the Navy Department, a dock of the largest magnitude was provided at Puget Sound. If big battleships go out there, they have to go to that home port occasionally for fuel and supplies, so that there is no reason why they will be caught all of a sudden at San Francisco and have to be docked immediately. There is no reason why we should enter into a contract with a private plant when we have a dock of our own that is available. As was suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] the other day, if you arrange for the docking of these ships there, then as soon as a ship is docked, you learn that it needs repairs. No one knows what a ship needs, what kind of repairs it is going to need, until it is taken out of the water and examined, and then comes the repairs at this private yard, and if you do that the Government yard is idle. There is no question about equipment, there is no question about the Government yards being prepared for this, but it is purely a question of arranging here with this private plant. It is said that the Mare Island yard is later going to qualify for these ships, so that a large dock can be built there.

If that ever does happen, that will be all right, and we will have a Government dock; but as far as this arrangement of $50,000 a year for six years, with a private dock, is concerned, I am opposed to it, and I do not believe that this House ought for one minute to stand for that kind of a proposition.

I do not believe that this House ought to expend the money that is given for naval expenditure in docking ships in private yards. As far as accommodations are concerned, I understand Boston has recently built a dry dock of this kind. The people have built it. The commercial interests of San Francisco are going to be compelled to have one of these mammoth dry docks. They must have it because the big ships, the leviathans of the ocean, that come into San Francisco carrying the commerce of the sea, must be docked, and they must have an adequate dock, but why the Government of the United States should furnish the money I can not understand, and after furnishing the money why we should require that our own docks, our own Government yards, shall be left idle is so absurd as to be entirely out of the question, as far as I can see.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. How far is it from the place where this private concern is to the nearest Government dock?

Mr. BRYAN. I understand it is about 30 miles to the Mare Island yard. It is suggested that the hands, the men who work at the Mare Island yard, would do this work. That is absurd, because if you take men from the Mare Island yard down to San Francisco in a launch or a Government boat, you will spend the greater portion of the day going and coming.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me three minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, when you get down there, you can not repair the ship, you can not do the work solely with the dock; but you have then, in addition to this expenditure, to arrange and use the electric current of the Union Iron Works.

You have to use the tools, you have to use the crane that goes around the dock, you have to use all the facilities that are part of the yard. A dry dock of itself can do nothing. You can not repair a ship, you can not even paint a ship without additional equipment. A dry dock is part and parcel of a navy yard and you have to use the whole thing, and the dock has to be adequately equipped for it. The dock at Puget Sound is as large as there is in the country.

On the Atlantic side you have two docks, one at Norfolk, and one at New York. Here you have practically all of the fleet on the Atlantic seaboard. We are not going to have, at any time soon under the unit-fleet arrangement that prevails, the whole fleet in the Pacific as you now have in the Atlantic. The fleet will dock at Panama and at Puget Sound and ships that can go to Mare Island will be docked there, and if Mare Island yard is found adequate and the channel is deep enough a new adequate dock will be constructed there. For the life of me I can not see why this Government should go to work and subsidize—and talk about ship subsidy—go to work and subsidize a dry dock for the commercial interests of San Francisco to the tune of $50,000 a year, and all at the expense of the legitimate business of the Puget Sound yard. Fifty thousand dollars is the minimum. As I understand the contract calls for 6 cents per ton per day, which is $1,800 a day for one of these 30,000-ton ships. And yet the amount of $50,000 is given. We can patronize that to the extent of $1,000,000 a year under this contract and deprive Puget Sound of doing its legitimate repair work, its legitimate dockage, and it makes a great magnificent dry dock that cost the Government over $3,000,000 a year at Puget Sound entirely worthless or, at least, takes away from it the business that should go to it. I hope that the Congress will refuse to thus subsidize a private company and vote in favor of its own dock. I appeal to the friends of the Puget Sound yard to stand by it, and in thus standing by the Puget Sound yard Members will be standing by the Government and saving the taxpayers money in a tremendous amount.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN].

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] made the statement that it is only 30 miles from San Francisco, where this proposed dock is to be established, to the nearest navy yard where we have a dock. I want to call the attention of the House to this fact. It is only 30 miles to Mare Island, but the dock at the Mare Island yard will not take in the dreadnaught. It is 3,500 miles to Panama from San Francisco. It is 900 miles from San Francisco to the Puget Sound Navy Yard. If we get one of the dreadnaughts in the Bay of San Francisco we have got to have a dock 1,000 feet long. If we have to send it to Bremerton, it is 900 miles. Now, this is not a selfish proposition. This contract with the Union Iron Works has been recommended by former Secretary of the Navy Meyer, and has been recommended strongly by Secretary Daniels, and the idea is this: It will take between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 to construct a private dock. Fifty thousand dollars a year is about 2½ per cent interest on an investment of $2,000,000. It is not a profitable proposition to the Union Iron Works to put it up for the Government alone. Of course, they are going to get commercial dockage. They will need that when the Panama Canal opens, and so will the United States need a dock in the waters of San Francisco Bay, or in the near vicinity, when the Panama Canal is opened. You could not keep a war vessel beyond a given period and you would have to send it 3,500 miles to Panama or send it 900 miles to Bremerton to be docked and get the benefit of the dock established there. Now, the gentleman representing the Bremerton district can not be blamed for looking after his yard. It is a question as to keeping a fleet on the Pacific, and if they are going to have that fleet of dreadnaughts split in half and send half of it, 41 of them, we ought then to have one-half of them on the Pacific, and Bremerton will take care of her share and San Francisco Bay will take care of her share, and Panama will take care of her share, and the Hawaiian Islands will get their share of these dreadnaughts.

Now, in San Francisco Bay you must have a dock 1,000 feet long to take care of these dreadnaughts. They can dock at Mare Island everything with the exception of the dreadnaughts, and, as I understand, we enter into this contract until such time as we understand what the needs of the Navy are in the vicinity of San Francisco as far as the dockage of our vessels are concerned. I think this is a good proposition for the Government. If we are going to allow the question of contracting with a private concern to enter into it, why, we might as well say once for all that we will do all of our new work as well as repair work in a Government yard. I am in favor of that method of doing the Government work, and this provision only takes care of the dockage of our vessels until we can build our own dock in the Bay of San Francisco. It is only a matter of an expenditure until we can have before us all the information and determine the size and dimensions of the dock necessary in San Francisco Bay. I trust, Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of Secretary Meyer, the recommendation of Secretary Daniels, and the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs will prevail and that the House will adopt this section of the conference report.

Mr. HELGESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. Will the gentleman tell us why it is when the Government pays a bonus of $50,000 a year it is upon the consideration that they shall receive prior rights only in time of war? Why should not they receive prior rights in time of peace so they could bring their dreadnaughts in there and have them repaired before commercial vessels?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I suppose the consideration in time of war is to make it specific, but I do not see any reason why they should not in time of peace. The contract, when signed, will specify conditions that will adequately protect our rights in time of peace as well as in time of war.

Mr. HELGESEN. Then why not strike out "in time of war" and give the Government preferential right at any time?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I did not yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. I spoke, anyhow.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I am only arguing——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the attitude of my friend from the State of Washington [Mr. BRYAN] in this matter. When the effort was made to construct a navy yard and a dry dock at Bremerton the Representatives from Washington had the earnest support of the Members from the State of California, because we felt that there was need of a dry dock and a navy yard in that section of the Pacific coast. There is no question but that there is need of a dry dock on San Francisco Bay to take care of the superdreadnaughts that are being constructed. There is no such dry dock between Panama and Puget Sound. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] refers to the dry dock at Pearl Harbor. Pearl Harbor is 2,200 miles away from San Francisco Bay. These superdreadnaughts cost between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 each. The time may come when such a dreadnaught would have to be brought into a dry dock without delay so as to save her for the Government. To be compelled to dock her 3,500 miles in one direction or 946 miles in another direction, or 2,200 miles in another direction, might result in a total loss for the Government of such a battleship before she could reach a dry dock.

Now, this proposition contained in the pending amendment is from a private concern. It is the same concern that constructed the battleship Oregon. It is the same concern that constructed the Olympia, the flagship of Admiral Dewey at the battle of Manila Bay. It is the same concern that constructed the San Francisco, which is now doing excellent work in the waters of Vera Cruz. It is the same concern that constructed the Charleston, the Ohio, the Wisconsin, and quite a large number of other splendid vessels in our Navy. The time will come, probably, when the Government will construct its own dry dock on the Bay of San Francisco. It ought to construct its own dry dock there, but there has been a question about the depth of water leading to the navy yard at Mare Island. I am satisfied that it will be easily demonstrated that you can always find enough water in the channel to Mare Island to enable the largest of our battleships to go there, but there has been some dispute about it that has delayed the construction of a Government dry dock on San Francisco Bay of sufficient size to accommodate the largest battleships of our fleet.

This contemplated dry dock is absolutely necessary in view of the early opening of the Panama Canal and the passage into the Pacific Ocean of the great battleship fleet of this country. The builders of this dock have made a very liberal offer to the Government. There is no question in my mind but that it is their purpose, and, in fact, Mr. MacGregor, the president of the company, told me comparatively recently that it is the purpose of the company to give the Government every facility to dock its vessels and to give them the first call at all times.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, will prevail, and that this provision will be concurred in.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion of the chairman of the committee will prevail. The Mare Island Navy Yard can dock at the present time any of the ships of war with the exception of the two largest-sized dreadnaughts. Last year she docked 75 ships at a cost of about $28,000, but she can not dock a dreadnaught. The closest place to San Francisco that a dreadnaught can be docked, which is at Bremerton, is nearly a thousand miles away. There is no question but that a dreadnaught dry dock should be constructed in the Bay of San Francisco. The Secretary of the Navy has told me that the department is not at the present time prepared to locate and construct a dry dock at the Mare Island Navy Yard, but hopes to be able to do so in the near future. I believe the contract price proposed to be entered into with the Union Iron Works is a good thing for the Government and will not be extraordinarily profitable for the Union Iron Works, but will give them a chance to go ahead now and construct a large dry dock that will care for the dreadnaughts not only in our own Navy but the ships of the other navies that will be in San Francisco Bay next year and the year after. If I thought it was an attempt on the part of the department to encourage the construction of a dreadnaught dry dock by private parties to the exclusion hereafter of the construction of such a dry dock by the Government, I would not be in favor of it, but I feel absolutely certain that the best thing that we can do for the Navy at the present time is to enter into this contract with the Union Iron Works. Of course, in my opinion, the Government would be justified in constructing a dreadnaught dry dock at the Mare Island Navy Yard immediately, and ought to do so, but the Navy Department will not recommend the construction of such a dock at the yard until after the dredging work being done on the channel shall have been completed and tested, and therefore I am in favor of the motion of the chairman of the committee as a temporary expediency.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] if he thinks by entering into this contract in reference to the dry dock in California it will mean the repair of these ships in the private yard?

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy stating it will not. I intended to bring it here with me, but I find it has been mislaid. He wrote me since the bill was referred to conference the other day that such was not the purpose or the expectation.

Mr. FOSTER. Or would not likely be done?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, another thing. Does the gentleman believe that entering into this contract for six years with this company in California means that in the future the Government will not likely build a dry dock on the coast?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the Secretary of the Navy contemplates that if the work of the dredging and diking of the river there is successful, as it is now thought it will be, that some time in the future a proposition will be submitted to Congress to build a dock at the Mare Island yard.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman believe, or does it look to him, that it will finally come to this: That, having entered into an agreement here with a private company, it will mean that in the future it will be claimed that we have a good contract with this private company, and that we never will build a Government dock where it might be needed in California, and that the gentlemen from California, who are now so much in favor of this proposition, will inside of a few years be coming here and trying to let loose of it?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether it will be the same gentleman or not, but some one else.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yield?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PADGETT. In answer to the gentleman's question, I do not think it would have that effect. I think that ultimately the Government will want to build a dock at Mare Island. I think that this is a splendid business proposition and an opportunity that rarely occurs to the Government. It is over 4,000 miles between the two docks we have on the Pacific Ocean—the one at Bremerton, 900 miles north of San Francisco, and the other one at Balboa, the Pacific end of the canal, which is 3,500 miles, as stated here on the floor, south of San Francisco; and then at Pearl Harbor we are building one, which is 2,100 miles out in mid-ocean. Here is a proposal that this company will build this dock, of the largest capacity, at their own cost, at a cost of not less than $2,000,000, if we will agree to patronize it for a period of not exceeding six years, at a cost of $50,000 a year, the docking to be at the commercial rates, and specified in the proposal for the contract submitted, which is a low rate, and lower than the Government to-day charges commercial institutions for docking their ships in the Government dry docks.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. He has been in the House for a great many years, and has it not been the experience of the gentleman and of nearly every other Member of the House, when he calls to mind this, that whenever we enter into these private contracts it was almost impossible to ever get rid of one of them, and that in the case with this dry dock in California it may mean that we will probably be years and years trying to get rid of a private contract, where we might get a Government dry dock which would serve the purposes better than will be served by this private company?

Eventually we may enter into this sort of a contract where we shall be doing the repairs and the work on these ships in private yards out there instead of in a Government yard. If that would be true, I should very much oppose it.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee answer.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I want to state that it occurs to me that this is a very advantageous proposal. A dry dock of these dimensions would cost the Government not less than $2,000,000. The interest at 3 per cent alone on the investment would be $60,000 a year. The maintenance of the dock would add a number of thousand dollars. The operation of the dock, the letting in of the water, and the pumping out of the water would cost a great deal. The lighting of it would cost something. The power for operating the machinery of the dock incident to vessels going in and out would cost a considerable sum. So that we would be getting for $50,000 a year what would cost us, if it were our own dock, perhaps $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: He has had long experience on the Committee on Naval Affairs and the very argument that he has made now may be quoted in a few years from now as the reason why we ought to keep up our contract with this private company. I believe that is just the argument that might be made, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whether he is in Congress at that time or not, will have his words quoted here to show that it is cheaper to get this service performed in a private yard than to build a Government dry dock and repair our ships by our own people in our own yard. I hope this may be only a temporary arrangement and no contract will be fastened on the Government that we can not get rid of.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] seems to lose sight of the fact that this dock is not being built exclusively for Government work. It is being built for commercial work largely. At the end of six years I doubt if the company will want to continue this contract, because with the opening of the Panama Canal the shipping on the Pacific coast undoubtedly will have increased very materially, and while the Government will have the first call for the use of the dock under this contract for six years, there is no doubt in my mind but that the Government will have to have its own dock at Mare Island to take care of its largest battleships.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman call to mind cases where these private-contract companies usually give up Government contracts of that kind?

Mr. KAHN. This company is building only one dock. One dock will not be sufficient, in my judgment, in six years from now, after the Panama Canal shall have been opened, to take care of the business that will be given to the dry docks on the coast.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think that if we enter into a contract with this company for the first six years of its existence, and then, after we have helped it to start in and get on in the world financially, and after we have protected this "infant industry" for six years, it will throw the Government overboard and say, "We haven't any more use for you"?

Mr. KAHN. Not at all. The gentleman knows that no such intention was expressed by me.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman said that probably in six years they would not want the contract.

Mr. KAHN. I said that in six years they would not want the contract, and the reason would be simply that in the meantime the Government would build its own dock. As a matter of fact, the Government at the present time is having the channel dredged between Mare Island Navy Yard and the deep waters of the Bay of San Francisco. There is a depth of some thirty-odd feet of water there now, and I think the largest of our dreadnaughts can get to Mare Island at the present time without very much difficulty. But there is always a possibility of the shoaling of the channel.

Now, the department or the Government is endeavoring to construct a series of jetties and breakwaters that will keep that channel constantly clear. I am satisfied that it is going to work out successfully, and I am satisfied that the department will recommend to Congress within the next two years the enactment of a provision to construct a 1,000-foot dry dock on Mare Island. It will take three or four years at any rate for the dock to be completed after it has been begun, so that by that time this contract will have expired. This is only a temporary arrangement. To my mind it is absolutely necessary, because there is such a great distance to the north between San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound—946 miles, and the distance, as I said before, in the southerly direction is 3,500 miles. There should be a dry dock on San Francisco Bay large enough to take care of the greatest of our dreadnaughts.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not saying that we ought not to have a dry dock at Mare Island Navy Yard, nor am I saying that this may not be a good contract, for I am inclined to think it is. But I suggest to the gentlemen from California, in their enthusiasm for this contract, that it may mean in a few years' time that we shall have a private contract, which, when the balance of the country wants to build a dry dock for the Government, will enable those interested to say, "Here is a private company with a dry dock on its hands," and a better contract can be secured with the private company.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is borrowing trouble.

Mr. FOSTER. It is no trouble to me at all. I am just suggesting to my enthusiastic friend from California what he may be getting into.

Mr. KAHN. So far as our seeming eagerness for the contract is concerned it is simply for this reason: It is proposed to send our fleet through the Panama Canal soon after its opening. According to the newspapers here the President of the United States intends to lead the battleship fleet of the United States through the canal on board the Oregon. Nearly every maritime nation in the world will participate in the great naval parade that will pass through the canal at that time. After our battleship fleet enters the Pacific Ocean it will probably be the purpose of the Navy Department to keep the fleet in the Pacific for some years to come. I do not think there is any doubt on that score. Therefore it is essential that proper docking facilities should be afforded the vessels of that fleet while they are on the Pacific coast.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a little time?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. RAKER. I want five minutes after I have asked a few questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. CURRY. I rise to ask the gentleman if he will yield one moment?

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield to my friend just at this time. Did the Committee on Naval Affairs have before it plans and petitions for the building of a dry dock for vessels at the south end of Mare Island by citizens of Vallejo, who say that there is 43 feet of water there?

Mr. PADGETT. We had the matter before us in a general way, but we did not take up the question particularly, because we want the channel between that deep water in the bay protected; nor is the department prepared at this time to consider the advisability of constructing a dry dock at all.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. Now, the channel south of Mare Island is 6 or 8 feet deeper than the Golden Gate entrance, and has never been bothered by shoaling—that is, the entrance of the Golden Gate proper. What I want to ask is this: Whether or not the making of this contract is an entering wedge for the defeat of the project for a dry dock at Mare Island?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not the intention of the officials of the department or the intention of the committee to supplant the Mare Island dock, but to have available an extra or surplus dock there, and to meet the contingencies that may arise until the Government determines to build a dock at Mare Island.

Mr. RAKER. Another question. This provision here allows them 24 months in which to complete their dry dock?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How long has this company, the Union Iron Works, been trying to get this contract?

Mr. PADGETT. For 18 months or two years; I do not remember exactly.

Mr. RAKER. Have they made any effort at all, or proceeded in any way, shape, or form to construct the dry dock up to the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; they are awaiting this matter; and I had a letter from the attorney of the company, stating that if the proposition was not agreed to the company would modify its plans and build a smaller dock.

Mr. RAKER. So it could not be used for the large dreadnaughts?

Mr. PADGETT. That was the information I had; that they would build a smaller dock.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. A while ago the gentleman, in answer to a question of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] as to repairs, suggested that the repairs would not be done in this dock.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary stated to me that it was the purpose to use the dock for the cleaning and usual overhauling of ships, which is done by the ship's crew. Whenever a ship goes into one of our own docks the crew does the cleaning and ordinary repairing. He stated that if the ship was so disabled as to require major repairs it would be sent to our own dock at Bremerton.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman knows that they do not discover exactly what a ship needs until they dock it.

Mr. PADGETT. They might not discover minor things, but they would discover any substantial thing.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman take the position that if after going into this dock they discovered that major repairs were necessary they would then pack up and leave that dock and go to Puget Sound to be repaired?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; because the officer in command of a ship would not go in there with that ignorance. He would know whether his ship needed major repairs, or whether only minor repairs were to be done, which could be done by the ship's crew.

Mr. BRYAN. It is suggested that it is 3,000 miles from Balboa Docks at the Panama Canal up to San Francisco.

Mr. PADGETT. It is stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] to be 3,500 miles.

Mr. BRYAN. And one of those dreadnaughts has to go that 3,500 miles before it gets to California. The gentleman knows that the Puget Sound yard is the rendezvous for the big ships, and must be until Mare Island is able to dock them. Now, they have got to go on to Puget Sound to get to their home port, their rendezvous. Does the gentleman think that being able to go 3,000 miles, a farther cruise of 900 or 1,000 miles is a matter to be considered in connection with this docking, in view of the fact that our territory extends clear to the end of the Aleutian Islands and Alaska?

Mr. PADGETT. Nine hundred miles might be a very important factor if a ship was in trouble.

Mr. BRYAN. We have not had a ship in that kind of trouble in the last 20 years.

Mr. PADGETT. That may be; but we might have trouble that would be very different from conditions in the last 20 years.

Mr. RAKER. Supposing the small ships that can now dock at Mare Island need docking; they will go to Mare Island and dock and be repaired there just as now, without docking at the place provided for in this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. May I ask the gentleman this further question? Is it not the intention of the department and the intention of the committee that this shall be a temporary expedient, and the proposed dry dock at Mare Isalnd is now under consideration by the department and the committee for construction later.

Mr. PADGETT. The department has expressed its intention not to let this supplant permanently the dock at Mare Island. The committee have not formally expressed any opinion one way or the other, because we have not taken any action in reference to future events.

Mr. RAKER. But that is the position that the department takes with the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. With that statement the temporary dock will not interfere with the building of a permanent and sufficiently large dock at Mare Island within a few years. The preparation and work will not be delayed at Mare Island as I understand it. This will be all right if thus carried out.

Mr. CURRY. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to answer two questions that have been propounded.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. CURRY. I only want two minutes. As to whether or not the entering into this contract would result in the failure of the Government in the future to construct a Government dry dock in San Francisco Bay, I was assured by the Secretary of the Navy that this contract was a temporary affair and would in no manner militate against the Government finally constructing a dry dock at the Mare Island Navy Yard, and that such dry dock would be constructed, or at least that he would recommend such dry-dock construction, provided the dredging on the channel proved adequate and permanent. We know that it will, and, so far as the Mare Island Navy Yard is concerned, we are not opposing this contract at all.

There was another question asked in reference to Mr. Howard Holmes's report on available sites for a dreadnaught dry dock at the Mare Island Navy Yard. I personally filed a copy of the report and the plans and estimates of Mr. Howard Holmes with the Committee on Naval Affairs, and also filed a copy with the Secretary of the Navy. One copy of that report is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy and one copy in the hands of the Naval Affairs Committee. According to that report there are four available sites and, as my colleague [Mr. RAKER] says, there is always 43 feet of water at low tide at the southern end of the island. There is now 36 feet of water at high tide right in front of the Mare Island Navy Yard, and there will soon be 40 feet.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 18 minutes left.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this proposed contract provides that we shall pay this company $50,000 a year.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How is that sum arrived at?

Mr. PADGETT. It was the result of the negotiations of the department with the Union Iron Works, and submitted in the proposals by the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know. But suppose we do not use the dock at all; are we to pay $50,000 a year?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we agree to do a minimum of $50,000 a year for a period not exceeding six years—I presume, as an inducement——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the prices fixed, how many ships will that dock each year?

Mr. PADGETT. Ordinarily, at the usual run of the year, I should say about 32 or 33.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We only have 36 or 37 in commission. You can not dock them all.

Mr. PADGETT. They are docked twice a year, usually.

Mr. BRYAN. How can you dock 20 ships out there when you have none?

Mr. PADGETT. If we do not have ships enough, we will pay $50,000 anyway. That is the minimum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is it. When the Senate passed this bill, before it was inserted as an amendment, it struck out the word "less" and made the bill read "not more than $50,000." Under this provision we may pay more than $50,000.

Mr. PADGETT. This fixes the contract at $50,000, neither more nor less. Here is a subsequent clause that if an emergency should arise and we should do more than $50,000 worth of work they should have the right to do it at the contract price per ton. But I will state to the gentleman that when the Senate changed the word "less" to "more" it was not according to the stipulations of the submitted contract between the department and the company, and the company notified the department that upon the Senate language they would not undertake to build the dock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was present in the Senate when it was done, and there was no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The discussion showed that it was a pretty good thing for the company to have the Government pay two and a half per cent on the cost of this dock for six years, regardless of whether the use we got out of the dock was worth $50,000 or not. It seemed so much like a subsidy, that has been universally denounced by some of my colleagues, that I was surprised to find that anybody on this side of the House should advocate such a subsidy.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not regard it as a subsidy. I regard it as a business contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A business contract would be paying so much for the use by the ship and not guaranteeing a certain return on the investment.

Mr. PADGETT. We agreed to pay so much per ton for docking, and we agreed to do a minimum amount of business.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact the only dock on the Pacific coast capable of docking a battleship, the one at Bremerton, has been in use more than 90 per cent of the time since it has been in commission during the last fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not looked to see.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is a fact that the large dock at Bremerton has been in use more than 90 per cent of the time since its construction during the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman does not recognize the fact that there are two docks at Bremerton.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do; I am speaking of the large dock.

Mr. BRYAN. There has been no ship placed in the large dock that could not have been placed in the other dock. We have no battleships there, they only send out little tugs there.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say to the gentleman that the big dock has been in use 90 per cent of the time since it was completed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That statement may be accurate for they may have put two or three small boats into the large dock at one time. The gentleman from Washington states that there has not been a ship docked there in the large dock that could not have been put in the smaller one.

Mr. BRYAN. Nothing larger than one of these six battleships that went out there.

Mr. BRITTEN. The truth of the matter is that the dock has been in use practically all the time since it was constructed. Does it not stand to reason that with the opening of the Panama Canal we will need another dock on the coast?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman can reason that out as well as I can.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Is it not a fact that the first we ever heard of the dry-dock proposition on the Pacific coast it came to us in the shape of a written proposal from the corporation?

Mr. PADGETT. It came to us submitted by Secretary Meyer.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. It was a written proposition they made to Secretary Meyer, and he submitted it to us.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Before the Navy Department or any officer of the Navy imagined that there was any reason for a dry dock there this corporation had suggested it. Is not that a fact?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not advised about that.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. The gentleman knows it to be the fact that the first knowledge, as far as the Naval Committee was concerned, came from this corporation.

Mr. PADGETT. All I know is that it came from Secretary of the Navy Meyer. Whether Secretary Meyer suggested it to them, or they to him, or some party suggested it to both, I do not know. All I know is that it came to our committee submitted by Secretary Meyer.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Does not the gentleman know that it did not come in any other shape except a proposition from this corporation? It did not show that Secretary Meyer had ever suggested it to them, but it came in the shape of a proposition from them and Secretary Meyer submitted it to us with a recommendation that we accept their proposal. In other words, they proposed it to him.

Mr. PADGETT. It came in the form of what they were willing to do. I do not know whether they initiated it or Secretary Meyer initiated it or some one on the outside initiated it.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. The man that initiates a thing is the one that makes the proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how it was—Secretary Meyer might have talked with them and suggested that we needed a dock, and they might have said that they were willing to do it. That is all speculation on my part; I do not know who initiated it.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I would like to know how it was that there was any existing need of a dry dock there and that that corporation was the first one to discover it?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRYAN. This proposed act provides that the contract shall begin and run from the completion of the dock. Now, it will take two or three years to complete the dock; and I would like to know what becomes of the ships that go through the Panama Canal before the dry dock is finished?

Then, further, the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] says that in two or three years they will have that mud dug out, and the Mare Island yard will be ready for the dock. Inasmuch as this can not be finished for three years, and the Panama Exposition will be over and the mud will be gone, why not wait and build the dock at the Mare Island yard?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not submitting the proposition from my viewpoint in connection with the Panama Canal. I think it is a good business proposition, and that it is well for the Government to have an extra dock there, even if it goes ahead contemporaneously and builds one at Mare Island. There is a coast there of 4,300 miles, with a dock at each end and no dock between; and I think it would be a good business proposition to induce these parties to build it, when they propose to build it and let us use it at less than half of what it would cost us in interest on the investment and maintenance of the dock.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. As I understand, the Government agrees to pay $50,000 a year to this corporation whether it uses the dock or not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but it proposes to use it. The contract stipulates that it shall pay a minimum of $50,000 a year.

Mr. HELGESEN. But it also states that it has prior and paramount rights only in time of war, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] says that there is going to be so much commercial business that they can not even take care of that. If the Government has no paramount rights in time of peace, they can shut the Government out and draw $50,000 a year just the same.

Mr. PADGETT. No; they could not refuse to let us use it and claim payment for it. As I remember it, the contract provides that the Government shall have the first right of using it with this reservation—that if there is a ship in the dock in the time of peace, the Government can not require the ship to be put out within a certain time, but in time of war it can require the ship to be put out immediately.

Mr. HELGESEN. If any such contract is entered into, it may be all right, but as this reads the Government has the prior right only in time of war.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course all of the details are not specified in this amendment.

I move the previous question on the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53 and concur in the same.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRYAN) there were—ayes 65, noes 28.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 138, nays 94, answered "present" 6, not voting 195, as follows:

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. PLUMLEY.

Mr. ASHBROOK with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. KONOP with Mr. HULINGS.

Mr. GEORGE with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. POST with Mr. BARCHFELD.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland with Mr. MORIN.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. DRUKKER.
Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY. I desire to change my vote of "no" and answer "present."
The name of Mr. BOOHER was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DERSHEM. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."
The name of Mr. WALTERS was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."
The name of Mr. CLINE was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. FESS. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."
The name of Mr. ALLEN was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, has voted.
The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."
The name of Mr. Burke of South Dakota was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under my pair with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and be recorded "present."
The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will report amendment numbered 57.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, before that I would like to ask unanimous consent to correct a typographical error in line 20, on page 40. The word "vessel" should be "vessels." It should be in the plural.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 20, strike out the word "vessel" and insert the word "vessels."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment numbered 57.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 57, page 58, of the printed bill. Strike out all of lines 16 to 25, on page 58, and all of lines 1 to 5, on page 59, and insert the following:
"Eight or more submarines, one to be of seagoing type, seven or more to be of coast and harbor defense type; to cost not in exceeding the aggregate $4,460,000, and the sum of $1,825,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, to be available until expended, and the appropriation made in the naval act approved March 4, 1913, 'Wrecking pontoon: For construction or purchase of a testing and wrecking pontoon for submarines, to be available until expended, $300,000,' is hereby made available until expended for the construction of said submarine boats."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 57.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 57, 63, 64, and 65 may be disposed of together.
Mr. PADGETT. And 68?
Mr. MANN. No; not 68.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 57, 63, 64, and 65 be considered together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report amendment No. 63.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 63: Page 60 of the printed bill, line 24, after the word "authorized," insert the words "to be available until expended."
Amendment No. 64: Page 61, line 3, after the word "authorized," insert the words "to be available until expended."
Amendment No. 65: Page 61, line 7, after the word "authorized," insert the words "to be available until expended."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion applies to all of them?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. As I understand amendment 57 there is not very much difference between the House provision, which is stricken out by the amendment of the Senate, and the provision which is inserted by the Senate except as to the question of making the appropriations available until expended.
Mr. PADGETT. That is all that is in disagreement.
Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if these four amendments all contain the same provision, "available until expended?"
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. As I understand the proposition, and if the gentleman can give me the information it should be interesting to the House, what has been the practice about these appropriations for increase of the Navy as to making them available until expended?
Mr. PADGETT. It has been the uniform custom they should be available until expended.
Mr. MANN. Under the law would not they be available until expended in every case where a contract is made or an obligation incurred?
Mr. PADGETT. Where the department builds in a navy yard it is not, but it would be under a contract; and it has been the uniform custom and practice that this part of the bill should be available until expended, and it is a matter of economy of the estimates that it should be. And I will state to the gentleman that the reason the conferees left it in disagreement was because when the bill was sent to conference the statement was made by myself upon the floor that I should insist upon the language being restored with reference to "available until expended" in the other parts of the bill and failed to call attention to the distinction between the administrative part and this portion of the bill relating to increase of the Navy. I did not want to come into the House with a conference report concluding this without first stating to the House the difference between these two——
Mr. MANN. And the gentleman expects, when the bill goes back to conference, notwithstanding his motion, that the probabilities are the House conferees will agree to make these items——
Mr. PADGETT. Available until expended.
Mr. MANN. Available until expended. These increases of the Navy items. If those four items are agreed to, there is no occasion for the conferees agreeing to amendment No. 68, is there?
Mr. PADGETT. No; except that it has usually been carried in the bill; that is all.
Mr. MANN. Well, I do not quite see the purpose of making two items each available until expended and then, after having done that, adding another item and saying that both of them shall be available until expended.
Mr. PADGETT. There is no necessity for No. 68 if the others remain in.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the chairman of the committee yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. As I understand the chairman of the committee, he anticipates that the House conferees will agree to the verbiage of the Senate making these four items available until expended?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; that has been the custom.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That having been the procedure, or, rather, the language of the appropriation bill for many years in the past?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If that is the thought in the mind of the chairman of the committee, I would offer the suggestion that instead of further insisting on disagreement he move to recede and concur in the Senate amendments.
Mr. PADGETT. There is no necessity for that now, because some of these amendments involve other questions.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Before agreeing to it, I wanted an opportunity to make this statement to the House, and I kept it in disagreement so that I could make the statement to the House. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].
Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand from the statement of the gentleman, he prefers the phraseology of the Senate amendment rather than the separate provisions as provided by the House?
Mr. PADGETT. With reference to submarines?
Mr. STAFFORD. Submarines.
Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. STAFFORD. The House committee placed a limitation upon the amount to be expended for three different kinds of submarines, and yet you are abandoning that limitation and leaving it to the department to have leeway to expend any amount.

Mr. PADGETT. We fixed the limit of speed as to one, and by putting them in grouping it is supposed by the department they can get one extra submarine out of the little accumulations saved from each one of the separate classes.

Mr. STAFFORD. But Congress waives the limitation of expenditure by lumping the entire amount into a $5,000,000 item.

Mr. PADGETT. It has all been calculated and was submitted regularly in the estimates. It does not increase the amount, and they expect to secure an extra submarine by the savings, as I said, from these different classes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There would not be any extra savings to the Government. There would be only the utilization of the additional money that would lap over from the expenditure of these other separate items.

Mr. PADGETT. These that came over would go into the next appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. They would go back into the Treasury.

Mr. PADGETT. They would not go back into the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, as provided in the House bill, where you provide for a sea-going submarine torpedo boat not to exceed $1,100,000 and three coast-defense submarine boats, in an amount not exceeding the aggregate of $1,860,000, and four submarines not exceeding an aggregate of $1,500,000. There is a limitation of cost. Here you have no limitation whatsoever on cost.

Mr. PADGETT. Upon separate groups, and we brought those groups together and put the same limitation upon the sum total.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but there is no limitation on the expenditure in the provision as provided by the Senate.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. There is limitation in line 8, on page 59.

Mr. STAFFORD. Line 8 reads:

And the sum of $1,825,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

That is no limitation on the amount that may be expended for any submarine.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Not for any particular one. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department may expend any amount for any one?

Mr. MANN. They have to build eight for that sum of money.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; they may have to build eight.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachussetts. And they hope to get one more.

Mr. PADGETT. They hope to get nine.

Mr. STAFFORD. They may build seven, but for a small amount, and one at an extreme amount. There is no limitation in this paragraph. It is a departure from the policy of segregation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to further insist on the House disagreement to Senate amendments Nos. 57, 63, 64, and 65.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to further insist on disagreement to amendment No. 68.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 68.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63 of the bill, line 12, after the word "authorized," to insert the words "to be available until expended."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 68.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment numbered 67.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 67: Page 62, line 6, insert the following:

"A committee is hereby authorized to be appointed, to consist of one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the chairmen of the respective committees, and one naval officer, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the selection of a suitable site for the erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant, such as the availability of labor, material, and fuel, and transportation facilities to and from said plant. Said report shall contain the cost of a site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons and a site for an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee and to be immediately available."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 67, and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"A committee is hereby appointed, to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives and one naval officer to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report, at the next regular session of Congress, upon the cost of erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant. Said report shall contain the estimated cost of a plant and site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual-output capacity of 20,000 tons, and also a plant having an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the estimated cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the estimated annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee, payable upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee."

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the following amendment as a substitute for the one offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up to the desk.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in a shape where it can be amended yet. The gentleman from Tennessee has offered a motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Does the gentleman raise a point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will not yet. I want to see first.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is going to do it, he had better do it now.

Mr. PADGETT. Reserving a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] wanted to offer his amendment in order to have it voted upon as an amendment to my amendment, and not as a substitute, because his is very imperfect. I understood he wanted to offer it as an amendment to the amendment which I offered.

Mr. TAVENNER. My intention, Mr. Speaker, was to have the House recede from Senate amendment numbered 67 and then concur with the amendment which I have just sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the gentleman from Tennessee made the motion.

Mr. TAVENNER. I now offer my amendment as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. I make a point of order against it as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it for the information of the Speaker and the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to procure, by contract, armor of the best quality for any or all vessels heretofore or herein provided for, at a price which, in his judgment, is reasonable and equitable, he is hereby authorized and directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor and gun forgings; and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory and the purchase of a site therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on his point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not care to argue it, Mr. Speaker; but it occurs to me that I having made a motion to recede and concur with an amendment, the gentleman from Illinois could not offer a substitute.

Mr. MANN. In the first place, the amendment offered by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is not germane to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 67: Page 62, line 6, insert the following:

"A committee is hereby authorized to be appointed, to consist of one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the chairmen of the respective committees, and one naval officer, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the selection of a suitable site for the erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel capable of standing all ballistic and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy at the lowest possible cost to the Government, taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and sucessful operation of such a plant, such as the availability of labor, material, and fuel, and transportation facilities to and from said plant. Said report shall contain the cost of a site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons and a site for an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each, and the annual cost and maintenance of each, and the estimated cost of the finished product.

"Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

"The sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of said committee and to be immediately available."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] desire to be heard?

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I only desire a ruling on that. Then if it is ruled out on a point of order, I will offer it in another form.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me perfectly plain that the amendment offered by my colleague is not germane to the Senate amendment, or to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], which is practically the same as the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment proposes a committee to make an investigation. That is all there is to that proposition. The amendment offered by my colleague directs the construction of an armor-plate factory, and makes an appropriation for that purpose.

The rulings have been quite consistent upon the subject. In the manual, at the bottom of page——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer that as an amendment to the one of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] by adding it at the end of his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Well, I make the point of order that that is not in order. I supposed that was what he was doing before.

Mr. TAVENNER. The amendment itself is not germane. This same amendment was ruled out in the House, on the ground that it was not germane. Mine is as germane as the other one.

The SPEAKER. But the situation is different from what it was then; and, in addition to that, it does not help out the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois in any way.

Mr. TAVENNER. How is it that one amendment which does not get any result is germane, and another amendment which does get a result is not germane?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to remember that we can not make a point of order in the House against a Senate amendment. That is something beyond our power. We can not strike out the Senate amendment by making a point of order in the House. An amendment that comes from the Senate must be in order, and is in order here, no matter whether it was in order in the Senate or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is germane. The proposition that the Senate and the conferees were driving at was to have an investigation to find out whether this thing ought to be done, and the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is to cut all that out and direct the Secretary of the Navy to do this thing at a cost of $4,000,000. The Chair does not think it is germane.

Mr. TAVENNER. My amendment does not necessarily provide for the building of this armor plant, and it does not prevent the investigation. It is simply added on at the end of that.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the proposition of the conferees and the Senate is to have an investigation.

Mr. TAVENNER. I do not interfere with that investigation.

The SPEAKER. No; but the gentleman proposes an entirely new thing:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to procure, by contract, armor of the best quality for any or all vessels heretofore or herein provided for at a price which in his judgment is reasonable and equitable, he is hereby directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor and gun forgings, and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory and the purchase of a site therefor.

Now, that proposition may be very desirable in itself. As a matter of fact, the Chair has thought for years that it ought to be done. But that has nothing in the world to do with this parliamentary question.

Mr. HARDY. Will the Speaker permit a suggestion along that line?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] may be germane to the amendment of the Senate in this way: That if the investigation provided for by the Senate amendment should show as a matter of fact that the prices demanded by contractors were unreasonable, then this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] would authorize, as a result of the amendment put on by the Senate and the investigation under it, that further steps be taken when that investigation authorized by the Senate amendment showed that the prices asked were unreasonable, if such should be the case.

The SPEAKER. But the trouble about that is that the Senate amendment provides for one thing. This amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] provides for an entirely different thing. You might just as well have provided that the cost of all the machinery shall be thus and so.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the gentleman's amendment is not worded just as it should be, but the Senate amendment provides for a certain investigation, and this amendment is intended to provide that if the investigation shows that the prices for armor plate are unreasonable the Secretary shall have the right to establish an armor-plate factory.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Assuming the investigation is made and report made to Congress recommending an armor-plate factory, does the gentleman think it would be in order on an appropriation bill to insert an item appropriating for it without having legislation to that effect?

Mr. HARDY. My idea is, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], that the Senate amendment was ruled out as improper in the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it never was in the House.

Mr. HARDY. It was so stated a moment ago.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that was a misapprehension.

Mr. HARDY. It was stated that it was ruled out as not germane. But now as it comes in as a Senate amendment it is not subject to a point of order. Now, if the amendment is germane to the amendment of the Senate it would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Of course not if it is germane, but it is not.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me that if the investigation authorized by the Senate amendment shall show that the prices are unreasonable, then this would be germane.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas misapprehends what the Senate amendment is.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not an investigation to inquire into the cost of armor plate?

The SPEAKER. No; it is an investigation to select a suitable site for an armor-plate factory, and so forth. It does not say a word about the reasonable cost of armor plate.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, the gentleman from Texas seems to think that the Senate amendment provides for an investigation as to the reasonable price per ton of armor plate.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair was trying to explain. That seems to be in the mind of the gentleman from Texas, but the Senate amendment has reference to a site for an armor plant, and so forth. It has nothing to do with investigating the reasonableness of the present cost of armor plate, and the amendment that has been submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] has entirely to do with the building of a factory.

Mr. HARDY. I thought that the Senate amendment contemplated an investigation as to the cost of armor plate, but I see that it does not.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained, and the question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee offers.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment 71.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale, in such manner, at such price, and upon such terms as he shall deem proper, of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall, after payment therefrom of the expenses of such sale, be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury, and shall, until expended, be available for the construction of such other vessel or vessels, at least equal for purposes of offense and defense to the most modern vessels of the same class now projected here or abroad, as the President may in his discretion authorize: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold, exchanged, or conveyed under this authorization unless such sale, exchange, or conveyance, or the agreement therefor, shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915: Provided further, That any vessel or vessels constructed from the money received from the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho shall not be included in the annual appropriations for the increase of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale in such manner, at such price not less than the original cost price and upon such terms as he may deem proper, of the two battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury. After said sale, in addition to the two battleships hereinbefore authorized the President is hereby authorized to have constructed a first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost exclusive of armor and armament not to exceed $7,800,000. Out of the money when so deposited in the Treasury there is hereby appropriated toward the construction of said battleship on account of increase of the Navy: Construction and machinery, $2,000,000; armor and armament, $2,535,000, and equipment, $100,000: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold under this authorization unless such sale or the agreement therefor, shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment, if that is in order—and if it is not I will ask for a division of the question—by striking out all after the word "Treasury," in line 7 of the amendment, down to the word "Provided," in the fourth line from the bottom.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question in connection with that so that we can simplify the matter here. If the House does not approve of the amendment for the sale in the form in which it is offered, the department does not desire to sell the ships.

Mr. MANN. That is not for the department to say. This is a matter of conferring discretion upon the President. The department is not Congress yet.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The President is, but the department is not.

Mr. PADGETT. I was just stating what the views of the department were. The department does not desire to make the sale unless the other ship should take the place of the two that are sold.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter for discussion. I want the amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Clerk report the language that I propose to strike out.

The SPEAKER. Very well. The Clerk will report the language proposed to be stricken out of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from the amendment the following: "After said sale, in addition to the two battleships hereinbefore authorized, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed a first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,800,000. Out of the money, when so deposited in the Treasury, there is hereby appropriated toward the construction of said battleship on account of 'increase of the Navy': 'construction and machinery,' $2,000,000; 'armor and armament,' $2,535,000; and 'equipment,' $100,000."

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois simply strikes out the battleship to be built and proceeds with the sale.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order and ask the Speaker if a motion of that kind is in order?

The SPEAKER. Why is it not in order?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. I ask the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Why is it not in order? The gentleman has not made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. He has made the point of order that it is not in order.

Mr. MANN. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. That it is not germane, the Chair would suppose.

Mr. MANN. It is germane, because it seeks to strike out a part of his own amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, the original motion is to recede and concur with an amendment, and this is an amendment to strike out a part of that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Here is a ruling, Mr. Speaker, to be found in section 777 of the manual:

Hence an amendment simply striking out words already in a bill may not be ruled out as not germane. (Vol. 5, sec. 5805, Hinds' Precedents.)

Mr. PADGETT. It is not a question of germaneness.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then what is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order if it is not that?

Mr. PADGETT. The point of order is that it is not in order to move to strike out a part of a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is in order one way or the other. I think it is in order now, but, if it is not, all I have to do is to demand a division of the question to recede and concur, and then as soon as the House recedes it will be in order without question. I think it is in order now, but I know it would be in order then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not understand why it is not in order to strike out part of a proposition before a vote is taken upon it. It has been ruled on that way time after time, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MANN. The amendment was to strike out all after the provision depositing the money in the Treasury down to the proviso at the end of the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the gentleman add a provision that it be inserted in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that would be the case anyway.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sure, and it will not hurt the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to strike out and insert in lieu thereof the words "as miscellaneous receipts."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Treasury," in line 7 of the amendment, down to and including the figures "$100,000," and insert the words "as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] rise?

Mr. MADDEN. Nobody has the floor to speak on this amendment, so I thought I would like to get a chance to tell what I thought about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has control of the time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason why we should offer these battleships for sale. All the inquiries I have been able to make as to why they are being offered for sale lead me to this conclusion. In the first place, there was a great mistake in the character of the ships built when these two ships were built, it is said. Some say they are obsolete. Some one says they never were any good; that they did not fit in any place, not even in the water [laughter]; that they have no place in our system of navy; that they were the last ships built before the dreadnaught was introduced. That they are obsolete I can not understand, for they were only authorized in 1903. They were not constructed until two years later, and they are only 6 years of age. If they ever were any good, they ought to be good now. Why we want to sell a ship that we built only four years ago I can not understand. If the ships were not properly built, we ought to find out who is to blame for it. If they were not properly designed, we ought to find out who is to blame for that. We claim that our naval constructors are the best constructors in the world, that our naval designers are the best there are. It is evident somebody has made a great mistake. If these ships have either been properly designed or properly constructed, why do we sell the ships or offer them for sale? Who knows? Does the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs know, and is he willing to tell why? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs why these ships are being offered for sale. What is the matter with them? Why are not they good for us? Did we understand our business when we built them or were the designers at fault? Is the Navy being run as it ought to be, or is it only a species of extravagance about which the people of the United States ought to know something?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it be a fact that these two battleships are of no value to us, would it not be good policy to sell them and get what they are worth—what they cost?

Mr. MADDEN. It may be good policy for us to find out whether they are of any value or not. If they are not, it is good policy for us to find out why and who is to blame.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us get the money.

Mr. MADDEN. We are constantly priding ourselves upon our great efficiency in the construction and maintenance and operation of a navy, and yet we are advertising ourselves to all the world as unequal to the occasion. We authorized the ships in 1903; we built those ships in 1908, and before half the year 1914 is out we say to the world that these ships are no longer qualified for a place in the American Navy; that they are obsolete; that they do not fit in the scheme; that they are not the ships we need; that we have spent our money in vain; that we have squandered the public money recklessly in attempting to build ships to suit the whim of some man in the Navy who pretends to be an expert. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, if he will not be kind enough to tell the House what is the matter with the ships, why we offer them for sale, how much they cost us, why we can not use them, how much we have spent on them for repairs, who designed them, under whose direction they were built, and why we made a great mistake in the building of ships that have no place in the American Navy? Let somebody answer.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I wonder if we can not secure some agreement in reference to debate on this proposition. I doubt whether we can get through to-night, but if gentlemen want to sit——

Mr. PADGETT. Can not we finish to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope so, I want to work on the sundry civil bill to-night for four or five hours and I expect to have a night session to-night.

Mr. MANN. There are several gentlemen who want to be heard. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] would like to have a half hour, and I think he ought to have it, and there are some other gentlemen here who want to be heard on this proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like for us to try to finish it to-night. We can not take it up Thursday or Friday, because those days are already set apart, and to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday. I would like to finish it to-night. I would be willing to ask unanimous consent that I be granted two hours time, and I will yield one hour of it to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] for control on that side, and use one hour on my side, I to have control of the time.

Mr. FOSTER. I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] has an amendment which he desires to offer. Would he be permitted to offer that in that time and have it pending?

Mr. PADGETT. If it would be in order. There is already an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. The substitute would not be in order until the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would first be dispensed with.

Mr. PADGETT. The substitute would take out the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he would permit at this time that my colleague should have the right to offer an amendment as a substitute, which would be voted on after the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. PADGETT. I am willing for him to offer his substitute now and let it be pending.

Mr. TAVENNER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels heretofore or herein provided for, at a price which, in his judgment, is reasonable and equitable, he is hereby authorized and directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor and gun forgings; and $4,000,000 of the sum utilized from the sale of such battleships is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory and the purchase of a site therefor.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to any of the propositions pending.

Mr. TAVENNER. The only difference is whether he should use the money to buy battleships or an armor-plate factory. I want to make a correction in that amendment and use the word "realize" instead of "utilize."

Mr. MANN. Change it in any way you want and it would not be germane.

Mr. TAVENNER. The only difference would be between the words "battleship" and "armor plant." If it is germane to buy a battleship, it is germane to buy an armor plant.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not. The gentleman might as well say that on a proposition in the House to construct battleships it would be in order to offer an amendment to construct an armor plant. It is foolish to argue it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Now, can we agree upon the time?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended two hours, with the statement that I will yield one hour of that time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

Mr. MANN. That you have two hours' time?

Mr. PADGETT. Two hours' time, and that I yield one hour of that to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time shall be extended for two hours, with the agreement that he yield one hour of the time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON]. Is there objection?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire how much of the hour he has used thus far?

Mr. PADGETT. I mean two hours from now.

The SPEAKER. That will not be included in the two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I wanted to ask whether it was intended to go on with this discussion now or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, unless I get information on that point I shall object. I would like to know whether it is the intention to continue in session now?

Mr. PADGETT. That is my expectation and hope.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If you are going to continue to run on this evening, I shall object.

Mr. RAKER. Before the gentleman objects, will he not yield to a question? Would it not be satisfactory to the gentleman from Washington if the time be extended two hours and a half?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection to the extension of the time, but I want to ascertain whether they are going to vote to-night or not?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I see no reason why we should stay here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object if we are going to insist on a vote to-night.

Mr. MANN. Do not do that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not see any reason why we should stay here and devote our time, these long hours, to a session when we know we are going to stay here all summer. You gentlemen have received your orders and are going to obey them.

Mr. PADGETT. It is necessary to have this bill passed and become a law before July 1.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are anxious to pass something soon the gentleman is interested in himself, and I hope he will not object.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What was the gentleman's remark?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say we are anxious to pass something in which the gentleman himself is likely to be interested, and the more quickly we dispose of the naval appropriation bill the more quickly we will accommodate him.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not see that I am going to be especially accommodated.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not this bill; it is the other bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. At the same time I can not see any reason why we should be in session these long hours. It will not be a long time now until we are around here adjourning three days at a time, waiting for the Senate to get through with the business it has on hand, and men situated as I am will have to stay here all summer. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] objects.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If they can agree to vote at some other time, I shall not object to staying here.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short statement at this time relative to this proposition. I will submit a request for unanimous consent and see if that can be agreed to. I ask unanimous consent that when we adjourn to-night, if we shall adjourn before the completion of this conference report—and this is the last amendment, I believe, undisposed of—we may complete the conference report to-morrow morning, commencing at 11 o'clock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We expect to do work to-night after the gentleman has finished with his conference report. He will be finished before 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour, unless there is an agreement made.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, I understood, has made another request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. It is easy enough for the gentleman from Tennessee. The objection which has been made does not amount to anything. The gentleman's request does not amount to a great deal. If he occupies his hour and yields time, the minute he takes his seat the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] will be recognized for an hour. Two hours are provided for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy a great deal of time just at this time in explaining this matter. There is no complication about it. The proposition is to sell the two ships and use the money to build a much better one.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was making some criticism of the two ships, stating that they were poor ships, and so forth. That is not correct. They are very good ships of their class. The gentleman from Illinois stated that they were authorized in 1908 and completed two years later. That was erroneous. They were authorized in 1903 and completed in 1908. These two ships have each a displacement of 13,000 tons. They are undersized, but they are good ships of their class. It is true that they have a low freeboard aft, so that in high seas the waves wash over the rear part of the ship.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. At what price is it proposed to sell them?

Mr. PADGETT. At not less than the original cost.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What was the original cost?

Mr. PADGETT. The Idaho cost $5,895,000 in round figures. The other vessel—the Mississippi—cost $5,832,000, or slightly more than that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is it the proposition to sell them at cost price for cash?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not say "for cash." It says "upon such terms as the President may negotiate," but it provides that the price shall not be less than the original cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might get an international lawsuit on some pretty poor promissory notes. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. I presume they will be sold for cash.

Each of these ships has four 12-inch guns. The proposal was to construct, in lieu of these two slips, one ship similar to the ones authorized in the bill, which would be of about 31,000 tons displacement, that would carry twelve 14-inch guns.

In the statement that was submitted in the argument on the battleship question, when we had the bill first under consideration in the House, I submitted a letter from Admiral Dewey in which he gave a statement of the relative military value and efficiency of the different types or classes of ships. The Delaware was taken as the standard of military value and efficiency of the dreadnaught class and was placed at 100. The New York was placed at the value of 157. The Idaho and the Mississippi are placed at a value of 35. I leave off the fractions. So that the ship authorized in lieu of these two ships, which shall have twelve 14-inch guns, instead of eight 12-inch guns upon the two, would have a great fighting efficiency than four of the ships, the others having 35; or four times 35 is less than 157.

Now, that is the whole proposition. We propose to substitute for these two ships that we have had for several years a new ship of double the fighting value of the two ships combined, and for the two ships that we thus dispose of we shall get the original cost price.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. About how long, in the gentleman's judgment, will it take to construct this better ship that he speaks of?

Mr. PADGETT. They run from 32 months to 36 months in construction.

Mr. HENSLEY. At any rate we will not need these two vessels within that length of time.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether we would need them or not. Of course the sale of them would to that extent diminish the fighting efficiency of the existing Navy.

Mr. HENSLEY. You have already stated that they are efficient, and good fighting vessels.

Mr. PADGETT. Of their class, they are; yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. And you are striking down to that extent the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. It would to that extent temporarily reduce the fighting force of the Navy.

Mr. HENSLEY. And for something near three years we would be out of the use of these two vessels.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then you think we have an efficient Navy at this time, which will enable us to do that with safety?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I have stated the facts as to the efficiency of our Navy quite often, in the presence of the gentleman and of the House.

Mr. HENSLEY. That is true, is it not, without any quibbling?

Mr. PADGETT. We have a good Navy; yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if the material out of which these ships are built has not increased in value and if the prices have not gone up very much in the last few years?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the relative value is, but we have had the use of them all this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What is the object of any foreign nation buying them if they do not think they are getting a good bargain?

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose their necessities impel them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Have they any war on hand over there?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a matter that I am not prepared to discuss.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House whether there have been any negotiations made for the purchase of these ships by any foreign Government?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not say. I have no information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any information that any negotiations have been undertaken?

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing except what I have seen in the press.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is that?

Mr. PADGETT. I have seen in the press the statement that one of the foreign nations wanted to buy them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was that Greece?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I saw suggested in the press.

Mr. STAFFORD. And we also read in the press that Greece is on the threshold of a war with the Ottoman Empire.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it is good ethics for our Government to be a party to a transaction of this kind, with a belligerent, just about the time it is entering into a warfare with another nation?

Mr. PADGETT. As to whether there is any threatened war or not, I do not know.

Mr. JONES. It might prevent a war.

Mr. PADGETT. It might prevent a war if they were prepared.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there is no question whatsoever that these ships are intended to be used in belligerent operations. In that event would not the Ottoman Empire have a good ground of complaint against this Government if we sold these vessels at this time?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever, if hostilities have not been declared.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the ethics are just as bad, even though hostilities have not been declared.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no. The international relations are entirely different.

Mr. FOSTER. If these are not good ships, does not the gentleman think we are more likely to get into trouble for working a confidence game on some foreign Government?

Mr. PADGETT. They are good ships of their class.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would rather uphold the dignity of our Government and its reputation for fair treatment than adopt a standard of double-dealing with foreign nations.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman thinks they are good ships, does he not believe we ought to keep them?

Mr. PADGETT. I said they are good ships of their class, but with the proceeds of the sale we could practically build a ship that would be worth double the value of the two ships combined. The progress in shipbuilding has been so great that we could double the fighting value.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman from Tennessee give us some information as to this story that has been going around the newspapers that probably the airships will finally be so perfected that the great dreadnaughts will not be effective on the water and that they will have to get out of the way and keep under cover?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any nation that is acting on that theory.

Mr. FOSTER. And that the fighting will be between airships, and not between dreadnaughts?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any such theory that prevails anywhere.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, these two ships cost about $5,800,000 each.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; slightly more.

Mr. HARDY. But together they cost about eleven millions and a half.

Mr. PADGETT. Nearly twelve millions.

Mr. HARDY. What will the new ship cost?

Mr. PADGETT. Between $14,000,000 and $15,000,000.

Mr. HARDY. Then the ultimate outcome of the amendment would be to increase the naval building program some four or five million dollars.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at this time; it would involve an additional expenditure later on—about three years from now.

Mr. HARDY. That is to say, it would provide for the ultimate expenditure of $4,000,000 more than the bill now carries.

Mr. PADGETT. Between three and four million dollars.

Mr. HARDY. Would that include the equipment?

Mr. PADGETT. Everything complete.

Mr. HARDY. Does this price include the guns of these ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; hull, machinery, armor, and armament. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

EXPLORATION FOR AND DISPOSITION OF COAL, OIL, GAS, ETC.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, by permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I want to ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas potassium, or sodium. (H. Rept. 668, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Minority views on H. R. 16136, to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks leave to file minority views on the bill H. R. 16136. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15279. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12826. An act to reinstate Francis Graves Bonham as a cadet at the United States Military Academy; and

H. R. 15280. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5147) to authorize and direct Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Canal Zone, and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to investigate certain claims of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

The Committee on Enrolled Bills report that this day they have presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 14189. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2069. An act for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey;

S. 2226. An act for the relief of Joel J. Parker;

S. 2590. An act to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses;

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams; and

S. 55. An act for the relief of Daniel Hampton.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Speaker to call my attention after I have used 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a novel proposition. As I understand it, it is a new invention for the purpose of squandering the public funds, and I am opposed to issuing any patent on it. [Laughter.] Now, we passed a bill through the House providing for the construction of two more battleships. The Senate has concurred with us. I explained to this House the best I could when the bill was under consideration that there were six corporations in the United States equipped to build battleships; that it takes three years to construct a battleship and that, therefore, it is necessary to authorize two every year in order to give each one of these corporations a job all the time.

We authorized all that was necessary to keep the Government pets going, and if the House had just let it alone you never would have heard of selling any battleships and constructing a third one. But we made a great mistake by amending the bill so as to provide that one of these two battleships should be constructed in a Government navy yard. When you did that, you did not leave enough to go around. [Laughter.] Consequently it became necessary to devise some kind of a scheme by which all of these corporations would have a job on a battleship all the time. This amendment before you answers the demand.

Now, the effect of this amendment if adopted, if you decide to sell the two of our battleships and with the proceeds build a dreadnaught, there are two effects which will follow from it. One is that the construction of this third dreadnaught is going to afford much profit to the corporation that builds it.

As I pointed out here before, the graft in the armor plate alone on a battleship is over a million dollars, to say nothing of the shells and the powder and all the other things. It is absolutely unnecessary for me to argue to you that one effect of our selling two battleships and building another dreadnaught is going to be to increase the profits of the trust. The other effect of it is going to be a decrease and a lessening of the efficiency and power of the Navy in every respect. These are the two effects of it.

In the first place, it is going to lessen the number of our battleships. When you start out on this policy of selling 2 of our 39 battleships and with the proceeds constructing a third one, when you get through with the 25 battleships under that kind of a policy, then you will have instead of 39 but 27 battleships left. And you will have 12 less than Germany has now. That is the effect of it if the policy is adopted and started on with reference to the number of ships, and whenever they can get the number of our battleships less than the number in the German Navy, then you will hear such a clamor as you never heard before for the construction of more ships, because we have not as many as Germany.

Take next the number of guns. The Mississippi and the Idaho each has four 12-inch guns, each of them has eight 8-inch guns and eight 7-inch guns, making 40 guns on the two ships. It is proposed to sell those two ships with 40 guns on them and to substitute therefor one ship with 12 guns.

The chairman in his remarks a few moments ago stated that you were going to have twelve 14-inch guns. That is an utter impossibility. You can not have any such thing as that. Of course you can take the proceeds of these two battleships when you sell them and add enough money to that to get any sort of a ship you want, but that is not a fair way to present it. A fair way to consider this question is whether or not, when you sell these two ships and get in their stead another ship that costs the same amount of money, you have lost or gained by the transaction. If you were to build a dreadnaught that would carry twelve 14-inch guns, you would have to build one with a tonnage of 31,400; you would have to build one that would cost $17,000,000, and of course you can add five or six million dollars to the proceeds of these two battleships if you can sell them at cost and build that kind of a ship, but the fair thing for us to consider is what we can get for the money that these ships will sell for, whether we will get something more valuable or less valuable than these two ships. In my judgment the very best you could do with these would be to build a dreadnaught like the Arkansas. As stated to you here, the tonnage of each of these ships is 13,000, or together their tonnage is 26,000. The Arkansas is the only ship we have that has a tonnage exactly equal to both of these—26,000—and that is the very best ship you could get with the proceeds of the sale of these two.

The Arkansas has twelve 12-inch guns, and if you could succeed in exchanging these two ships for one like the Arkansas, then you would have exchanged eight 12-inch guns on these two ships for twelve 12-inch guns on the Arkansas. In other words, you would gain four 12-inch guns, but in doing that you will lose sixteen 8-inch guns and sixteen 7-inch guns, or 32 of those guns. The question is whether or not you could afford to give up thirty-two 8-inch and 7-inch guns for four 12-inch guns. That is the proposition. I say, when you do it you lessen the efficiency and power of the Navy in every respect. In the first place, you start out by lessening the number of guns. You exchange 40 for 12, and you lessen the number of guns by 28 on this one transaction, and if you were to continue that policy until you had disposed of all 25 of our battleships, getting in their stead 12 dreadnaughts, then you would have reduced the number of guns on our armored vessels from 926 to 578. We now have 89 more guns on our armored vessels than Germany has, but if you adopt this policy and carry it through, then we would have on our armored vessels 259 guns less than Germany has. You would thereby change from a condition of superiority in number of guns by 89 to a condition of inferiority to the extent of 259. That is the first effect of it. We now have 9 more armored vessels than Germany has. If you were to continue this policy until you dispose of all of our battleships, then we would have three less than Germany.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAMS). Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were—ayes 23, noes 27.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I move a call of the House.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have already made a motion that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee for a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 31, noes 31.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 31.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PADGETT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 37.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that can not be done——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it does not require a quorum to order a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chairs knows it does not, but——

Mr. MANN. The point of no quorum was made some time ago, and the Chair declared that there was no quorum present, and that point has been sustained.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the Chair did not happen to be in the chair. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MANN. There is nothing to do except either to adjourn or order a call of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory. We have voted on that motion twice already.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is plain it is not dilatory, because the House can only do one of two things when it finds itself without a quorum—order a call of the House or adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this is the third time the motion has been made.

Mr. MANN. But the House has declined to order a call of the House, and the only other motion in order is to adjourn.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, there has been an intervening motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee would have a perfect right to move a call of the House.

Mr. LEVER. He did move it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows he moved it, and it was voted down.

Mr. MANN. A motion to adjourn must be in order.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is the only motion pending. You can not move two calls of the House twice immediately following each other, the Chair would think.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When there develops a lack of a quorum and a motion to adjourn is voted down, is not there a special rule that the motion is again to be voted upon?

The SPEAKER. No; there is no such rule as that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are only two motions in order, either to adjourn or a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. There are only two motions—one when the House finds itself without a quorum——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It must be seconded by a majority on a rising vote.

The SPEAKER. To do what?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When the motion has been voted down——

The SPEAKER. That is where you get a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 35.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-two gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 32, nays 110, answered "present" 5, not voting 285, as follows:

Mr. WHALEY with Mr. SMITH of Idaho.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman.

The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BARTLETT, and I would like to know whether he voted or not?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will have to withdraw my vote. I voted "nay," and I would like to vote "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the roll discloses the lack of a quorum, and I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves a call of the House, as the vote discloses that there is no quorum present.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. The doors were locked an hour ago.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the calling of the roll.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] moves that further proceedings be dispensed with under the call.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in lieu of that I move that the Speaker issue his warrants for the arrest of absent Members and bring them to the House.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] can not make a motion in lieu of a motion.

The SPEAKER. Upon which one of his motions does the gentleman from Washington stand? He made two at once, or two so close together that they sounded like one—to adjourn, and to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BRYAN. I will stand on the motion to adjourn, Mr. Speaker. If that does not work I will stand on the other. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. McCOY. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOY. The Speaker has just stated that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] made two motions.

The SPEAKER. He tried to make two.

Mr. McCOY. As a matter of fact, he did make two. Now, does not one of them nullify the other?

The SPEAKER. One was out of order and the Chair is inclined to think the other is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That motion must be seconded.

The SPEAKER. The motion must be seconded by a majority of those present. That was the point that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] had in his mind some time ago, but it did not apply to the situation that we then had, though it applies to the situation that we have now. Those in favor of seconding the motion to adjourn will rise and stand until they are counted. The rule provides that the motion must be seconded by a count of the Speaker. It is a very peculiar rule, and the Chair will read it. It provides:

> If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with. At any time after the roll call has been completed the Speaker may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Speaker, and if the House adjourns all proceedings under this section shall be vacated.

Those in favor of seconding the motion of the gentleman from Washington will rise——

Mr. BRYAN. It is a good chance to get home, is it not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. Those in favor of seconding the motion of the gentleman will rise, and stand until they are counted.

Mr. KINDEL. Is that to adjourn this meeting, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is to adjourn.

Mr. PALMER. Sine die.

Mr. KINDEL. Then I am in favor of adjourning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixteen gentlemen have risen to second the motion to adjourn. The Chair will now count the gentlemen present, to see if that constitutes a majority.

Mr. PALMER. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no other side. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members are present, and 16 are not a majority. The House declines to adjourn, and the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is in order, that the Speaker issue warrants for the arrest of absent Members. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Will that cause any of my colleagues from the State of Washington to be arrested?

The SPEAKER. If they are absent and the Sergeant at Arms finds them, it will.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order to grant immunity from arrest to the aged and decrepit Members of this body?

The SPEAKER. Not until they are brought in here.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to renew my request to address the House for 20 minutes, in answer to the speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that until we get a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that while it is true he can not, under the rules of the House, get unanimous consent to speak, there is absolutely nothing to prevent his speaking. But I do not know whether the gentleman's speech could go into the RECORD if it were made under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is very doubtful whether it would or not.

The SPEAKER. Toward the end of the first session, after I was elected Speaker, there were several speeches made in just such a situation as this, but I directed the Official Reporter to leave them out of the RECORD. I do not believe speeches made when the House is without a quorum ought to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If no Member present objects to my colleague, Mr. SWITZER, making a speech at this time, will his speech be allowed to go into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The rule provides that when the absence of a quorum is developed only two things can be done. One of them is to adjourn, and the other is to order a call of the House. Of course all the incidental motions that go with a call of the House are permissible, but nothing else is. Now, sometimes, toward the end of the session, when we have been waiting for conference reports and run out of anything to do, then, by a sort of common agreement, for the amusement of the Members or to keep them awake, speeches have been made, but that practice was run into the ground here once, and I ordered the Official Reporter not to print the speeches in the RECORD.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I should like to say, further, that my colleague [Mr. SWITZER] has a speech that he wishes to make, and probably will make at some time, and there will be no time wasted if he is allowed to speak at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands; but the business of the Chair is to enforce the rules of the House. That is what the Speaker is here for.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the warrant just issued by the Speaker for the arrest of absentees be recalled, and that proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. The only motion in order in the situation in which we now are is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SLOAN. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is in order, if it is seconded by a majority of the Members present.

Mr. SLOAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the House do now adjourn. Those in favor of seconding that motion will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-two Members have risen to second the motion. The Chair will count the Members present to see if 22 are a majority of them. [After counting.] Seventy-two Members present. Twenty-two are not a majority of 72; and the motion to adjourn fails.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, will a motion to adjourn be in order at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FINLEY). It is.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, that motion has to be seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana moves that the House do now adjourn. All in favor of seconding the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty Members have risen to second the motion. All gentlemen will now be seated and the Chair will count those present. [After counting.] Sixty-nine Members present, so the motion to adjourn is seconded.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were—ayes 33, noes 44.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELDER. Where a count has developed only 69 Members present, how many does it take to demand tellers?

The SPEAKER. It takes one-fifth of a quorum of the House to order tellers, and one-fifth of a quorum of the House is 44. Tellers are refused.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is dilatory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for me to make a few remarks?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEAVER). It would not; the only motion in order is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to make some remarks as to the number of Members of the Sixty-third Congress who have been here continuously since April 7 of last year without returning to their homes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, for satisfactory reasons that I can explain I would like to ask leave of absence for a few hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that no business is in order at this time.

Mr. HULINGS. I make a motion that I be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is ill, and I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the absolute right to walk out of the door and go home. There is no provision in the rule for leave of absence.

Mr. MANN. Will the Speaker allow me to call his attention to a footnote on page 325 of the manual:

> During a call less than a quorum may revoke leaves of absence and excuse a Member from attendance, but they may not grant leaves of absence.

The SPEAKER. That is not this case.

Mr. MANN. This is to excuse a Member from attendance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the right to leave. The footnote reads:

> During the call less than a quorum may revoke leaves of absence and excuse Members from attendance, but may not grant leaves of absence.

Mr. MANN. I think probably that refers to the case where the Member has not come in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, too. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is sick, he has a perfect right to go home.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The rule on page 325 of the manual says:

> And those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of the majority of those present, be sent for and arrested wherever they may be found by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose and their attendance secured and retained.

I desire to inquire if the attendance of those who have reported are being retained by the proper authority?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer that question; that is for the Doorkeeper.

Mr. HAWLEY. The rule further says:

> And the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

I desire to ask if the Members who have been arrested and brought in are in the custody of the House?

The SPEAKER. Technically they are. The rule further provides that if a man comes in voluntarily he is not under arrest. But every Member that the Sergeant at Arms brings in is technically under arrest. When the Chair first came here, years ago, he has seen them harnessed up and put through all sorts of performances, but all that has disappeared with the lapse of years.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it not the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to make a report to the House?

Mr. MANN. If the Sergeant at Arms notifies a Member to come in and does not arrest him, but he drops in, he is not under arrest.

The SPEAKER. The truth about it is, answering the gentleman's inquiry further, the matter of arresting Members on such an occasion is in rather a hazy condition, as far as the decisions go, and always has been. The Chair has no sort of doubt that it is perfectly competent for the House to punish Members who have to be brought in by the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, if I may make a further parliamentary inquiry, the real purpose of my making this inquiry is this: If there is no method of retaining Members here when brought in, they may come in and go out, and some one may make a point of order and we will be without a quorum again.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the truth, and the Chair has seen as many as a dozen men come in here at one time on a call of the House, with their overcoats on and hats in their hands, and walk out without sitting down. They answered to their names and they go right out again. That is the practice, whatever the rule is.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the Speaker remembers on one occasion when they tried to prevent a Member from Texas going out, he kicked the door down?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not here, but he remembers about that historical incident very well.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, once a quorum is secured the doors are opened and Members can go out.

Mr. MANN. The doors are locked.

Mr. FOSTER. But when a quorum is announced, then the doors are opened and a Member can make a point of order of no quorum within 15 minutes afterwards or at whatever time he wishes.

Mr. MANN. All of which reminds one that you can lead a horse to water, but you can not make him drink.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it takes a second.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair was going to say. Those in favor of seconding the motion will rise and stand until they can be counted. [After counting.] Twenty-one gentlemen have risen to second the motion to adjourn. The Chair will count to see how many are here. [After counting.] Twenty-one gentlemen voted to second the motion and there are 105 Members in the Hall, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. How many do we lack now of having a quorum?

The SPEAKER. We lack about 20.

Mr. BRYAN. How can we lack about 20 when the Speaker has only counted——

The SPEAKER. They are all around in the lobby and the cloak rooms. The Chair announced that there were 105 Members in the Hall.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to inquire of the Speaker if the time for general debate has been definitely decided upon on this question?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that was decided upon along about 5 o'clock.

Mr. BRITTEN. It was my understanding at that time that no agreement had been reached. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was about to object, and then the result was obtained in a different way; but no definite time for general debate was agreed upon, I think.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; it was. Two hours were agreed upon.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] ought to make that reference to my colleague during his absence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to get at the straight of the inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. I want to know if the time for general debate has been positively fixed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state how it was. They could not get an agreement. There are two or three ways of doing a thing in this life. So the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] was recognized for one hour, and then he used about 10 minutes of his time, reserved the rest, and sat down. He was entitled to an hour, of course. Then the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] was recognized for an hour. He used 12 minutes of his time, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] made the point of order that there was no quorum present. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi has 48 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Tennessee has 50.

Mr. BRITTEN. Suppose those two gentlemen use up that time and some other Member on the floor is recognized?

Mr. MANN. He will not be.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would he be entitled to an hour?

The SPEAKER. If the two gentlemen named use up their time and nobody moves the previous question, then any gentleman who got the floor would be entitled to an hour, ad infinitum.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not yet understand how those two gentlemen were named for the hour apiece.

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] rose and addressed the Chair, and he is entitled to prior recognition under the practices of the House; so the Chair recognized him for 1 hour. He used 10 minutes of his time and sat down, and reserved the other 50 minutes. The next gentleman up was a member of the committee on the other side of the question, Mr. WITHERSPOON, and under the practice the Chair recognized him for an hour. He used 12 minutes of his time, and would have used the rest in some way, either by continuing to speak himself or yielding to somebody else; but the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] impinged with his point of order that no quorum was present, and of course that broke up the speech making, and we have been trying to get a quorum ever since. Now, when we do get a quorum, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] has the right to the floor to finish his hour. When he gets through, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] desires to use his 50 minutes he will have the right to do it; or, if he waives the right temporarily, the Chair will recognize some one else for an hour.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then that "some one else" is entitled to an hour's general debate?

The SPEAKER. Anybody who can get the eye of the Speaker and recognition from him. But the gentleman from Tennessee has the right to move the previous question any time within his hour; and, as a matter of practice, they usually reserve one minute out of their time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then there still is no definite agreement for the general debate?

The SPEAKER. Not a particle. So far as the present situation is concerned, if they ever get a quorum, they can debate it until Christmas.

The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighteen Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The proceedings under the call are dispensed with. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the amendment I offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. I understand he desires to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois withdraws his amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion made by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the motion that he made, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 71 and concur in the same with an amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment number 71 of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 71. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference with the Senate upon the amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Were there not some amendments of the Senate that were agreed to, with amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I suppose, then, that the House should insist upon its amendments to the Senate amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

Mr. PADGETT. There are certain amendments that the House has concurred in. It does not embrace those.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman's motion is that the House insist upon its amendments to the Senate amendments which were agreed to with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House insist upon its amendments to the Senate amendments which were agreed to with amendments. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House ask for a further conference. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, and Mr. BUTLER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following personal request which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully request indefinite leave of absence on account of business.

Very sincerely, yours, FRANK L. GREENE.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Franklin K. Lane, on the American flag.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by having printed in the RECORD an address on the American flag by Secretary Lane. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 17, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 17, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. C. Everest Granger, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Glorious Lord God, infinite, eternal, unchangeable in Thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, truth, in Thy name we are assembled, and in Thy name we desire to proceed with all our deliberations. Grant us, we pray Thee, Thy holy favor at this and at all times. Give us a reasonable, religious, and holy hope in Thee for counsel and for direction. Give us a sufficiency of Thy Divine grace that we may live holy lives, lives that shall constrain Thy love, lives that shall command Thy blessing, lives that shall count for good.

Bless all men and all nations. Save us, O God, from the poison of selfishness. May we not live alone for ourselves. Those blessings which we desire for ourselves may we also desire for all men, and with this lofty conception of duty may we, O God, enter into the spirit, the experience, and the exercise of the true evangel. May we realize that he who would find life must be willing to lose it. May we as individuals and as a Nation be willing to conduct ourselves in the spirit of the Nazarene. Above all, may we to ourselves be true. Then it must follow, as the night the day, we can not be false to any man. Sanctify us through Thy truth and eternally save us. And unto Thee will we give all praise eternally. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. This announcement will stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and also the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Both Senators have general pairs.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce for the day that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes; recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 34 and 53 to the bill and agrees to the same; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 67 and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 67; further insists upon its disagreement to the residue of the amendments; requests a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, and Mr. BUTLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Walnut Grove, Beaver Creek, and Brandon, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Duluth, St. Paul, and Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 615, International Association of Machinists, of Proctor, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the complete inspection of locomotives and their appurtenances, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of W. J. McLeod, of Slayton, Minn., praying that strictly mutual building and loan associations be exempted from regulations governing interstate corporations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THORNTON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Phillips Bluff and Kinder, in the State of Louisiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Martinsville, La., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to all widows of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of the Hotel Men's Association, of Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Nebraska, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Department Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, favoring the acquisition by purchase by the Government of the battle field of Bull Run, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send to the desk a resolution in the shape of a petition and ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

WACO, TEX., June 10, 1914.

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Resolved, That we are in hearty favor of national constitutional prohibition, and will do all in our power to secure the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution forever prohibiting the sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, and exportation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States in accordance with the joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON and in the Senate by United States Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD.

Adopted by the World-Wide Baraca and Philathea Union Convention held in Waco, Tex., representing 1,000,000 people.

MARSHALL A. HUDSON, President.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented memorials of sundry citizens of Texas, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Texas, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. I am receiving a number of letters and telegrams asking for a postponement of the proposed antitrust legislation—not enough to indicate any conspiracy or concerted action, but representing the sentiment of the business people of the State of Washington. I have one telegram—I will not burden the RECORD with the others—from the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, such will be the order. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the memorial.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

SEATTLE, WASH., June 16, 1914.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Among prudent business men the opinion is held very generally that there are provisions in the Clayton antitrust bill which, if enacted into law, would harass and seriously injure the business and industries of the country. We respectfully submit that a bill like this, designed to regulate the vast, varied, and complex business of 100,000,000 enterprising people should not be hastily drawn up or enacted. Therefore we earnestly urge you to support Senator SAULSBURY'S resolution postponing the Clayton antitrust bill until next winter. In the meantime the trade commission to be created could be gathering information that would be of great assistance to the Senate in forming a wise and well-considered measure in aid of the Sherman law. If the additional time were taken to consider the bill more deliberately, as in the case of the currency bill, it is believed that the purpose of Congress to prevent monopoly and unfair business practices, while leaving honest business and industry of every kind a fair field, with no favors to be be asked or granted, would result in a law that would clear away the barriers of doubt, uncertainty, and apprehension which are to-day the principal obstacles to an abounding prosperity in every line of activity.

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
J. E. CHILBERG, President.
C. B. YANDELL, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials presented by the Senator from Washington will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CLAPP presented a memorial of the Rotary Club of Duluth, Minn., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called antitrust bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DU PONT presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of further legislation during this session of Congress for the regulation and control of business, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against Government ownership of telephones, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1293) to correct the military record of Harrison H. Hollowell, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 600) thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15692) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 601) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15987) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, which was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5875) granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad, and for telephone, telegraph, and electric-transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation in the State of Washington, and repealing an act entitled "An act granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad, and for telephone, telegraph, and electric-transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation in the State of Washington," approved August 9, 1912; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENSON:

A bill (S. 5876) to remove the charge of desertion on the first enlistment of Samuel Spencer Carr; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5877) granting an increase of pension to Frank Knitter (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5878) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Mitchell (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5879) granting an increase of pension to Paul Phillips (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 5880) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Terre Haute, in the county of Vigo, State of Indiana, three condemned bronze or brass field-pieces, with their carriages; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 5881) providing for the refund of duties collected on flax-preparatory machines, parts, and accessories, such as described in the act of Congress approved February 7, 1913, imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5882) granting an increase of pension to William R. Stevens (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5883) granting a pension to Anna B. Ross (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5884) amending an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," by reducing mileage from 20 cents to 5 cents per mile.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes the bill should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Unless there is objection, it will be so referred.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not understand to which committee the Chair referred the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Chair thought that committee was more appropriate, but the bill can be referred to any committee the Senator may desire.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sees no reason for referring the bill to the Judiciary Committee; but if the Senator moves that the bill be referred to that committee or to the Committee on Appropriations, the question will be put.

Mr. SMOOT. The subject matter is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill does not propose to appropriate any money, but simply to fix the rate of mileage.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KENYON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the bill introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill proposes to reduce the mileage of Members of Congress from 20 cents to 5 cents per mile. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. On that question the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." I so record myself. I vote "yea."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While I have in one sense a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I have quite a full understanding with him as to the measures to which he wishes the pair to apply. On ordinary measures of this kind he expressed the desire that I should act as I saw fit, without regard to the pair, and he will exercise the same discretion on his part in my absence. I am sure it would be his pleasure for me to vote in this instance, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I will withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Borah	Dillingham	Nelson	White
Bristow	Johnson	Reed

So the Senate refused to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. I object. I understood the Chair to say that the bill would be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is where the Chair thinks it would appropriately go.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If the motion of the Senator from Utah is defeated, will this bill not then go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections without motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumes that would be the effect of defeating the pending motion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand seconded? [A pause.] The matter is so doubtful that the Chair will give the Senator the benefit of the doubt, and direct the Secretary to call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the affirmative). I should have stated when I voted what I now desire to state, that I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON. Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because of my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who has not voted, and withhold my vote.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bankhead	Johnson	Shively	Thornton
Bristow	McCumber	Simmons	Tillman
Burton	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	West

So the Senate refused to refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the Chair will refer the bill to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where the Chair has already indicated that it should be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion is necessary for that purpose. That reference has been made.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

PROPOSED RULE RELATIVE TO POINTS OF ORDER.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 397) was read, as follows:
